BIBLE LESSONS ON FIRST PRINCIPLES

The editor of "The Restitution" is now preparing for publication a series of Bible lessons designed to explain every essential feature of gospel truth. Two lessons of the series have just been published entitled respectively, "Introduction" and "The Word of God in Threefold Aspect." Valuable for conducting Bible studies and classes and for giving Berean lessons, as well as for individual study. Written primarily to teach the elemental principles of the gospel to candidates for baptism. Three cents for one copy; twenty-five cents the dozen.

"Denying the Faith"

A sermon. Both doctrinal and practical. 20 pages; one copy 5 cents; 40 cents per dozen.

"The Death of Christ"

A doctrinal sermon, setting forth scripturally the reality of Christ's death. 3 cents each, or 12 for 25 cents.

"Paradise Lost; Paradise Regained"

A sermon in which every text in the Bible where paradise occurs, either in the English or original tongue, is quoted and explained. 5 cents each; 12 for 40 cents.

"The Bible: Its Principles and Texts"

As indicated by its title, this book is divided into three sections: The first consists of a disquisition on "The Bible;" the second simplifies its "Principles" in formulated propositions; and the third expounds in a homiletic manner particular "Texts." As an Editor, the Author has untied many knotty questions submitted to him by readers; more than a hundred and fifteen are considered in this volume. $1.10 the copy.

A PAPER REPRESENTING THE CHURCH OF GOD, AND DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF "THE THINGS CONCERNING THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND THE NAME OF JESUS CHRIST" (ACTS 8:12)

VOLUME 69 CLEVELAND, O, OCTOBER 2, 1917 NUMBER 37

THE LORD IS MY GUIDE

God's promises oft have been told,
  By holy men in days of old;
His word's a lamp unto my feet,
  His counsel is both drink and meat.

His sheltering hand shall guide my way,
  Through sunshine and the cloudy day;
Though foes assail, and friends forget,
  He's faithful, and I'll trust him yet.

Yes, I'll praise him for his grace,
  And run with hope the heavenly race:
Till he shall come and call us home,
  No more in sinful paths to roam.

Should ease be mine, I'll praise him yet.
  Should sorrow come, I will not fret;
What e'er betide, he'll streagthen me;
  At last in peace, his face I'll see

TWO EXTREMES REFUTED

NO. 16

We are told that "when the time comes to convert the world, Christ or the Christ-body will appear: for I understand that is the work of the millennial age." The word "world" as here used would be rather indefinite were it not for the fact that our critic says, "God is not now trying to convert the world," thus using the word for the present evil world. So it is this present evil world that he thinks will be converted in the age to come in contradistinction to the fact that John declares it shall pass away with its lusts, and only those of this day who do the will of God are to abide forever (1 John 2:17). That the word "world" here stands for people is evident from the fact that it has lusts to go with it in its passing. Then when our critic talks of the conversion of the world he should tell us not of this present evil world from which Christ died to deliver his people (Gal. 1:4), and chastens them that they may not be condemned with it (1 Cor. 11: 32). For surely that which is condemned to pass away will never be converted to holiness; but the world to come will be put in subjection to Jesus the Christ (Heb 2: 5-8).

Our critic continues: "As we read in Isaiah 25: 7, 8, "He will destroy in this mountain the face of the covering cast over all nations, and the veil that is spread over all people. He will swallow up death in victory; and the Lord will wipe tears from off all faces; and the rebuke of his people shall he take away from off the earth: for the Lord hath spoken it. And it shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation.'" When does this time come? When death is swallowed up in victory. When is that? Let an inspired writer explain: "So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then (notice then) shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory" (1 Cor. 15:54). When is that? "Behold I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump: for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed" (vs. 52). Then it is at the resurrection of the dead who are raised incorruptible that death is swallowed up in victory, and as this is at the coming of Christ this scene must occur at that time, or at least near then. But when Christ comes to give reward to his servants he destroys those who destroy the earth (Rev. 11:18). And when destruction has been consummated, their carcasses, to those who worship before the Lord are visible; and this is positive proof that the wicked will not participate in this feast of fat things (vs. 6; Isa. 66:24). When the wicked see the righteous in the kingdom they weep, wail, and gnash their teeth (Matt. 8:12; Luke 3:28). "They gnash with their teeth, and melt away" (Psa. 112:10). Hence are not preserved to have tears wiped from their faces. "Let favor be shown to the wicked, yet will he not learn righteousness: in the land of uprightness will he deal unjustly, and will not behold the majesty of the Lord" (Isa. 26:10). Then it would be detrimental to the wicked to make a feast of fat things for them, and God will not do it.

As we have seen how the term "all" is often used in the Bible, we will only make one comparison here. "God will wipe away tears from off all faces." "All flesh come to worship before me." "They (the carcasses of the wicked) shall be an abhoring unto all flesh." Here the wicked are not considered as being a portion of "all flesh" after their being killed in the second death, and hence Isaiah does not include them in the "all people" of the text under consideration; and he could not include those who are not to arise from death, and that leaves the ignorant and depraved unredeemed, and makes him harmonious with the rest of the Bible.

We are told Jeremiah says, "Man will not say to his neighbor know the Lord: for they shall all know him from the least to the greatest." This dear good critic tells us he has studied the Bible many years but he, like the rest of us, must have overlooked some things in his studies or he would not have quoted Jeremiah as he has, or he is presuming upon our ignorance, and thinks as he is an old student we will take his quotation unquestioned; but as we happen to know the quotation we will first set him right on that and the difficulty will be solved, and the text cleared from teaching his universal theory. "Behold the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with (not man, but) the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah: not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt; which my covenant they brake, although I was an husband unto them, saith the Lord. But this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel: after those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and will be their God, and they shall be my people. And they (Israel and Judah) shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more."

The reader can easily see the difference between the terms "man" and "the house of Israel." Man could be used in general, and include the whole of humanity, but Israel could only represent a definite people. Even here are conditions, and the aggregate of Israel are not alluded to: for Ezekiel says, before Israel is brought in the bond of the covenant the rebels are purged out from among them, and that would leave only a people whom the Lord could forgive, and those who are a forgiven people, hence need no teaching that they may know the Lord: they learned of him when he made the covenant with them. If "man" were the term here used he would have his sins forgiven,and universalism would be complete. It is wonderful to what lengths men will go to establish a false theory when once they have fallen in love with it. Jesus was a law giver, and he must lay down the law to the people of the dispensation he taught, and if there is a reward for obedience to said law the condition by which it may be obtained must be stated definitely. Now Jesus said much about a kingdom, and told the little crowd that followed him that it was the pleasure of his Father to give it unto them. But now for the conditions:

1. One must be born again (John 3:1-5).
2. His righteousness must exceed that of the scribes and pharisees (Matt. 5:20).
3. He must do God's will (Matt. 7:21,22).
4. Must labor (Col. 4:7-11).
5. Must continue in the faith (Acts 14:21,22).
6. Go through much tribulation (Acts 14:21, 22).
7. Be delivered from every evil work, and preserved (2 Tim. 4:18).
8. Must cultivate the Christian graces (2 Pet. 1:5-11).
9. Make his calling and election sure (2 Pet. 1:10,11).
10. Pass and be approved in the judgment (Matt. 25:31-34).
11. Be changed in nature (1 Cor. 15:50).

Either those eleven conditions are a law to the people of today, or they are not. If not, then we have no conditions of admission into the kingdom for the Christian dispensation, and it leaves an uncertainty to the Christian, and makes Jesus and his disciples preach a kingdom while they give no law by which we may enjoy it. If these are conditions, then what will become of those who do not comply with them? Have they any promise of admission? If they do, then the conditions are not conditions, and are merely idle words. If I teach a man that it is necessary to be born again if he wishes to enter into the kingdom of God, am I leading him astray? If I tell him he must be more righteous than the wicked scribes and pharisees if he would enter, am I teaching heresy? If I tell him he must do the will of God if he would enter the kingdom, am I telling a falsehood? If I admonish him to continue in the faith in order that we might enter, am I repeating an idle tale? If I admonish him to add the seven graces to his faith, am I giving him a fable? And if I warn him to make his calling and election sure, am I repeating old fogyism? But suppose I step up to a person and say: "I am teaching the gospel now to you, but this is not the last chance, and I assure you that there will be given you another opportunity in the day when it will be more pleasant to serve the Lord, and righteousness will be the rule with the people instead of the exception," would he not reasonably await the latter opportunity? If he happened to be a Bible reader might he not retort: "Except a man be born of water, and the spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God; and here you say heathen, idiots, infidels, and even rejecters of the truth, will enter!" How could I answer him? How would our critic answer? "If any man speak let him speak as the oracles of God."

IS CONDITIONAL IMMORTALITY SCRIPTURAL?

None of God's Children Shall be Lost

We hear a great deal now-a-days about universal salvation. It seems to be the concensus of opinion that all good people (i. e., what the world calls good) will be saved, and as God is a God of love it is out of harmony with the Scriptures that any of God's children should be lost. We must admit this sounds reasonable from the worldly point of view; but the question is, Who are the good ones, and who are God's children? There are different answers given to this question, so let us go "to the law and the testimony" and see what light it will throw on this subject. We do not wish to ride rough-shod over other peoples' opinions and beliefs, and so according to Isa. 1:18 "Come now, and let us reason together," and see what the Scripture teaches.

None Are God's Children by Nature

When Jesus was addressed by the young man as "Good Master," he was rebuked by Christ in these words: "Why callest thou me good? there is none good but one, that is God" (Matt. 19:17). This certainly does not give us much chance of posing as a good person, if Christ repudiated the allegation. Again we are told: "But we are all as an unclean thing, and all our righteousnesses are as filthy rags; and we all do fade as a leaf, and our iniquities like the wind, have taken us away" (Isa. 64:6). This proves that man cannot claim to be good, especially when we read, "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked: who can know it" (Jer. 17:9). How will the good people we hear talked about harmonize their attributes with these Scriptures?

Perfection is Completeness

But I think I hear someone ask, "What about Christ's admonition to be therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect (Matt. 5:48) ?" And having fired this apparently unanswerable evidence at you they sit back with grim satisfaction. But let us analyze this text. In the first place, Christ cannot contradict himself; and it is absolutely ridiculuous to suppose that he told his disciples to be what he did not profess to be himself. In this fifth chapter of Matthew, Jesus is laying down certain rules or laws that should govern our actions, and by following his sayings we are bringing ourselves into a condition that will make us acceptable to God. If we, as his children by adoption live in accordance with his laws, our only desire is to serve him; and if we strive to serve him and keep from worldly things, we can by diligence have a perfect or complete desire for God, and that is what Christ is referring to. The word "perfect" in this text is translated from the Greek word teleos, the meaning of which, according to Liddell and Scott, is "complete" or "at last." So Christ was admonishing us to be complete in our faith and service to God, which he was himself, and that is not the same as being classed as good. Paul had this same thought of being complete in mind when he told Timothy that "All Scripture was given by inspiration of God . . . . that the man of God may be perfect (complete) thoroughly furnished unto all good works" (2 Tim. 3:16,17). The world's idea of being good is all a fallacy. It is evident David did not believe in the goodness of man when he said: "There is none that doeth good, no, not one" (Psa. 14:3). Paul repeats this passage in Rom. 3: 12. Now as we find that there are "none good," according to God's standard, what is the use of trying to maintain a false position, for it is evident that this professed goodness which men claim cannot save us, for if there is "no goodness" there is "no salvation."

Conditions of Brotherhood and Fatherhood

Now that we have found out that there are no good people, according to God's way of reckoning, let us see if we can find out what becomes of the common every-day sinner, whom the univesalists say cannot be lost as God is love and will not destroy his own children. In the first place, what constitutes a child of God? Paul in addressing the brethren of Galatia said: "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Jesus Christ" (Gal. 3: 26). And to the Romans he said. "For as many as are led by the spirit of God, they are the children of God" (Rom. 8:16). Now I ask, Can any man or woman who is immersed in the world's business and pleasures, confidently claim that they are led by the spirit of God? They may be very desirable people to know and very active in charitable and good works in general, but are they led by the spirit of God? It is impossible to be led by the spirit if we do not have or know the spirit. Paul says, speaking to the believers in Rome, "But ye have received the spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba Father" (Rom. 8:15). Therefore as only those who are "led by the spirit" are the children of God, it appears he has not as many children in the world as many people suppose, for the majority of people do not know God or even want to know him, consequently they are not his children, but the children of wrath.

Conditional Immortality

Paul tells us, speaking to the brethren as to their condition before they believed: "Among whom also we had our conversation in times past, in the lusts of our flesh, fulfilling the desires of the flesh and of the mind, and were by nature the children of wrath, even as others" (Eph. 2:3). And so the doctrine that God will not destroy his own children is correct, but the mistake people make is that they class everyone as God's children. The fact of being a human being does not of itself make us a child of God; we have to obtain that relationship by an understanding of God's plans and promises, and by belief and obedience of his commands. Therefore it is perfectly clear that there are conditions that must be fulfilled by us if we are to obtain immortality, hence the term "Conditional Immortality" is Scriptural.

Destruction Harmonized With God's Love

Now the question arises, How can we harmonize a God of love with a God of destruction? In the first place, who is the cause of this destruction? Let us take as an illustration the case of a man who commits a deliberate murder in the state of Ohio. He is tried before his fellow-men and found guilty, and condemned to death; his death means his destruction. Now who is responsible for his destruction; the jury, the judge, or the executioner? Why, none of these; the murderer is responsible for the loss of his own life. If he had not committed the crime there would have been no suggestion from any one of taking his life from him. The man has simply broken the laws of the land he lives in. He knew before he committed the crime that the punishment for murder was death, and if he tried to excuse himself on the plea of ignorance of the law, that would not help him, because he is supposed to know the laws of the land he lives in. Consequently there is no objection raised to this man's punishment because he brought it on himself. Very well, listen then: "For this commandment which I commanded thee this day, it is not hidden from thee, neither is it far off . . . . But the word is very nigh unto thee, in thy mouth, and in thy heart, that thou mayst do it. See I have set before thee this day life and good, and death and evil" (Deut. 30:11,14,15). Here we find God has made his laws perfectly clear to his chosen people and set before them life and good, or the alternative, death and evil. Now this leaves it entirely in the hands of man what his future shall be. He is a free agent, and can either obey or disobey, so if he chooses to disobey it simply shows that he ignores God and prefers death to life. You cannot blame his destruction on any one but himself; and if our universalist friends put in the plea that he did not know God's law, that is no more an excuse than it was for the murderer. If you want to escape punishment in this life you you must obey the laws of your country: if you you want to escape punishment in this life must obey God's laws. They are free to any one who want to know them. Ignorance is no excuse in either case.

Therefore after looking into this subject carefully we find that God is a God of love, as is claimed by our orthodox friends, and that man brings destruction upon himself. If God's punishment was eternal torment, like Billy Sunday preaches, then we might have cause for complaint, but instead of that the punishment meted out to the wicked is one that only a wise God of love, justice and mercy could conceive. For instance, how can we miss anything that we have never possessed? Personally I have never been the possessor of great wealth, have never had a palatial home surrounded with all the luxuries that money can buy. Consequently as I have never had these things I do not miss them; but if I had at one time been wealthy and had become poor, then I should feel the loss of wealth terribly. It is the same with life and death. If we know and can realise that it is in our power to "lay hold on eternal life," and understand where and under what conditions it will be surrounded, then it would be a terrible punishment to know we could not have it; but if we never knew anything about it; how could we miss it? The majority of people do not understand anything definite about a future life: they have a vague idea there is one, but what it is they cannot explain. We often hear the remark after a person has died, that they are better off and at rest from all sufferings. They admit that death is a happy release even if the person dead has died out of Christ. Yet in the same breath they will claim that God is a God of love and will not destroy, while they are actually looking on God's work of destruction, viz., the dead person in question.

When we come to understand the Scriptures we find that death is the most merciful and all-wise punishment that God could have devised. "The wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord" (Rom. 6:23). Speaking about the wicked Paul says, "Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power" (2 Thes. 1:9). Therefore as eternal life is everlasting conscious existence, so death, as the antithesis, is everlasting unconscious non-existence. Now what pain can be experienced in non-existence? None; so we prove conclusively that God is a God of love and mercy and justice by the fact that his laws cause the disobedient to remain dead for ever, instead of consigning them to everlasting torment, as is still preached by many churches. It is these false doctrines that make God's laws appear unreasonable, therefore let us seek truth and light, and always bear in mind that "the Lord is righteous in all his ways, and holy in all his works" (Psa. 145:17).

GOD'S PURPOSE COMPLETED AND THE EARTH FILLED WITH HIS GLORY

Article 7

All things have a beginning and an ending, so it is with Jehovah's purpose in regard to the earth and man. Man was created to possess the earth and beautify it. The earth was to have a divine ruler and was to be filled with a righteous race. Disobedience to the law under which man was placed brought sin into the world, and up to this time it has been the ruling power. God has checked it at times that sin might not gain the victory. There is a time not far in the future when sin will not only be checked but forever destroyed. The race will not only be redeemed but the earth restored to its former condition, when sin did not exist. The curse will then be removed. Thorns and thistles will not exist. The earth will yield its increase, pestilence and war will have no place in the restored earth. No inhabitant can then say, "I am sick." What a glorious future there is in store for this sin-cursed earth! What enjoyment will exist when man has been immortalized and given a place as one of the rulers in the kingdom of God!

The mistaken idea of men, that the earth will be destroyed, will then be corrected. Hear the prophet's word regarding the future of the earth. In speaking of the future of Israel the prophet says, "Israel shall be saved in the Lord with an everlasting salvation." Then he speaks of the existence of the earth: "For thus saith the Lord that created the heavens; God himself that formed the earth and made it: he hath established it, he created it not in vain, he formed it to be inhabited" (Isa. 45:12-18). The wise man has written: "One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh: but the earth abideth forever" (Eccl. 1:4). Again we read: "Thy faithfulness is unto all generations: thou hast established the earth, and it abideth."

This grand idea is carried forward in the New Testament. Jesus himself declared, "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." The apostle Peter, after having been informed of the terrible things that would come upon the earth declared: "Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for a new heaven and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." Every prophet's vision permitted him to see far enough into the future to behold the restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began. John saw the old earth condition pass away and the new condition established. He says, "Behold I will make all things new." God himself will be there and be their God. "There shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away. There shall be no more curse, but the throne of God and the Lamb shall be in it, and his servants shall serve him." Well might Paul break out in eloquence and write: "As it is written, Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him" (1 Cor. 2:9). Again we glean from the same writer: "He hath raised us up together, and made us sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus: that in the ages to come he might show the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness towards us through Christ Jesus." These are some of the things with which the apostle was impressed when caught away and saw the new heaven and its conditions.

In further consideration of the beauties of the future and the blessings received by the righteous we may quote from John in Revelation: "He showed me a pure river of water of life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the throne of God and the Lamb. In the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the river, was there the tree of life, which bare twelve manner of fruits, and yielding her fruit every month: and the leaves of the tree were for the healing of the nations." Jesus says: "Behold. I come quickly: blessed is he that keepeth the sayings of the prophecy of this book." The apostle says, "I John saw these things and heard them." Reader, have you stopped long enough to contemplate the meaning of all these Scriptures? In your search for the wealth and honor of this life, will it not pay you to devote some time to the investigation of the many proofs given? It is no idle dream, neither is it cunningly devised fables when we declare the coming and the power of the Lord Jesus Christ. We find all along the way from creation to the closing scene in Jehovah's dealings with the race, well defined waymarks. When Moses had led the children of Israel to the border of the land promised to Abraham and his seed they refused to enter and possess it. Then the Lord decided to destroy them.

The prayer of Moses prevailed, and the rebellious subjects were saved. In his trials he was informed that "as truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord." The prophet Isaiah was permitted to enjoy the same scene: "They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." One more testimony is given in proof and then we shall close. The prophet Habakkuk, like Isaiah has written, "The earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea." To enjoy these things Jehovah has promised to give to the people of the saints of the Most High the kingdom, the dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heavens. Let all the saints rejoice.

"We Stand for Unity, Truth, and Righteousness."

Bereans:

We have just received word that our National Editor has been very sick for more than a month. We are glad to say that she is on the mend, and is now able to go down to business an hour a day. The reports of conference and other business will appear as soon as she is strong enough to give attention to this work.

DON'T FORGET THE HELPING FUND

We whose names are given below, believing it to be our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the manager of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. Those whose circumstance do not permit of the paying for the paper themselves should notify the manager, signifying their willingness to accept the paper, and it will be cheerfully sent from the proceeds of this fund.

fire, and brimstone. . . . . . The pestilence shall consume their flesh while they stand upon their feet, their eyes in their holes, and their tongues in their mouth. A great tumult from the Lord shall be among them, so that each will fight against his neighbor. The beasts shall suffer the same, and in their madness trample down and destroy. Judah also shall fight (Ezek. 38; 39; Zech. 14).

This battle is the beginning of the war of Armageddon, which continues until the nations shall have been conquered, and the time for the marriage of the Lamb has come (Rev. 19). The Jews occupying the land when Gog descends upon them is only a preliminary gathering. During the Armageddon war they will gather from among the nations with their faces Zionward, and become one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel, and one King shall be King to them all; and they shall become the head (nation), and not the tail. From thenceforth righteousness will prevail, and all nations be blessed in him (1).

Remarks

The month of August was a busy month. On the second we were met at Wray, Colo., by Sister Minnie Rogers and family and driven to their home sixty-five miles south, where we continued till the eleventh. Sister Rogers has been calling for help for two years and every attempt to get there has been fraught with failure till now. The interest was good after the first few evenings when people began to see the point. At the conclusion of the meeting we helped four put on Christ. Ernest Rogers and Blanche Smith, son and daughter of Sister Rogers. The most remarkable part of this work is that they are the fourth generation I have baptized in that family. Back quite a number of years ago at St. Paul, Neb., I baptized Sister Starkweather, later Mrs. Julia Keeney, her daughter; still later, Mrs. Minnie Rogers, daughter of Sister Keeney; and now Ernest and Blanche, her son and daughter, daughter and grand-daughter and great-grand-daughter. And now there is Gladys Julia Smith, great-great-grand-daughter. But I expect the Lord to be here before she is old enough to be baptized. A Mrs. Wood heeded the call and put on Christ. Much credit is due Sister Rogers for her earnest work in getting the truth to her neighbors. They are calling for another meeting, which we are going to give soon, the Lord willing.

Ernest drove us again to Wray where we entrained for Laird, Colo., began meeting Sunday evening and continued till Thursday. On the 15th we went to a suitable place and helped twelve put on Christ; the next day two more. Most all of them are young people, they are very much in earnest and have started a Sunday School, and I have promised to go back soon.

Bidding them good-by with a promise to soon return, the Lord willing, we departed for Stratton, Neb., where Brother Hargleroad met us and drove us to his home. Here we always feel as much at home as under our own roof. In the evening we went to the City Hall where we gave a lecture on the great war, and now we are to respond to a call for a meeting there. After spending the following day with this hospitable family, I left for Cambridge to put on the finishing touches of the conference arrangements. Here we put in one of the most busy weeks of our career.

Now, dear brethren, this is our twelfth report for the year, and closes the year's work. The results are in the hands of God. We have tried to be faithful to the truth and earnest in its presentation. Sixty-six have been added to the body, and I can say the quality has been very good: we might say without reservation, splendid. My prayer is that all these shall be accounted worthy. Now let us watch and pray that we may escape these things that are coming on the earth. We are now entering on a new year's work, and calls are in for several months. During August a man and wife came from Mossouri to Omaha to be baptized but I was away and they had to return without immersion. Now I am to go to their home and do the work. Five more are calling for baptism at another point, and I am hurrying there, so the work is plenty. Pray the Lord that we may be able to heed the calls.

Almus Adams.

THE CANDLE OF THE WICKED PUT OUT

The Value of Alternative Readings

Before the war I had a large Bible-class of young men, most of whom are now at the front. I am anxious to expound to the remaining ones the words: "The candle of the wicked shall be put out" (Prov. 24:20). I have searched commentaries, but none give it, and I wondered if you could deal with it in your column.—Lay Preacher.

Answer by David Smith

The best commentary on Scripture is the Scripture itself. It frequently illuminates a passage when another passage is laid beside it; and the passage which connects itself in my mind with this of yours is Prov. 4:18: "The path of the just is as the shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." Of course our English Bible is merely a translation, and one who is unacquainted with the original misses much. His best remedy here is to compare both our versions and pay heed to the reviser's marginal notes, which frequently contain instructive suggestions. See what you find there in connection with these companion passages. In the former the margin gives as an alternative to "the shining light" the rendering "the light of dawn;" and, indeed, this is the true rendering, and ought to stand in the text. The idea is that the life of the righteous is like the day; the light breaks dimly, but it deepens and broadens until it attains the full radiance of the glorious noon-tide. This is his comfort. He may be compassed with shadows, but he knows that they will disperse; the clouds will lift, and by and by he will see the blue sky and the light of God's face. And with that prospect he can be of good cheer in this dimly-lighted world.

Now turn to the other passage. For "candle" the revisers give "lamp;" but the real puzzle is the word "reward" in the earlier half of the verse. Here the marginal note is "See chapter 25:18;" and when you turn thither you learn that the word there rendered "end" is the same which is rendered here "reward." And the margin explains that the Hebrew word is literally "latter end," and suggest two alternative renderings. "sequel" and "future." The latter is the proper rendering; and thus the verse should be read: "There will be no future to the evil man; the lamp of the wicked shall be put out," in contrast to the experience of the righteous man, whose path is "as the light of dawn, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." This truth has two practical applications.

1. The light of a man's heart is what he sets his heart on and finds his gladness in. A worldly man is one who sets his heart on worldly things and finds in these his gladness. They are not necessarily evil things, indeed they seldom are, for this is God's world, and all its things are good and beautiful. But their defect is that they are all transitory. When we pass from the world we must leave them behind us; and if they have been our only gladness, then death is indeed a "putting out of our light." You have an example in our Lord's parable of the rich fool (Luke 12:15-21). He was not a wicked man. He was rich, but that was all to his credit; for he had made his wealth by honest industry. His fault was that he had set his heart on his wealth and left God out of his reckoning. Suddenly death intervened, and all his treasures slipped from his grasp, and he was left naked and empty. The value in worldly things lies in the use we make of them. The eternal possessions are love and purity; and it is only as we acquire these by the discipline of life that we are truly rich. Otherwise all our striving is a tragic futility.

2. It seems to me more and more that the supreme good is the prospect of reunion in the hereafter. The dearest and sweetest thing in life is human affection, and it would be, to my mind an unspeakably awful calamity if death were the end of it, if we parted to meet no more.

FLARING UP

Some people are given to flaring up. They hear of something which a friend has said at which they are greatly offended, and immediately "flare up" and begin to say all manner of unkind and uncourteous things, and nourish and cherish a very unhappy and unchristian spirit until, upon explanation, it turns out that they have been misinformed, and that their friends had said no such thing as they suppose, and consequently their flaring up, with all the trouble which it may have made, has been for nothing.

A man feels himself slighted or neglected, he flares up and makes himself ridiculous, only to learn at last that the whole grievance over which he has made himself so uncomfortable, was a simple oversight, or existed only in his own jealous imagination. An employer flares up at the disobedience or neglect of an employee, and after having exhibited his petulance, impatience and unreasonableness, learns at last that his reproofs have been misapplied, and that no blame whatever attaches to the persons on whom he has visited his wrath, and that if he intends to be an upright and Christian man he owes a most humble apology to those he has grieved and wronged. The employee flares up at some fancied oversight, or neglect, or apparent injustice on the part of the employer; he growls in secret and grumbles in public, looks sour and cross, neglects his duties, is impatient and perverse, and frequently utters loud complaints, spreading discontent and making trouble; and at length when he comes to state his grievances to his employer as he should have done at first, often finds himself misinformed, and learns that circumstances are entirely different from his understanding of them, and that the man whom he has so grievously abused in though and in word, is quite as anxious to do justice as he is to have it done; that some of his grievances were imaginery, and that others would have been gladly redressed, had the employer been informed of them. Christians flare up at each other; ministers find fault with people, and people find fault with preachers; bitter thought are cherished and bitter words are said, when a few moments plain-hearted talk and honest dealing would end the whole and save all trouble.

Our advice is, Do not flare up. Keep cool, quiet and patient. If thy brother trespass against thee go and tell him his fault; right all wrongs as far as practicable, but whatever you do, do not flare up.—H. L. Hastings.

LIFE AND DEATH

Life, as a vitalizing element, was given to man, producing a vitalized state also called life—hence, we have life as a producer and life as a product; and this vitalizing element, like the mainspring of a watch, makes use of the breath of air to help feed the system, and to eliminate detrimental matter by inhalation and exhalation about 800 times per hour—the breath of air thus leaving and returning to man constantly, while the "breath of life" never leaves him until death; for the body without the spirit is dead. So says James. And this spirit is the breath of life. This primitive life as the mainspring of the human and animal organism, however, is not an organism itself, but its vitalizer. This remains until death, while the breath of air, always inhaled and exhaled, is constantly leaving, and no more leaves at death than at every day of life; but "the breath of life," critically rendered "spirit of life," is the spirit that returns to God at the death of the body—not as a personality, but as an element called "the breath of the Almighty." So God is the giver both of "the breath of life" and of the breath of air, in agreement with the statement, "He giveth to all life and breath." Let not the two be confounded. —Wm. Sheldon.

What A Friend We Have In Jesus

By H. Bonar.

What a friend we have in Jesus,
  All our sin and griefs to bear!
What a priv'lege to carry
  Everything to God in prayer!
O what peace we often forfeit,
  O what needless pain we bear,
All because we do not carry
  Everything to God in prayer.

Have we trials and temptations?
  Is there trouble anywhere?
We should never be discouraged,
  Take it to the Lord in prayer.
Can we find a friend so faithful
  Who will all our sorrows share?
Jesus knows our every weakness,
  Take it to the Lord in prayer.

Are we weak and heavy laden,
  Cumbered with a load of care?
Precious Savior, still our refuge,
  Take it to the Lord in prayer.
Do thy friends despise, forsake thee?
  Take it to the Lord in prayer;
In his arms he'll take and shield thee,
  Thou wilt find a solace there.

A Prayer From The Heart

Some years ago Dr. Adamson published a book on "Scotch Character." "In the desire that it may deepen the faith, inspire hope and courage, and promote Christian activity:" and with the same high desire we will take the liberty of reproducing one of his little stories which, though a trifle amusing, is also so instructive as well as touching, that we feel it has a place here.

"Too often prayer," writes Dr. Adamson, "meant that a set of words were almost always employed, no matter what were the wants that were to be presented to the ear of our heavenly Father. The late Dr. James Hamilton had a capital illustration of how general prayers and oblique sermons fail to satisfy the heart-yearnings in the emergencies of life. A Scotchman who had but one prayer was asked by his wife to pray at the bedside of their dying child. The good man struck out on the old track, and soon came to the usual petition for the Jews. As he went on with the time-honored quotation, "Lord, turn again the captivity of Zion," his wife broke in saying, "Eh! man, ye're aye drawn out for the Jews, but its our bairn tha's deeing." Then clasping her hands, she cried, "Lord, help us, or give us back our darling, if it be thy holy will; and if he is to be taken, may he have thy peace: Amen." Then Dr. Adamson adds, "That woman knew how to pray, which was more than her husband did. An 'oblique sermon' is not a prayer; an audible meditation or a doctrinal dissertation is not a prayer; telling the Lord a hundred things he knows better than we do is not a prayer. If persons who lead in prayer had as vivid a conception of what they want, and as earnest a desire to get it, as this poor woman, would there be as many complaints about long prayers as we hear?"

"Talk not of wasted affection—
    Affection is never wasted.
If it enrich not the heart of another
    Its waters returning
Back to their springs, like the rain,
    Shall fill them full of refreshment—
That which the fountain sends forth
    Returns again to the fountain."

Prayer

Genesis 28:20-22

O God of Bethel! by whose hand
  Thy people still are fed,
Who through this weary pilgrimage
  Hath all thy people led.

Our vows, our prayers, we now present
  Before thy throne of grace;
God of our fathers! be the God
  Of their succeeding race.

Through each perplexing path of life
  Our wandering footsteps guide;
Give us each day our daily bread,
  And raiment fit provide.

O spread thy covering wings around,
  Till all our wanderings cease,
And in our Father's loved abode
  May we arrive in peace.

Such blessings from thy gracious hand
  Our humble prayers implore,
And thou shalt be our chosen God,
  And portion ever more.

Prayer

Prayer is never made in vain; and no man lives the life of prayer uncertain of its certainty. Not this answer to this prayer, nor that answer to that, shall convince you; but the result of time and trial.

Prayer is sacrifice, and though that answer that you look for may never come, no sacrifice is offered vainly. Not all the incense smoke goes upward. It descends on the man who carries the burning censer of prayer; it enwraps him; the cloud rises between him and the wild, rude world; and the influence comes upon him for soothing and for calm. There is an ecstacy of prayer in mercy granted; is comes swiftly; it stays fitfully. There is a hallowed calm of prayer denied; it comes slowly; after long wrestling, after sore strife; but it departs not at all. "He hath done all things well." So we see; so we learn to rest, assured that what he does must be always well.—Miss Linskill.

Two Short Prayers by Jesus

Asking forgiveness for his murderers:

"Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do" (Luke 23:34).

Asking strength before his crucifixion:

"Father, save me from this hour; but for this cause came I unto this hour. Father, glorify thy name" (John 12:27,28).

Our Weekly Puzzle

A great many years ago an exceptionally good man lived on this earth, and the following is part of one of his prayers. Can you tell me who this good man was; for whom he prayed; and where the record of this prayer can be found?

> "I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil. They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world. Sanctify them through thy truth: thy word is truth."

BIBLE LESSONS ON FIRST PRINCIPLES

The editor of "The Restitution" is now preparing for publication a series of Bible lessons designed to explain every essential feature of gospel truth. Two lessons of the series have just been published entitled respectively, "Introduction" and "The Word of God in Threefold Aspect." Valuable for conducting Bible studies and classes and for giving Berean lessons, as well as for individual study. Written primarily to teach the elemental principles of the gospel to candidates for baptism. Three cents for one copy; twenty-five cents the dozen.

"Denying the Faith"

A sermon. Both doctrinal and practical. 20 pages; one copy 5 cents; 40 cents per dozen.

"The Death of Christ"

A doctrinal sermon, setting forth scripturally the reality of Christ's death. 3 cents each, or 12 for 25 cents.

"Paradise Lost; Paradise Regained"

A sermon in which every text in the Bible where paradise occurs, either in the English or original tongue, is quoted and explained. 5 cents each; 12 for 40 cents.

"The Bible: Its Principles and Texts"

As indicated by its title, this book is divided into three sections: The first consists of a disquisition on "The Bible;" the second simplifies its "Principles" in formulated propositions; and the third expounds in a homiletic manner particular "Texts." As an Editor, the Author has untied many knotty questions submitted to him by readers; more than a hundred and fifteen are considered in this volume. $1.10 the copy.

GLAD FRUITION

I am waiting, I am watching,
  My Savior, Lord for thee;
Soon in the dawn of splendor
  Thy glory I shall see;
Thy kingdom soon is coming,
  Yet sure it's tarried long;
Prophets proclaimed its glory
  In psalm and rapturous song.

Soon the trump shall penetrate
  The dark and dismal tomb,
When Christ shall call the righteous
  To their eternal home;
In youth immortal shall he clothe
  With life each noble frame,
Death never shall be known again
  In presence or in name.

Age no more shall blight our race,
  Tears ne'er dim the eye,
Death himself, the conqueror,
  At last in turn must die:
All nature clothed in beauty,
  Decked by a hand div'ne!
The righteous in God's presence
  Forever more shall shine.

THE MAN OF SIN

IS HE AN ATHEIST OR AN APOSTATE?

Dear Brethren, Sisters and Restitution Readers: I have been reading many good letters in the Restitution on the signs of the times and the coming of our Lord, in which I am much interested; and if our dear Editor will bear with me I will try and write a few lines on the subject.

I am fully convinced that we are living in the time of the end; but "the time of the end" is not the end itself. It is a period of time immediately preceding the close of the times of the Gentiles.

We look for a Jewish form of government in Palestine. It is a well-known fact today, that the sole object of the great world-wide Jewish Zionist organization is to bring about this restoration, and the formation of a Jewish state in Palestine. We frequently read about this project in our newspapers, and several leading governments favor such a movement. Turkey seems to be about the only hindrance, and from present indications, it does not look as though she would be able to resist anything much longer. We are certainly living in the time of the end. We must keep wide awake.

Whenever we see a Jewish state formed in Palestine, that will be a marked epoch. It will mark the commencement again of the national life of Israel. At that time Israel's time will commence to measure off the seventieth week of Daniel, and in seven years from that time, Daniel will stand in his lot and everlasting righteousness be brought in. The king over the temporary Jewish state will be antichrist. How shall we recognize him as antichrist? See 1 John 2:22: "This is the antichrist, even he that denieth the Father and the Son." The word of God, then, is authority for the statement that the coming of antichrist will be a rampant athiest; he will declare himself an unbeliever in both the Father and the Son.

Then to name some other character as being the antichrist, who is known to be an avowed believer in both the Father and the Son, although he may be an ignorant worshipper of both of them, is to lead people astray. Other Scriptures confirm the atheistical character of those coming antichrist. Dan. 8: 23,24 speak of the rise of a King of fierce countenance at a period of time when transgressors are come to the full (which time is still future), who will stand up against the prince of princes (verse 25), but he shall be broken without hand. In Dan. 9: 27 he makes a covenant with many for a week of seven years, and breaks it in the middle of the week. In Dan. 11: 36 the King shall do according to his will, and he shall exalt himself and magnify himself above even God. At what time? When transgressors are come to the full, and shall speak marvelous things against the God of gods and shall prosper until the indignation be accomplished for that which is determined shall be done. Neither shall he regard the God of his father, nor the desire of women, nor regard any God, for he shall magnify himself above all.

This event spoken of has not yet been fulfilled, and does not appear until transgressors are come to the full, and judging from the present awful wicked and corrupt condition of affairs, the cup of transgressors is near to overflowing. This atheist god recognizes no god higher than himself (who will be the little horn of Dan. 8: 9 to 12), and known as the King of fierce countenance. He will have undisputed control of affairs for the space of three and a half years, or shall prosper until the indignation be accomplished at the end of Daniel's seventieth week. The king of fierce countenance and the man of sin are the same person (2 Thess 2:3,4). "Let no man deceive you by any means, for that day shall not come except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition, who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped, so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself that he is God.

This King of fierce countenance does not refer to the pope, for the pope worships both God and the Son in an ignorant way. This king of fierce countenance refuses to either worship God or the Son, but magnifies himself above all.

And what next ? See Rev. 13:12: "And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him, and causeth the earth and them which dwell therein to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed;" vs.13: "And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men;" vs. 14: "And deceiveth them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast, saying to them that dwell on the earth, that they should make an image to the beast, which had the wound by the sword and did live;" vs. 15: "And he had power to give life unto the image of the beast, that the image of the beast should both speak and cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast, should be killed;" vs. 16: "And he causeth all, both rich and poor, small and great, free and bond,to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads;" v.17: "And that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or the name of the beast, or the number of his name." See 2 Thess. 2:9,10.Speaking of the man of sin (who is the second beast and second little horn), whose coming is according to the working of satan, with all power, and signs and lying wonders." In verses 15,16 he commands all the people to worship this image under penalty of death for disobedience to this command. It is right here a tidalwave of trouble will deluge the world from one side to the other.

The present upheaval of affairs in the world, indicates that we are even now passing through the preliminary drops of the approaching storm. As a snare shall it come upon all the world; but we as children of light should not let this day overtake us as a thief in the night.

Jas. Delozier

EDITOR'S REPLY

Brother Delozier has given the usual arguments in behalf of the idea that the man of sin is an atheist. In our sermon entitled "Denying the Faith" we give some of the evidence in proof of the historical view that he is an apostate. That the reader may have both views before him and the evidences upon which they are built, we quote the following extract from "Denying the Faith," beginning on page 11:

"The Christ and God-denying anti-Christ is a denial of apostasy, and not a denial of atheism. And to show by the Scriptures that such is the teaching of God's word, allow me to read from 1 John 2: 18, where John says the development of this anti-Christ power was out of the primitive church. His words are: 'Little children, it is the last time; and as ye have heard that anti-Christ shall come, even now are there many antichrists; whereby ye know it is the last time. They went from us, but they were not of us; for if they had been of us they would no doubt have continued with us; but they went out that they might be made manifest that they were not of us.'

I have not written unto you because ye know the truth, but because ye know it, and that no lie is of the truth. Who is a liar but he that denieth that Jesus is the Christ ? He is antichrist that denieth the Father and the Son' (vss. 21,22). Now John thinks and says that the antichrist, the denier of both God and Christ, was formed by segregation and apostasy from his own church; and it is clear from 1 John 4:1 that, instead of the antichrist being an infidel, worldly outside organization, he was a development from within the church: 'Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirit whether they are of God; because many false prophets have gone out into the world. Hereby know ye the spirit of God: Every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is of God: and this is that spirit of antichrist whereof ye have heard that it should come; and even now already it is in the world.'

"In 2 John 7th verse John says again: 'Many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. This is a deceiver and antichrist." In 2 Pet. 2:1,2 the apostle says: 'But there were false prophets also among the people, even as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction. And many shall follow their pernicious ways, by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of.' An uprising of rebellion in the bosom of the church, an apostasy from primative Christianity, brought the truth into disrepute and established the antichrist. Jude is equally clear in saying that those who deny God and Christ are furtive enemies of the truth, who abuse the favor of God by 'turning the grace of God into lasciviousness.' His declaration in the third verse is: 'Beloved, when I gave all diligence to write unto you of the common salvation, it was needful for me to write unto you, and exhort you that ye should earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints. For there are certain men crept in unawares, who were before of old ordained to this condemnation, ungodly men, turning the grace of our God into lasciviousness, and denying the only Lord God and our Lord Jesus Christ.' Then the antichrist denial of God and his Son is not an atheistical denial, but a denial of apostasy. We have an instance of such a denial in Acts 3: 13,14, where we read: 'The God of Abraham, and of Isaac, and of Jacob, the God of our fathers, hath glorified his Son Jesus; whom ye delivered up, and denied him in the presence of Pilate, when he was determined to let him go. But ye denied the Holy One and the Just.' This charge of denial was not brought against the atheists of Christ's time, but againnt the religious element of the Jews who put him to death.

"In Jeremiah 28:15 we have this declaration concerning Hananiah: 'Then said the prophet Jeremiah unto Hananiah the prophet (not an atheist, but a preacher !), Hear now, Hananiah, the Lord hath not sent thee; but thou makest this people to trust in a lie. Therefore thus saith the Lord, Behold I will cast thee from off the earth; this year thou shalt die, because thou hast taught rebellion against the Lord.' And in Jer. 29:31,32 the Lord says of Shemaiah: 'Thus said the Lord concerning Shemaiah the Nehelamite: Because that Shemaiah hath prophesied unto you, and I sent him not, and he caused you to trust in a lie; therefore thus saith the Lord: Behold I will punish Shemaiah the Nehelamite, and his seed; he shall not have a man to dwell among his people, neither shall he behold the good that I will do for my people, saith the Lord, because he hath taught rebellion against the Lord.' Rebellion against God, according to Deuteronomy 13:1,3,5, deserves capital punishment. Then, beloved, we can deny the faith by heretical belief and false teaching. Heresy is classed among the sins that exclude from the kingdom of God, and is declared to be as much a 'work of the flesh' as murder and drunkenness (Gal. 5:19-21). The counterfeit system of the papacy sprang out of the church as a result of apostasy masquerading in the robe of righteousness."

TREATISE ON HELL

The Hell of The Bible

Article I.

"Come now and let us reason together' (Isa. 1:18) on this subject, in the fear of God. As I stated in my "Treatise on The Devil," the false doctrine of a personal immortal devil has caused mankind to invent a hell where this supposed monster of the infernal regions could carry out his satanic purpose. Before entering into an investigation of this subject from a Bible standpoint, we wish to reason with you on the idea that is so often advanced, that it is necessary for men and women to believe in a literal hell, or mankind would throw off all restraint, and crime and lawlessness would increase to an alarming extent. This is not the facts in the case, as can be abundantly proven. We will find by an investigation of the subject that the stronger the belief in hell-fire has been in any age, the harder-hearted men and women have become: more inhuman and cruel in proportion as they believed in the eternal torment of the wicked, and more kind and tender-hearted as they believed in a God of love, mercy, and justice. The belief in a fiend, torturing the souls of the damned through a never ending eternity has always caused men and women to become hard-hearted, inhuman in their cruelty. At this day it is almost impossible to believe, or realize, what the past has been. We look back over the past, a little over four hundred years ago (1492), when the belief in hell-fire was almost universal, and our fair land of freedom lay an unknown world. In another land, beyond the sea, Columbus and his little band of followers started out over the unknown waters. To realize the state of things that existed then, will make us feel more thankful for the freedom that we now enjoy.

When Ferdinand and Isabella started Columbus on his perilous voyage, the inquisition had been eleven years established in Spain. As the Encyclopedia Britannica states, in Seville alone, in 1481, 298 victims were burnt, and it further states: "The Quemadero, or cremation place, built at that time by the prefect of Seville, not far from that city, a square platform of stone was a grim altar on which the lives of almost daily victims ascended in clouds of smoke to heaven."

The historian assures us that in that year (1481), fully 2,000 were burnt in a small portion of Spain. Down to 1809 they give us the figures for Spain alone: burnt alive, 31,912; burnt in effigy and imprisoned 291,450, a total of about 340, 000 down to 1809. The Encyclopedia further states: "No eminence in art or science, no purity of life could defend from its attacks. Judges continually invented new modes of torture to please themselves."

A Fearful Age

Torture in every form was inflicted on the innocent victims. Mutilation, cutting off the nose, the Scavenger's daughter, the iron gauntlets, etc.

When I visited the Tower of London in England, I saw many of those relics of a barbarous age, when the belief in hell-fire was universal, and mankind gloated in inflicting in this life, the tortures that they believed were inflicted in another world by a fiend commissioned by the Mighty God.

Such was the condition of the old world when Columbus sailed forth to find a new world. How wonderfully the goodness of God is manifested in all this. Liberty of action, liberty of speech was an unknoun term in that day. In an unknown land, across an uncharted sea was the field for man to escape from the shackles of darkness and superstition that bound them. Even after being implanted on the free soil of America, the hardened heart still lingered, and amid their prayers they could burn witches, or whip Quakers. Read the history of the deeds of cruelty committed in our land in its early settlement, and you will realize how difficult it was for them to exchange the cruel, intolerant spirit for one of love and kindness. In proportion as the idea of hell was weakened in the minds of men, they have become more tolerant, more humane, more merciful.

If it had not been for the influence that America has had on all other parts of the world, I would not have dared to preach against the eternal torment of the wicked, as I did when in England. If it were not for the liberty of thought, the liberty of speech that has been brought about by the discovery of our own fair land, we would not be enjoying the freedom, now so highly prized, of testifying to these wonderful truths. The condition of the world four hundred years ago, when mankind almost universally believed in hell-fire and eternal torment, and such horrible torture as was inflicted on the suffering thousands, and the liberty we now enjoy, when the doctrine of hell-fire is no longer believed as in those days of cruelty, should convince every one that to believe such a doctrine, only makes men and women cruel, hard-hearted, pitiless.

Kind and Law-Abiding

We have eighty-five on our boat, and not one believes in eternal torment, yet all are kind, all are gentle, all are merciful, all are forgiving, all are law-abiding. Look at the Universalists; they do not believe in eternal torment, yet where could you find among believers in eternal torment a more law-abiding people ? You know that they cannot be found. If it were true, that to not believe the terrible doctrine makes men and women lawless, then an extra force of police would be necessary to guard the Universalists, and all who have discarded the fearful doctrine. You know that this is not the case, and should discard the false idea. Look back at one of the greatest believers in eternal torment; Calvin, posing as a reformed, yet inhumanly cruel, refusing another the liberty of speech that he claimed for himself. As late as 1553 he pursued Servetus to his death. Calvin was the cause of his apprehension at Geneva. He testified against him before the judge, and consented to his death, and Servetus vainly pleading for an easier death, for no other crime than daring to teach what he believed to be truth, was burnt at the stake, October 27th, 1553.

What a terrible age ! Such horrible doctrines had so hardened the hearts of men that as the historian relates, the voice of Christendom was in favor of the hellish deed. Not only Calvin but Melancthon consented to his death, and the then religious world willingly gave consent.

Servetus was a noted doctor and a learned man for the age in which he lived; they accused him of no crime, no immoral conduct, but because he dared to teach his honest convictions, his horrid fate was to expire at the stake. Can any one, looking at the facts in the case for one moment, think that the belief in eternal torment could make men and women better ? As I said, let us reason together. Who is the best, the judge, who three or four hundred years ago, would torture the offending criminal, cause him to be torn limb from limb, burn him, or devise every means to cause a slow, lingering cruel death, or the judge of our day, who with no hatred in his heart towards the offending prisoner, only wishes to carry out the law, and does not even use the executioner's ax, or the hangman's rope, but quietly, silently, almost painlessly, sends the electric current, a swift messenger of death. Who would not thank God that there has been such a change ?

You read of the wild Indian of our land, who, tomahawk in hand, would scalp the victim of his cruelty, and force the horror-stricken mother to behold her infant torn from her fond embrace, and pinioned to a tree, its eyes put out, and quivering flesh burnt slowly to a crisp, and in your eyes he is a fiend. But do you know that you make the God of heaven a thousand fold worse fiend to believe that he would take his children, for what evil they do in the short space of life, and burn, and burn, and burn them through never ending ages ? How little pople reason. Your blood can run cold with horror at a recital of the cruelties now being perpetrated in Russia, and in Turkish provinces, but such deeds of horror would never have been committed, no heart could have become so hardened as to witness them, if mankind had not been educated to believe in the eternal torment of the wicked. And I notice the belief in hell-fire is almost universal in Russia. Such deeds of cruelty as have been committed in the old world in the last few years, would not have been tolerated in our land, as you well know. There is more mercy, more justice in our land, and as you also know, the belief in eternal torment is less universally believed in America than in any other Christian country.

What Restrains the Lawless Mob ?

It is not the fear of hell-fire that restrains the lawless element now. They are only restrained in proportion as the laws are carried out, and that is all that ever did restrain them. You might preach hell-fire loud and long, and they believe it and it would not restrain the lawless mob, nor stay the assassin's knife, as we have proven it did not restrain them when universally believed. But what does restrain them ? The law enforced every time, is all that will restrain them, an extra force of police, or the State Militia called out, is all that will restrain the lawless element, and you well know it. The man, or woman who would only do right because they believed that they would be burnt to all eternity, would not be worthy of life eternal, and will never receive it. They would not be men and women of principle. The man who only refrains from stealing your horse, or plunging the assassin's knife into your breast for fear of the prison cell, or the hangman's rope, is a man not worthy of this life, much less that life which is to come. You would know that that man, and woman, were destitute of principle and you never could make anything out of them. They will have to be restrained by the law, until in the grand consummation of all things, and Jesus returns to take the government of the world's great affairs into his own hands, all such characters will be put out of existence.--L. T. Nichols.

GOD BLESS YOU

So I breathe a charm
  Lest grief's dark night oppress you.
Then how can sorrow bring you harm
  If 'tis God's way to bless you ?
And so, not "all thy days be fair
  And shadows touch thee never,"
But this alone--God bless you, dear,
  So thou art safe forever.—Selected by Sister Hogarth.

PRAYER MEETINGS

There seems to be extremes to every question. The subject of "prayer meetings" is not an exception. We have been criticised because we would have nothing to do with meetings held by those of the nominal churches. Our prayers mixed with theirs is a mockery. The form of the prayer given by Jesus to his apostles when carefully analyzed should teach us the truth.

First, we recognize our Father in heaven and his name hallowed. The nominal churches recognize God in trinity while we are addressing our Father as the Eternal One. It seems to me that when we ask to be strengthened through an association with aliens we are somewhat overcharged with a false charity (love). We are often led astray through our emotions. As long as a people are identified with an alien class we should withhold our prayers for a better purpose.

With our views we have this statement to meet, viz., "The pastor of the church here publicly teaches the restoration of Israel, the restitution of all things and the near coming of Christ for his saints, and the establishment of his kingdom on the earth." We sustain the same relation to a church in our city, and wrote commending it for preaching this truth. In our note we enclosed our tract, "The Kingdom of God and the Covenant made with Abraham and David." The pastor's reply ignored these covenants and emphasized the doctrine of the trinity, and informed me that unless we believed that creed he could not fellowship us. We had not asked for fellowship but had complemented him on having the courage to teach the Bible doctrine of the soon-coming of Jesus. If we pursue our investigation far enough with these people we will surely come to the parting of the ways. It will not lead us to say, "Frankly I am led to think there will be many surprised when we meet our Lord in the air. Many who seem to be first will be last, and and the last first."

To me this is admitting that Jehovah's means of counting aliens righteous may be a little clastic. We are too apt to put a good moral character before God counts us righteous. We are taught to seek first God's righteousness and his kingdom, and all these things will be added (Matt. 6:33). The alien's righteousness is but filthy rags. Even after we have been counted righteous through the faith of Christ and our obedience to the gospel we have nothing whereof to boast but should rejoice. Paul said, "Rejoice. Again I say, Rejoice." It is better by far for us to meditate hourly on the promises of God than to mix our prayers with those who are aliens to the commmonwealth of Israel and strangers to the covenants of promise. Such are without Christ, having no hope, and without God in the world (Eph. 2:12).

If we desire to be strengthened there is a right way to secure it. The Psalmist says, "O how love I thy law ! it is my meditation day and night. Thou through thy commandments hath made me wiser than mine enemies. I have more understanding than all my teachers: for thy testimonies are my meditation. I understand more than the ancients, because I keep thy precepts" (Psa 119:97-100). The most effectual prayer meeting is the hours in which we alone meditate on the promises that our heavenly Father has made to his children. If we are a child of God then are we an heir of God, and a joint heir with his Son, Jesus the Christ. The proncuns "our" and "us" can in no way be used as relating to those out of Christ. Luke was particular to speak of those things which are most surely believed among "us." Peter was particular in writing to them who had obtained like precious faith with us, through the righteousness of God and our Savior Jesus the Christ. "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap." If we sow to the spirit we shall reap life everlasting. The season of refreshing can come to us only by adding our prayers to those "of like precious faith." May we do the right because it is right, is my prayer.

ANCIENT VAN

Van, which the Russians now occupy, has a romantic legend. Armenian historians attribute its foundation to Semiramis, the semi-mythical Queen of Assyria. She became enamored of Ara, King of Armenia and made war on Armenia to capture him. Ara was killed in the battle that followed: and Semiramis transferred her affection to his country and built the city of Van.

Since Prof. Sayce deciphered the local cuneiform inscriptions, we have learned that Van was really built during a Chaldean monarchy that for at least two centuries rivalled in splendous the empire of Assyria. Armenians have a proverb: Van in this world and Paradise in the next. But human perversity, aided by Turkinsh neglect and misrule has converted this heaven on earth into a plague spot.

Lake Van, on which the Russians launched a flotilla to attack the city, is the largest inland sea of Asia Minor. It is still imperfectly explored, and possesses two curious characteristics. It contains only one kind of fish, a large bleak that, when salted and dried, furnishes the bloaters or kippers of Armenia. Furthermore its waters are so strongly alkaline that the people of Van can enjoy the luxury of a bath without buying soap.

DON'T FORGET THE HELPING FUND

We whose names are given below, believing it to be our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the manager of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. Those whose circumstances do not permit of the paying for the paper themselves should notify the manager, signifying their willingness to accept the paper, and it will be cheerfully sent from the proceeds of this fund.

EDITORIAL

The world says the devil was first, then the serpent: the Bible way is first the serpent, then the devil.

Vacations are now over. We are are all back at "home, sweet home." Send us a letter at once for "Communications." This interesting and profitable department of the paper has been sadly neglected during the vacation months. God has been good to us, and the redeemed of the Lord should say so (Psa. 107: 2). Will you not gladly give your "word of testimony" (Rev. 12: 11) for his goodness and truth?

Lacking discrimination many have assumed that the word "punishment" is synonymous with "torment." Well, punishment may be torment, or it may not be—"imprisonment, fine, confiscation, exile and death," all may be punishments, and yet the person punished may not endure torment at all. On the other hand, torment is "extreme pain; anguish, the utmost degree of misery either of body or mind." Now a man may suffer all this accidently, or by disease: in such a case it cannot be properly called punishment, thought it is torment. Punishment and torment are not interchangeable terms.

Today we stand on vantage ground as to the word of God in at least one respect: we are able to point to not one, nor a few predictions of prophecy fulfilled, but to hundreds. The history of the Jews in each succeeding age attests the truth of God's prophetic word. Take some of its predictions relating modern Jewish events, and which do not admit of ambiguous interpretation, being historical facts admitted by all. God founded the Jewish theocracy and foretold, notwithstanding the intervention of so many ages, the manner of its overthrow. While Israel were nomads in the wilderness, having neither home nor city, he threatened them with the destruction of the cities he was about to give them and the devastation of the country he was leading them to. Before they had settled in Canaan he described those enemies by whom their children were to be subjugated and dispossessed; although they were to come from a very distant region, and though fifteen hundred years were to elapse first. Read Deut. 28: 49 and on.

It seems from several Scriptures that Christ is now at God's right hand, and he is there for a time only; that is, until he comes to re-establish his Father's terrestial throne in Zion, and then he will be seen by mortal man at the right hand of power in our terrene abode (Matt. 26). "I sit down (ekathisa) with my Father in his throne" are Jesus' own words in Rev. 3: 21. We ask when? because ekathisa is in the indefinite tense. Not now, certainly, for the testimony is that he is now "at the right hand of the throne of God," and so not upon it. Enikeesa and ekathisa in Rev. 3: 21 are both aorist, leaving the time of conquest and enthronement without date. From the nineteenth chapter of Revelation we learn both will be subsequent to the destruction of the Catholic and Protestant kings of the earth and their armies. Properly speaking it can no more be said of Jesus that he has "overcome" than it can be said that he is enthroned, while "the kingdoms of this world" exist and do as they will. When Christ "overcomes" the governments which are now treading his land, city, and people under foot, he will then conquer and be able to reward his joint-heirs by "giving them power over the nations" and a share with him in his throne.

COMMUNICATION

"They shall make known unto you all things which are done here" (Col. 1:9).

Brother Huggins:

Enclosed find renewal of my subscription for The Restitution. I am so glad to be able to renew them all with some changes. God is good to give me the means, and I return him grateful thanks. I appreciate The Restitution and your earnest and untiring efforts to make it a means of blessing. I pray for you every day; I could not leave your name out of my prayers. I want to constantly hold up your hands, for you have a very responsible place, and I would not for anything do anything to discourage you. I admire you for your unflinching advocacy of truth. How good the Young People's Page is! They certainly can find no fault with it now. And so many good articles for us all.

Every member of the church of God ought to double their endeavours to increase the subscripion list and its usefulness. May God be with you in your work and bless it and you for his glory.

THE PURPOSE OF REVELATION

Sermon Notes by the Editor on the Apocalypse

"To show unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass" (Rev. 1:1).

"To Show unto His Servants"

1. Who the servants of God are (vss. 1,3; Psa. 50: 16; Rom. 6; Isa. 42: 1,21; Matt. 5: 17; 7: 21; 1 Cor. 7: 23; 6: 19,20; 1 Pet. 1: 18).

"Things which Must"

1. Ha is a pronoun and may be rendered "(what) things."

2. Dei, translated "must" means "it needs, there is need of, there is necessity for" (a). The necessity may arise from a sense of

(a) Duty (Matt. 16: 21; Luke 2: 49).

(b) Right and just, what ought to be done. Dei is translated "ought" in Luke 13:14; Mark 13: 14; John 4:20; Acts 5:29; Matt. 25:27.

(c) Divine arrangement or appointment (John 3.14; Acts 4:12; 14:22).

3. There were things in addition to what had been formerly revealed which "must" now, in the divine program of appointment, be revealed (Psa. 74:10; 89:46; 90:13; 94:3; Rev. 5; 6; 10).

4. Revelation may be called a prophet, taking the place of the succession of prophets in the Jewish church. By it prophecy is continued to us, is always speaking, yet a succession of prophets is not necessary. All who have claimed to be prophets and apostles since John have been mere pretenders and liars (Psa. 74:9; Micah 5:5-8; 1 Cor. 13; Rev. 2:2).

III "Shortly Come to Pass"

1. This declaration confirms the Historic view of Revelation while it destroys the Futurist theory (vss. 1,3; 22:10; 4:1).

2. "Shortly" means "with quickness, swiftness, speed" (Robinson's Lexicon; 1 Cor. 4:19; Luke 14:21; 16:6; John 11:31; Gal. 1:6; Acts 22:18).

3. The series of events apocalypsed were soon to begin to come to pass, though the sequel would be remote (Rev. 20; 21;22).

(a) "To point out to his servants the things it is necessary to have done speedily" (Diaglott).

SUNDAY MORNING ADDRESS

Read Before the Church in Salem, Ohio

March 29, 1914

W. S. Tomlinson

"Grace be to you and peace from God our Father, and from the Lord Jesus Christ."

Beloved in the Lord: One of the things "most surely believed among us" is that a holy life is essential to salvation, after a belief in the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ. To this end we find many exhortations in the word. A very striking one is given us by the apostle Paul in the first verse of the twelfth chapter of Romans: "I beseech you, therefore brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." The expression, "I beseech you therefore." makes known to us the fact that the writer had given some reasons why we should present our bodies a living sacrifice: and looking back in the previous chapter we find that in times past they had not believed God, but now had obtained mercy. As the gifts and calling of God are without repentance, we know that God will not change his relationship towards us if we remain faithful. Therefore, if God condescends to do so much for us, we ought to present our bodies a living sacrifice in his service. Such a service is not at all out of proportion with the favor God bestows upon us. We must ever remember that God was in no wise compelled to make know his favor towards us. The apostle realized this fact when he wrote: "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us into a lively (or living) hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ." In Ephesians the first chapter we read: "Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, who hath blessed us with all spiritual blessings in the heavenlies in Christ, according as he hath chosen us in him . . . that we should be holy and without blame before him; in love having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus himself, according to the good pleasure of his will."

The first result of this service is that it makes us holy. "Holy" means separate, set apart. By belief of the gospel we are separated from the world and its false doctrines. We are then made free from sin and become the servants of God, and bring forth fruit unto holiness. That is why believers are styled "holy brethren;" also because they were called with a "holy calling." "And every man that hath this hope, purifieth himself." There is good reason for doing so, for the Savior himself has said: "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." Then comes the exhortation to follow peace with all men, and "holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord" (Heb. 12:24). These holy brethren in the aggregate form a holy priesthood to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God, by Jesus Christ. "By him, therefore, let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is the fruit of our lips, giving thanks to his name" (Heb. 13:15).

Such is the service and sacrifice God has always desired; for we learn from the 50th Psalm that the offering of animals in sacrifice was not acceptable to him, unless accompanied with the offer of thanksgiving and the paying of vows unto the Most High. I wonder if we realize, as we should, brethren, that the praise of our lips and the giving thanks to God is a part of our service? If that is a part of the service that makes us holy, are we not unholy to be unthankful? Let us then thank God for the knowledge of the truth; thank him for the word of truth; thank him because of the holy brethren we can meet with; thank him for the word spoken and the exhortation given, that we may be steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord. If all would keep in that frame of mind there would not be much falling away from the truth.

Brethren, let us be renewed in the spirit of our minds, and put on the new man, which, "after God, is created in righteousness and true holiness." Then we shall be holy and unblameable and irreprovable in his sight. "Now unto him that is able to keep you from falling, and to present you faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy. Amen."

SCRIPTURE VS. POPULAR MISCONCEPTION

A Few Plain Facts For Thoughtful Readers

Scripture declares that "our God is a consuming fire" (Heb. 12: 20). The popular theory teaches that he is only a scorching fire.

Scripture declares that the wicked will "perish like natural brute beasts" (2 Peter 2: 12). The popular theory teaches that there will be no analogy whatever between them.

Scripture declares that the "fiery indignation" will "devour the adversaries" (Heb. 10: 27). The popular theory teaches that it will do no such thing, but only torture them.

Scripture declares that in Christ "all things consist" (Col. 1: 17). The popular theory teaches that a whole kingdom of suffering will "consist" forever, though not "in him."

Scripture declares that "whosoever doeth the will of God abideth forever" (1 John 2: 17). The popular theory teaches that every man will abide forever, whether he does the will of God or not.

Scripture declares that the "everlasting punishment" (Matt. 25:46) of the wicked will consist of "everlasting destruction" (2 Thess. 1:9). The popular theory is that it will consist of everlasting pain.

Scripture declares that God will "destroy both body and soul in hell" (Matt. 10:28). The popular theory teaches that he will destroy neither one nor the other, but will preserve both of them alive forever in unmitigated agony.

Scripture declares that whosoever "will save his life" by unfaithfulness to Christ shall ultimately "lose it" (Matt. 16:25) in a far more terrible manner. The popular theory teaches that no man can lose his life, and that the second death is not death at all, but eternal life in misery.—Prof. C. L. Ives, in "Our Hope."

MOTOR BOATS AND AUTOMOBILES THREATEN LIFE OF CHURCH

The prospects of a corporate union of the Methodist and Presbyterian churches have not improved during the past year. Quite the reverse. But active Christians in either body need not lack work. There is, as it appears to us, a ten times more threatening danger than "disunion." Let spiritually minded members of the two denominations unite in a consecrated crusade against Sunday pleasuring. Motor cars and motor boats threaten the destruction of all the Protestant churches in Canada, and the process of disintegration of late has been startingly rapid. At the rate this Province has been going, ten years from now will see few churches able financially to keep open their doors or spiritually desirously of doing so. The marvel is that so many church members of prominence are leaders in this work of destruction, either blind or indifferent to what is coming. One would have thought that the horrors of the great war might have arrested the tendency to dishonor God by such desecration of the day of rest, but it appears to have had no influence whatever, except in the way of affording further excuses for unnecessary Sundey travel, and uncalled for secular gatherings and demonstrations. Each succeeding summer the reckless carnival of pleasure grows worse and worse. Little or nothing is said about the evil in the religious press, and it goes all but unrebuked by the pulpit.—Orillia Packet, Canada.

WHERE OLD PINS GO

Disappear into Thin Air, Says a Paris Scientist

For many years the world has been baffled by the problem of where the pins go that are turned out in millions of millions by the pin factories. But the problem seems to have been solved at last.

A Paris scientist has been experimenting on pins, hairpins and needles by the simple process of watching a few. He states that they practically disappear into thin air, changing into ferrous oxide, a brownish rust that soon blows away in dust.

An ordinary hairpin took only 152 days to blow away. A steel pin lasted just under fifteen months. A common pin took eighteen months to vanish. A polished steel needle defied the ravages of the atmosphere longest, taking 2½ years to disappear.

So the reason why the world is not a foot deep in pins it buys is, it seems, exactly the same which makes an iron surface scale off when exposed for a long time to the atmosphere without the protection of paint.

"IT MAKES NO DIFFERENCE"

For the Little Folk

"When will mama come home?" said little David to his half-sister Eva.

"She won't never come home," was the reply.

"Yes, she will; she wouldn't leave me," stoutly asserted David.

"But she can't; she is dead," said Eva. "Don't you remember they put her in a big hole?"

"Yes, but it don't make any difference; she will come back anyway." And firm in his belief that this would be so, he went happily back to play with his wagon and ball. He was only four years old, but somehow he had gotten it into his small head that the dead would come out of their graves. His mama often read Bible stories to him and to his brother Philip. She read to them as long as she was able to sit up, and among other stories in their book must have been one about the resurrection of Jesus with a delightful talk from mama about it. Little David had not forgotten, though he had not quite understood how it would be. "Mama was coming back;" that was enough for him.

There was nothing to worry about; he had only to wait. And so it must be with you. Little readers of The Restitution, God opened the grave of Jesus and gave him a life that old, cruel death can never take away; and if your friends who love Jesus die, he will do the same for them. It is just as little David thinks, "It dosen't make any difference if they have been put into a big hole in the ground": they will come back again, so there is no need to cry, or to make yourselves [illegible] that your lives are worth nothing to any one.

Death must come into all our homes, yet we can still be glad because we know the dead will live again.

Morning Resolve

I will this day try to live
A simple, sincere and serene life, repelling promptly every thought of discontent, anxiety, discouragement, impurity, and self-seeking;

Cultivating

Cheerfulness, Magnanimity, Charity and the habit of Holy Silence:

Exercising

Economy in Expenditure, Carefulness in Conversation, Diligence in Appointed Service,
Fidelity to every Trust and a child-like Trust in God. And as I cannot in my own strength attain this measure of wisdom and power

I Make Humble and Firm Resolve

To seek all these things from my Heavenly
Father in the name, and through the merit of his Son, Jesus Christ my Lord.

Jesus The Prince of Peace

Like most words, "Peace" has more than one meaning. In the adjoining column is given one definition: another is a sense of which we hear a great deal at the present time. I refer to the "absence or cessaton of war." This peace is spoken of and desired by the rulers of all the warring nations, but more so by the citizens or subjects of those nations. Each ruler thinks he will be the one to bring about this condition. The claim of our own country is that it has entered the war for the purpose of bringing about everlasting, universal peace—a condition that never shall be realized until our Lord the Christ shall govern the nations. I firmly believe that the constitutions, also the living conditions of some countries are much superior to other countries; but when it comes to their ability to bring about everlasting, universal peace, they are all alike impotent; for it is beyond the power of any or all combined to do this. Marshall aptly puts it when he says "until mankind shall cease to have ambition and avarice, wars will arise."

The question arises, How is the great blessing to be accomplished? Let us turn to the 9th chapter of Isaiah and read what the prophet has written concerning One that was yet to come, One who once was here and who is coming again to fulfill what is written concerning him in verses 6 and 7; One, that when he comes shall everlastingly and universally be proclaimed THE PRINCE OF PEACE; for "of the increase of his government and peace, there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice, from henceforth even for ever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this."

I take it for granted that you understand and believe that the One referred to above is none other than our Lord Jesus, the Christ, the Son of the living God. And do you remember how, in Luke's story of the birth of Jesus, we are told (2:14) that a multitude of the heavenly host appeared, praising God and saying, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." In our short life we have not noticed any of this peace and good will; have you? On the contrary, we have witnessed jealousy: general bad feeling and avarice; individuals and nations have backed up their demands—whether righteous or otherwise—with the power of their strength. In other words, under the present governments "might makes right"; the poor suffer; the lowly are down trodden and the meek are used to make a holiday for those in power; but what a blessed change shall come when the Lord shall establish his kingdom, and Jesus our Lord shall rule in equity and in peace! Then shall be brought to pass the time spoken of by the prophet Micah, especially what he says in the first seven verses of chapter four. What a glorious time that shall be! The meek shall come into their own, for "they shall inherit the earth;" the poor also, for "theirs is the kingdom of God;" the lowly likewise, for grace is promised them. Yes, my dear young readers, as long as man rules, man will suffer; as Burns has written, "Man's inhumanity to man, makes countless thousands mourn;" but when our God shall take from man the governments of the world and give them to his Son, then shall they be governed in love, in joy, in peace, in long suffering, in gentleness, in faith, in meekness, and in temperance; for such is the nature of Christ and those who are Christ's. Wherefore we pray, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

Read Psalms 72 chapter; also Rev. 21; 22. May the Lord bless you as you read and study his word.

Another Lesson

In keeping with the Golden Text, also the "Morning Resolve," we today have selected as a subject for our lesson the meaning of which is a state of quiet and tranquility; freedom from disturbance or agitation; calm, repose.

Peace,

Peace is such a great blessing that the writers of the different epistles prayed it might rest upon the readers of their letters (Rom. 1:7; 1 Cor. 1:3; 2 Cor. 1:2; Gal. 1:3; Eph. 1:2; Phil.1:2; Col. 1:2; 1 Thess. 1:1; 2 Thess. 1:2; 1 Tim. 1:2; 2 Tim. 1:2; Titus 1:4; Philim. 3; 2 John 3).

We are told to pray for those in political authority, so we can live at peace while here (1 Tim. 2:2).

In this world there is constant tribulation, but Jesus has overcome the world, and if we are in him we will have that peace that the world can neither give nor take away (John 16:33; Rom. 1:1).

The peace of God passeth all understanding (Phil. 4:4-7)

The death of Jesus was for the purpose of making peace between man and God (Col. 1:19,20).

God's chastening is to give us peace (Heb. 12: 11).

We are admonished to live at peace with all men (Rom. 12:18).

But purity is above peace (James 3:17,18).

Peace is one of the attributes of God (Rom. 15: 33; Rom. 16:20; 2 Cor. 16:11; 1 Thess. 5:23).

Peace among brethren (Psa. 133:1; Mark 9:50; 1 Cor. 13:11; 1 Thess. 5:13).

Peaceful hearts are the culmination of our works, wrought through our faith (Col. 3:12-15).

A spiritual mind will give us peace, now and here (Rom. 8:6; 14:19; 15:13).

Jesus proclaimed peace; made peace; and is our peace (Eph. 2:14-17).

After a strong exhortation on faith the writer to the Hebrews states that, with holiness, peace is necessary if we are to see the Lord (Heb. 12:14).

Peace, one of the signs of a pure heart (2 Tim. 2:22).

Peace, one of the bonds that binds us to the Father and the Son (Eph. 4:3).

The preaching of peace by the nations is one of the signs of the soon coming of Christ (1 Thess. 5:3).

Peace is part of our armor (Eph. 6:15).

For us to have peace will be pleasing to Christ when he comes (2 Pet. 3: 14).

Peace, one of the needful things to inherit the kingdom of God (Gal. 5:22).

Part of our glory in the kingdom will be peace (Rom. 2:10; 14:17).

Peace is such a holy thing the makers of it will be called the children of God (John 5:9).

Benediction

"Now the God of peace, that brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that great shepherd of the sheep, through the blood of the everlasting covenant, make you perfect in every good work to do his will, working in you that which is well pleasing in his sight through Jesus Christ; to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen" (Heb. 13:20,21).

Why Pray ?

The Christian's reason for praying is that God invites prayer; he promises to give to his children who talk to him just what they need for every day. Those who pray believing in his power to help, and are ready to do what God wants them to do, will receive just what they need, and at the time which God sees is the moment of greatest need.

Yet it is so easy to add to our burdens by an unreasonable questioning as to God's ability to do what he has promised to do. If the thoughts of Christians were put into words, too often they would carry a meaning something like the query voiced for doubters by Mrs. A. D. T. Whitney:

> Among so many, can he care ?
> Can special love be anywhere ?
> A myriad homes—a myriad ways—
> And God's eye over every place ?

Try him, and see! Learn a lesson from the old Yorkshire farmer who, when the maker of a wordy, so-called prayer, closed with the words, "And now, O Lord, what more shall we say unto thee ?" felt impelled to interrupt, "Call him Feyther mon, and ax for summat!"

Mrs. Whitney makes a similar suggestion. The second stanza of her little poem is:

> . . . My soul bethought of this:
> In just that very place of his
> Where he hath put and keepeth you,
> God hath no other thing to do!

Gilchrist, in his life of William Blake, the English etcher and poet, has told of an artist friend who sought Mr. Blake's advice in difficulty. "What do you do when invention flags ?" he asked. Turning to Mrs. Blake, the poet said, "What do we do then, Kate ?" "We kneel down and pray," was the reply. Is it any wonder that the lives of both Mr. and Mrs. Blake were so full of strength and love and peace ?

Dr. Samuel McComb, in "The New Life," quotes from a private letter written by a physician to his nephew, which breathes the same belief in the reasonableness of prayer and tells of like results:

"I stand here in my front yard and talk with God, when I feel like it, or when I am on the road anywhere, silently or audibly . . . . I can't see him, but I can feel his presence just as I feel yours, or your dad's, or dear Tante Mary's, or your mother's presence; and the thought and feeling I have of God . . . is one of peace and grace and faith, of beauty, of love, and of confidence . . Cultivate the habit of prayer. Pray to the Great Spirit every time you start out to do anything that you know will test your powers. Pray at any time and everywhere. I say to the Great Spirit, for that is the name I love best for God whenever I feel I am up against it and weakening, or likely to prove not my best self in some trying situation: 'Help me out Great Spirit, will you ? I am a poor fellow; I have not cultivated my gift as I should have done; I lack strength of character in many ways; help me out.' And just in proportion as I am in earnest and have faith my prayer is answered—sometimes not at all and sometimes so fully that I feel a flood of light and beauty, of love and devotion, pouring in upon me."

Sometimes the warning is given that prayer should not be limited to asking for the satisfaction of needs. But is not all true prayer the cry of the soul in need ? The deepest need of the heart is God, who gives himself to those who seek him. Those who really pray will learn what David meant when he spoke of feeding on God's faithfulness, and will understand how he will speak peace to his people when they pray.—Selected by Sister A. A. Johnson.

Our Weekly Puzzle

BIBLE LESSONS ON FIRST PRINCIPLES

The editor of "The Restitution" is now preparing for publication a series of Bible lessons designed to explain every essential feature of gospel truth. Two lessons of the series have just been published entitled respectively, "Introduction" and "The Word of God in Threefold Aspect." Valuable for conducting Bible studies and classes and for giving Berean lessons, as well as for individual study. Written primarily to teach the elemental principles of the gospel to candidates for baptism. Three cents for one copy; twenty-five cents the dozen.

"Denying the Faith"

A sermon. Both doctrinal and practical. 20 pages; one copy 5 cents; 40 cents per dozen.

"The Death of Christ"

A doctrinal sermon, setting forth scripturally the reality of Christ's death. 3 cents each, or 12 for 25 cents.

"Paradise Lost; Paradise Regained"

A sermon in which every text in the Bible where paradise occurs, either in the English or original tongue, is quoted and explained. 5 cents each; 12 for 40 cents.

"The Bible: Its Principles and Texts"

As indicated by its title, this book is divided into three sections: The first consists of a disquisition on "The Bible;" the second simplifies its "Principles" in formulated propositions; and the third expounds in a homiletic manner particular "Texts." As an Editor, the Author has untied many knotty questions submitted to him by readers; more than a hundred and fifteen are considered in this volume. $1.10 the copy.

GROWING BEAUTIFUL

"He shall grow as the lily" (Hosea 14:5).

God's people shall grow as the lily
  That expands in the sun and the showers;
Day by day growing steadily, surely,
  Until crowned by the fairest of flowers.

Of its beauty the Savior has spoken,
  "Consider the lilies," he said;
"They toil not, nor spin they, yet in them
  The glory of God is displayed."

Now the same hand that painted the lily
  Will tenderly lead you and me;
God will nourish and care for us ever.
  In his image created are we.

And the lily that lifts its bright beauty
  In return for the sunshine and rain,
And exhales its perfume for its maker
  Points a lesson to us that is plain.

May our hearts be as pure as that flower,
  And our love like its fragrance be given
To the Lord who has died to redeem us,
  And for us intercedeth in heaven.

May we brighten some spot that is dreary,
  Spread the gospel which we have received
'Til the earth which now groans under bondage
  Is more beautiful that we have lived.

EXHORTATION

Given in Cleveland, Ohio, Oct. 3, 1917

W. S. Tomlinson

No matter how great an undertaking that may confer some blessing upon the community, for fear all are not interested as they ought, there are some who are ready to give encouragement and urge others to do the same. We see this exemplified at the present time in the sale of the liberty bonds.

We of the household of faith have undertaken the great task of saving ourselves that we may be instrumental in God's hands of filling the earth with his glory. If it be good and proper for men of the world to urge their fellow men to greater diligence that their enterprises may be successful, how much more so with us ? Not only experience teaches us it is well for us to exhort each other to a greater diligence, but we find in the Scriptures both example and command. David in the 149th Psalm instructed the people of his day to "sing unto the Lord a new song, and his praise in the congregation of saints. For the Lord taketh pleasure in his people; he will beautify the meek with salvaton. Let the saints be joyful in glory. Let them sing aloud upon their beds. Let the high praises of God be in their mouth."

Oh, beloved, if we came to these meetings in the frame of mind as expressed in this psalm, what a feast of good things we would have ! The apostle Paul in 2 Cor. 6: 1 says, "We then, as workers together with him, beseech you also that ye receive not the grace of God in vain." The word translated "beseech" here is the same word translated "exhort" in the familiar passage of Heb. 10:25. Here then we not only have the apostolic precept to exhortation, but a positive command as well. You remember our Savior says we are only his friends by doing what he commands; and when the apostle says, "We then as workers together with him," he takes us to the previous chapter, and there the pronoun "him" is Christ and he is an ambassador for him. What the apostle says then is the same as Christ himself saying it.

It is not only our duty to exhort one another, but so "much the more as we see the day approaching." The times are to become more perilous as the end approaches, and we stand in need of the help those can give who can see the signs which are to proceed the coming of the Lord.

As the Elders are about to begin the study, or rather to take the lead, as the class studies the book of Revelation, we ought to each ask ourselves what can I do to make the meetings more interesting ? First, we ought to attend the meetings as regularly as possible so as not not to lose the connection of one lesson to another. Then we ought to study the lesson at home that it may not be new to us when we come to meeting. We will thereby be able to enter in to the spirit of the lesson from the beginning. Another good thing would be for each one to carry his own Bible. Don't depend upon picking up some strange Bible that you are not familiar with. Have your own book that you may look up each reference, then it will become more impressed upon your mind Simply hearing a thing without some effort on our part to make it our own, soon departs from the memory. In this connection I would like to give some extracts from an article I recently read on the "Law of Increase."

"Christ likens the industrious use of our religious faculty to the conduct of a man who doubles his capital by judicious trading. 'He that had received the five talents went and traded with the same, and made five other talents.' We cannot increase our spiritual stock without effort. There are commercial investments which accumulate without any industry on the owners part. It is not so with spiritual property. This must have strict personal management and oversight, or it will never increase. Knowledge grows by cultivation, and so does every quality on which man's usefulness depends. Christ would have us in a state of constant improvement and progress. Here then we have a word of encouragment to those who feel that their religious possessions are but of moderate and slender description, but are careful of what they have. These have Christ's own guarantee that their stock of virtue shall be augmented, and they shall increase with the increase of God. Let them give diligence to use their powers and opportunities such as they are."

If we strive diligently to follow this advice during the study of the book of Revelation we will soon have an enlarged vision of God's goodness; faith will be strengthened; hope increased; and we will be like the apostle Paul when he exclaimed: "I count all things but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Jesus Christ my Lord....that I may know him, and the power of his resurrection, and the fellowship of his suffering, being made conformable unto his death, if by any means I might attain unto the resurrection out from among the dead."

Beloved, as I look out over the world and compare the present conditions of things with the predictions of Scripture; when I see the hand of the desolating power losing his grip upon the land of Palestine: when I see that long period of seven times of Gentile rule surely drawing to a close; I am persuaded that we are living on the verge of the mightiest revolution earth has ever known—the coming of the Lord. Important as was his first coming, it pales before his second glorious appearing. That great day is fast approaching. It will come; and when it does, how important will seem all the petty strifes and worldly ambitions that make up this present evil world. The supreme question then will not be whether we have all the comforts of this life and be regarded as "a success" by those of the world: but whether Christ approves of us, and if from his point of view we have not been altogether a failure. In that day men's estimate of things will be of no avail; only Christ's approval will then be sought. May it be ours to hear his welcome words, "Come, ye blessed of my Father." Amen.

I am afraid that all the grace I have got out of my comfortable and easy times and happy hours might lie on a penny. But the good that I have received from my sorrows and pains and griefs is altogether incalculable. What do I not owe to the hammer and the anvil, the fire and the file? Affliction is the best bit of furniture in my house.—Spurgeon.

ENHANCING GOD'S GLORY

S. Roxana Wince

"Whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."

It seems strange that poor mortal man can add anything to the glory of the great and Ever Living One; but no act of righteousness, of submission, of worship or of loving service can be done without reflecting honor upon him. What a delight it is to know this, to feel that we "give him the honor due unto his name" by being sincere and earnest Christians! Even the whole house of Israel and the whole house of Judah, were caused to cleave unto the Lord "that they might be for a name, and for a praise, and for glory" (Jer. 13:11). And God will cause their captivity to return, will pardon their iniquity, and build them as at first "that it may be to him a name of joy, a praise, and an honor before all the nations of the earth" (Jer. 33:7-10). The very promises in Christ are "yea and amen for the glory of God" (2 Cor. 1:20). But how? Paul says, "By us," that is, by him and his brethren in the ministry. They had made these promises known and had by doing so given honor to him who had called them.

It is not by pleasing ourselves but by walking in the footsteps of Jesus and every one of us pleasing his neighbor for his good unto edification that we may with one mind and one mouth glorify God, even the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. To receive one another, is to the glory of God (Rom. 15:1-8). Not a thing must be done in our daily walk and conversation without keeping the honor of God in mind: not even our eating and drinking. We must eat and drink temperately with a view to clearness of mind and strength of body, so that we may be able to serve him acceptably. The glutton and the drunkard cannot do this. They can add no glory to his name, but only shame and dishonor. And so it is with any one who does wrong, who continues in a course of sin, or who, though believing the gospel, refuses to take upon himself the all-saving name and the sacred obligations imposed thereby.

How sad I feel over such an one. Given such glorious opportunity to make the world a fit dwelling place for the Most High, and yet refusing to move his finger! Called to be a soldier of Jesus, and remaining a cowardly slacker all his days, a traitor to his people, his country, his God, with age creeping on, death approaching, and Christ's coming drawing near, no precious hope to cheer, no after chance in view, life thrown away forever! It is a thing too pitiful to think of, a grief too deep for tears. "Whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." Obey him, dear one, yet out of Christ, and become a factor in helping to fill the earth with his knowledge and glory. You can set no more worthy purpose before you, for to help put away sin from our world, is to help put away all disease, all pain, all heart-aches, all poverty, and death itself. Come unto Jesus that you may have life; come unto him that you may be a co-worker with God in making a paradise of this sin-cursed globe of ours. We yearn over you. We do not want to leave you behind when Jesus calls us to meet him at his coming.

Re-union, re-union, re-union at home,
Will you meet us there, will you meet us there,
In the glad re-union at home?

MUSINGS

Geo. B. Alldridge

Last evening Brother Huggins requested me to write "something for The Restitution." My mind, somewhat weary and my spirit depressed after a hard day I intend in this article just to let my mind follow its own mood and muse upon things it delights to do when alone.

Paul writing to Jude exhorts him to "earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the saints." But Paul, contention brings weariness. How often Jesus felt weary and discouraged at the cold and unsympathetic response accorded him by his hearers. My mind likes to meditate and study this glorious type—Moses. Dear Moses, no Jew loves thee with a greater reverence than I. No man ever talked to God with the same confidence and familiarity as thou. Listen: "O Lord God, thou hast begun to shew thy servant thy greatness, and thy mighty hand, for what God is there in heaven or in earth that can do according to thy works, and according to thy might"? Now follow closely beloved: "I pray thee, let me go over, and see the good land that is beyond Jordan, that goodly mountain and Lebanon." Have you never uttered this prayer when weary and discouraged, "Let me go over and see the good land that is beyond Jordan, that goodly mountain and Lebanon"?

Moses for forty, ah yes, eighty long years, spent his life in a wilderness and oft times a desert country. Now the end of the journey was in sight. Already the very atmosphere felt cool and refreshing to his fevered brow, as the gentle zephyrs passed through the forest covered sides of this glorious mountain and the pure waters in its quiet vales.

Lebanon means the centre or heart. Methinks Lebanon is the heart, the centre of the "good land." David writes: "There shall be an handful of corn in the earth upon the top of the mountains: the fruit thereof shall shake like Lebanon: and they of the earth shall flourish like grass of the earth." Again: "The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree: he shall grow like cedars in Lebanon." Solomon likens Christ and the church to Lebanon because of their fruitfulness, fragrance, and glory. Sometimes even Jerusalem was likened to Lebanon because the temple and the houses were built almost entirely of its cedars.

But my mind is in communion with Moses tonight, so I will stand with him and look afar off into the good land he longed so much to enter but was denied. The highest peak was covered with snow, pearly white, so suggestive of the righteousness of the saints, and as the pure water of life flowed down its side into the valley, its left-behind vineyards, fountains leaping from the declivities and cool brooks wound through the fragrant fields that carpeted its lovely side. I see its sides glowing in the sunlight as they creep over the landscape, those rays momentarily lost amid the green shrubbery that clustered close and seemingly cling to the streams as they flow on downward and towad Jordan.

As Moses stands viewing Lebanon, the cool breeze makes him forget the heat and toil of the way, and the longing again comes, "I pray thee, let me go over and see the good land that is beyond Jordan." And Moses was an hundred and twenty years old when he died; his eyes were not dim, nor his natural force abated. Why? because his mind was always upon that "good land": it poured freshness and health into his soul. And as in fancy he often lifted his eyes beyond Jordan, the scene before him ravished his senses; its wonderful vineyards spread in every direction, and apparently endless forests of cedars were along the top a green crown to all the beauty below, making it indeed the "glory of Lebanon."

Those lofty cedars caught the first morning rays of sunlight and the last as the sun went down, lingered long after deep shadows filled the plains below. The righteous are like a cedar in Lebanon, and in the kingdom we shall surely be, for like they (the cedars) we shall flourish eternally in unchecked vigor. Oh the glorious "wood of Lebanon" and excellent as the cedars, full of fragrance and life and vigor! The countenance of our beloved is like Lebanon, full of sunlight and glory, and like Moses, as we behold his face ours will radiate and shine with the glory and brightness surpassing the nooday's sun.

Isaiah forgot his troubles and care when he thought of Lebanon: and as he saw the church in glory, he exclaims: "The glory of Lebanon shall come unto thee, the fir-tree and the pine-tree, and the box together, to beautify the place of my sanctuary, and I will make the place of my feet glorious." Jeremiah had his moments of exhultation as he thought of the day when the royal house of Judah (the saints) shall be as Gilead and the head of Lebanon unto God. Hosea reaches the climax when predicting the future greatness of spiritual Israel: "Thus saith the Lord, I will be as dew unto Israel: he shall grow as the lily, and cast forth his roots as Lebanon. His branches shall spread, and his beauty shall be as the olive tree, and his smell as Lebanon. They that dwell under his shadow shall return; they shall revive as the corn, and grow as the vine; the scent thereof shall be as the wine of Lebanon."

So beloved, after the exercise in writing this article, my mind feels refreshed, my spirit is lifted up: the "good land" is not far off—just across Jordan. Glorious Lebanon has bursted in upon my vision. Now I understand why "there shall be an handful of corn in the earth upon the top of the mountains: the fruit thereof shall shake like Lebanon: and they of the city shall flourish like grass of the earth." Why? Because "his name shall endure for ever: his name shall be continued as long as the sun; and men shall be blessed in him; all nations shall call him blessed." Even so, come Lord Jesus; come quickly. Amen.

THE TEST OF ORTHODOXY

Matt. 7:15-20

1. In every time of religious quickening the danger of heresy becomes pressing. Enthusiasts of all sorts urge their pet notions, their "infallible truths" upon their fellows. Unbalanced and uninstructed minds set forth captivating fallacies as though inspired. Narrow minded zealots denounce those who disagree with them. During the Reformation period in England a host of small sects arose under these conditions, only a few of which remain to this day, having proved their value in experience. The Jews were specially liable to be deceived by false prophets. Naturally fierce and bigoted, profoundly religious, any teacher with strong convictions was likely to gain a following speedily. And Jesus foresaw the vast wide ferment that his teaching would arouse. So he warned his disciples to beware of false prophets.

2. Jesus then goes on to indicate how false prophets are to be detected. And this is rather puzzling, seeing that in the first verse of this chapter we read that Jesus said, "Judge not, that ye be not judged." Yet we are to judge these false prophets! Here we must discriminate. When Jesus tells us not to judge others he lays down a general rule of life, and shows us the spirit in which we ought to act towards our fellows. He has in view the captious, carping, intolerant, faultfinding temper which is never happy except in rebuking and criticising others, and seems to gain a complacent sense of virtue in discovering vices in everyone else. This ugly manner, ministering to spiritual pride and blinding a man to his own defects, Jesus unsparingly condemns. But in vs. 15 he is facing a very different problem. Here is a matter of the soul's well-being, in which judgment is challenged. The prophet claims to come from God. He demands a hearing. He calls for followers. He urges his doctrine against all other doctrines. And his hearers have no choice before them—they must either accept or reject him and his message. If they accept it, it may ultimately prove that they have admitted a ravening wolf into the fold. It is a matter therefore of life and death that they be able to test the prophet's orthodoxy.

3. "By their fruits." That is the test of orthodoxy. Orthodoxy is not a matter of opinion, but of life. There is a definition of "sound doctrine" in 1 Tim. 1:8-11 and 6:3, which shows very clearly the apostle's insistence on the relation between teaching and living. Right thoughts and purposes are bound to lead to right deeds. Evil deeds must spring from an evil principle in the mind. When the engineers made the great Lotschberg tunnel in Switzerland they found that the two parties working from points miles apart on opposite sides of the mountain met exactly at the right place in the heart of the mountain. This proved the accuracy and general rightness of the mathematical theories on which the work had been planned. What scientists had thought out in their studies displayed itself in the tunnel. If the scientists had been wrong, those two sets of workmen might never have met, and the whole work would have been spoiled. So life tests belief.

Sometimes this seems not to apply. Some men hold very vicious doctrines but live good lives. In such cases we may be quite sure that the vicious doctrines are not really believed in. Some men hold very noble doctrines and live very bad lives. Here again the belief is only apparent—it is not real.

4. But the value of this test, "by their fruits," is at its highest when we apply it to the effect of teaching in our own hearts. If a certain teaching produces evil fruit in us, it is false doctrine. So in judging the orthodoxy of any teaching, it is safer to ask what effect that teaching would have on ourselves, rather than to discover what effect it has on the teacher. For it is very difficult for anyone to pick out cause and effect in this way in others. But we can tell at once how any thought is affecting our own souls. When a man makes the great discovery of the love of God for him, a revolution takes place in his life. The thorns and thistles of distrust and malice and selfishness lie down, and very speedily the fruits of the Spirit show themselves. To know that he forgives us and cares for us makes an immeasureable difference to all the world—as a smile makes all the difference to the face that before had frowned. If our life bears evil fruit our beliefs are somehow wrong, and we must turn to the True Prophet, Jesus our Lord.—Newton H. Marshall.

IF A MAN DIE, SHALL HE LIVE AGAIN?

When Job asked this question, the greatest question ever uttered by human lips, he had to wait 1553 years before he got an authoritative answer. Holy men, prophets, apostles, and teachers have inscribed their absolute faith in the resurrection of the dead, have preached it and taught it in season and out of season; but they never had a positive, absolute "Thus saith the Lord" for it until it was exemplified at the grave of Lazarus. There were no "ifs" "ands" or "buts" to the immutable statement then and there made by lips that have since become immortal, and which shall judge the world in righteousness and its people with equity. The answer to this great question not only confirms the faith of all the writers and speakers upon the subject up to the time of Job and including him, but it solidifies faith into fact, to be revealed at the last great day.

That Job himself was a staunch believer in the resurrection of the dead, hear him: "Oh! that thou wouldest hide me in the grave (not in heaven), that thou wouldest keep me secret until thy wrath be past, that thou wouldest appoint me a set time and remember me. Thou shalt call and I will answer thee; thou shalt have a desire for the work of thine hands." And he has been kept secret and hidden in the grave all these years awaiting the "call," and he will, in due time, receive it.

But what were the scenes and incidents which elicited such a reply to Job's great question? It was no ordinary occasion, for the like of it never occurred before nor since, and never can occur again. The occasion was the death of Lazarus. It seems that Jesus knew of his demise some four days before his disciples, for he said to them "our friend Lazarus sleepeth; I go that I may awake him out of sleep." They said unto him, "Lord, if he sleepeth he shall do well," thinking that he was taking his natural rest in sleep. Then said Jesus unto them plainly, "Lazarus is dead." Then Martha, when she heard that Jesus was coming, went forth to meet him, and she said unto him, "Lord, if thou hadst been here my brother had not"—gone to heaven? No, "my brother had not died." Quite a difference, I take it. Jesus saith unto her, "Thy brother shall rise again." "Yea, Lord," replied she, "I know that he shall rise again in the resurrection at the last day." Jesus saith unto her, "I am the resurrection and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live."

There Job, you have gotten your answer full and complete, and no man born on earth can refute it, for it is immutable, unanswerable. And to this the Christ added an assurance which Job never thought of (at least he never mentioned), namely, "Whosoever liveth and believeth in me (when I come) shall never die. Believeth thou this?" The very ashes of Job would move themselves aright to assert their belief in the great question of the Master, and it only needs the "breath of life," which the great Life-giver alone can give, to turn the magnificent faith of Job into a glorious fact.

HOW U. S. WILL TREAT WAR OBJECTORS

Washington, Oct. 1—One of the problems in any compulsory service is the "conscientious objectors"—the man whose conscience will not permit him to kill. A certain small percentage is found in all countries.

This problem is now up to the secretary of war. In all the sixteen cantonments there are those who have failed to obey the summons, or who do so under protest, saying they are unwilling to become members of any killing organization. The adjutant general's force is now rounding them up.

The first step is to make sure the reluctant ones understand the situation, the law, their duties, and the penalties. Those merely lagging will be given a chance to catch up. Argument and moral suasion will be used.

Plans Already Laid

If this fails they will be arrested and taken to the camps, to be dealt with according to the following plan:

First they will be offered service in a non-combatant force. A certain percentage will accept.

Another alternative is that of engineering work in the United States which will relieve others for duty at the front.

If the conscientious objector is so averse to war he is unwilling to take a job which will relieve another man for the work of killing, he must take the penalties meted out to war deserters. This means imprisonment for the war. Under the law a deserter may be shot.—Selected by Sister McIlrath.

THE ARAB'S LESSON

"My son," said an Arab, "hasten to the spring and bring me a basket of water." The lad hastened, and worked long and diligently to fill the basket, but before he could return to the tent the water leaked out. At length he returend to his father and said, "Although I repeatedly filled the basket, the water would not stay." Then his father said, "My son, what you say is true. The water would not stay, but see how clean the basket is."

So it will be with your heart. You may not be able to remember all the precepts you hear, but keep trying to treasure them; they will make your heart pure and fit for good uses.—Brother Titman.

DON'T FORGET THE HELPING FUND

We whose names are given below, believing it to be our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the manager of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. Those whose circumstance do not permit of the paying for the paper themselves should notify the manager, signifying their willingness to accept the paper, and it will be cheerfully sent from the proceeds of this fund.

"Watch and pray" (Matt. 26: 41). "Watchfulness without prayer is presumption; prayer without watchfulness is hypocrisy. By the first a man invades God's part in his great work; and by the latter he neglects his own. Prayer not assisted by practice is laziness, and contradicted by practice is hypocrisy" (South).

It is a fact of considerable significance that there is an intimate connection between the idea of a father and king. From the earliest times this connection is visible: Abimelech, the title of the kings of Gerar, means my father. Padishah has the same meaning now among the Persians, and Atalik (father) is the title still used by the kings of Bokhara. Abrech, the salutation addressed to Joseph, means "tender father," "a father and a ruler" (Gen. 41: 43, margin; 45: 8).

TEN EXCELLENT RULES

1. To remember that we are all subject to failing and infirmities of one kind or another.
2. To bear with, and not magnify each other's infirmities (Gal. 6:1,2).
3. To pray for one another in our social meetings, and particularly in private (James 5:16).
4. To avoid going from house to house for the purpose of hearing news, and interfering with other people's business.
5. Always to turn a deaf ear to any slanderous report, and to credit no charge brought against any person until well founded.
6. If a member be in fault, to tell him of it in private, before it is mentioned to others.
7. To watch against a shyness of each other, and put the best construction on any action that has the appearance of opposition or resentment.
8. To observe the just rule of Solomon, that is, to leave off contention before it be meddled with (Prov. 17:14).
9. If a member has offended, to consider how glorious, how God-like it is to forgive, and how unlike a Christian it is to revenge (Eph. 4:2).
10. To consider how much more good we can do in the world at large, and in the church in paticular, when we are all united in love, than we should do when acting alone, and indulging a contrary spirit.

THE NATURE OF THE BOOK

Sermon Notes by the Editor on the Apocalypse

> "He sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John, who bare record of the word of God, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, and of all things that he saw. Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein; for the time is at hand" (Rev. 1:1-3).

I. "He Sent it by His Angel"

1. Angels have played a large part in giving us the word of God (vs. 1; 22: 6,8,9; Acts 7: 53; Gal. 3: 19; Heb. 2: 2).

II. "And Signified it"

1. "Signified" (s i-g-n-i-f-i-e-d) means some sign, signal, or token by which anything is made known (Rom. 4:11; Gen. 9:12-13; 17:11; Luke 2:12; 2 Cor. 12: 12; 1 Cor. 14: 22).

2. Interspersed with the symbolism are God-given clews by which the things "signified" are indicated, so they can be interpreted and appreciated (vss. 1,12-20; Hos. 12: 10; Jer. 1: 12; Amos 8: 1; Zech. 1:18-21).

III. "Who Bare Record"

1. "Of the word of God" (vss. 2,9; John 10: 35; 21: 24; 19: 35; 1 John 1: 2; 4: 14; Acts 4: 31; 6: 2).

2. "And of the testimony of Jesus Christ, what (a) things he saw" (vss. 2,5; 3: 14; John 8: 18; Mark 3: 17).

Benediction upon Readers, Hearers, and Keepers of the Book

1. The reason: "The time is at hand" (vss.3,4; 22: 6; Psa. 19: 11; Luke 11: 28; Rev. 22: 7,14; vss.1, 3; Dan. 12: 4,9; Rev. 22: 6).

(a) "And all things which he saw," as in the Common Version, is a faulty rendering of the Greek text. So read the writer is made to speak of (1) the word of God; (2) the testimony of Jesus Christ; (3) "and of all things which he saw," as if they were additional to God's word and Christ's testimony. John did not write, "And (kai) all things which he saw," but simply "what things he saw." The extent of the text is limited to "the word of God, and the testimony of Jesus Christ" as revealed to John in the Apocalypse (vs. 1).

THE GOSPEL FOR ALL

No. XI

Let us who know and believe the truth remember that the gospel is being preached to take out a people for Jesus' name. Those who come into this high calling in Christ Jesus was elected and called by God. They are "the called according to his purpose" (Rom. 8:28). They are called, justified, counted righteous, and finally glorified in the resurrection by God (Rom. 8:30). It is all according to God's purpose in working out his wonderful plan of salvation, and not because they in any way merited his high favor. "Who hath saved us, and called us, not according to his works, but according to his own purpose and grace, which was given us in Christ Jesus before the world began." They come to Christ because they are drawn by the Father (John 6:44). The gospel is the drawing power. Is it meet for those who have been thus drawn, to judge those that have not been thus drawn by hearing the gospel, worthy of eternal death? They do not choose God, but are chosen by him (John 15:16), as Jesus expressly told the twelve. As we read the accounts of how the twelve were chosen, we see how literally true this is.—Alta King.

EDITOR'S REPLY

The Purpose of the Gospel is to "Take Out" a People for the Lord

From Acts 15:14-17 we learn that the gospel is not intended to save the world en bloc. Its purpose is "to take out a people for his name," and to save the "residue of men." The gospel has been preached in all the world and stands today as a completed proclamation, "a witness" in the earth (Matt. 24:14). The ones who believe the gospel believe "the witness of God" (1 John 5:9), and when they obey it they are "taken out" or "set apart" for God (Psa. 4:3). They are then "the called according to his purpose" (Rom. 8:28). In the communication before us the writer concedes these facts about the gospel, but unconsciously complains about them. Think and reason for only a moment: if God "sets apart the godly for himself" (Psa. 4:3), he does not set apart the ungodly. This is what makes Russellites send up a howl about God showing partiality in treating some better than others. If God "takes out some (Acts 15:14-17), he must necessarily leave others. This, to the advocates of "the gospel for all," is unmitigated "selfishness." If some are "the called" others are uncalled—and this is a repulsive narrowness which Larger Hope theorists cannot brook. They are great pretenders of logical reasoning, but unfortunately for their logic, they always reason in a circle. They berate "the called" and tell them it is not beseeming in them to speak of those who are not called as being heirs of death. They actually quote Scriptures which say we are "chosen" by God; forgetting that choice implies rejection equally with acceptance. They have injected the socialistic idea of equality into the gospel, and claim that God must treat all alike. As they dilate much upon the "rights" of those who are not called, perhaps it is proper to say something here and now about God's "rights" in the matter. It is just possible that God is not selecting and choosing the ones they think he should as heirs of his kingdom (Jas. 2:5)—it is both possible and probable that they do not agree with God in his decisions. Yes, he may "take out" John Jones, an illiterate "nobody," and leave out their mother or some of their folk, and maybe this runs counter to their feelings, and they resent it. Eructations of Larger Hope are probably due to a desire to dictate to God. They may want God to act on their foolish, limited, imperfect judgment rather than upon his wisdom. But if they will only talk to God about his judgments they will have to confess with Jeremiah of old, "Righteous art thou, O Lord, when I plead with thee: yet let me talk with thee of thy judgments" (Jer. 12:1). Now as we are invited to "talk" and "reason" with him about his judgments (Jer. 12:1; Isa. 1:18), we shall present to him the arguments which Larger Hope theorists put to us. Their mouths are full of arguments (Job. 23: 4), so we pause that they may state them as fully and forcefully as they can. We ask the reader to ponder deeply, studiously, and seriously God's replies and explanations in behalf of himself and his truth.

A Larger Hope Argument Presented to God

Jehovah of Israel, we wish to "talk" about a matter that perplexes us exceedingly. You have said in your Book that hearing, equally with believing, is a condition of salvation. Your words are of unmistakable import in John 5:24: "He that heareth my word, and believeth on him that sent me, hath everlasting life, and shall not come into condemnation; but is passed from death into life." Obtaining everlasting life is here conditioned upon hearing and believing in combinaton. As none can "pass from death into life" unless they hear as well as believe your word, infants, idiots, heathen, and millions of "good people" are doomed to "death." They cannot "pass" from death to life because they cannot hear. Our super-sensitive and sentimental souls recoil at the appalling thought that these millions of innocent, good people must perish in "death" through no fault of their own. True, there has been given them a "witness" in the Bible, but they do not understand it. It fails to enlighten them. We are sorry for these dear, good people. Some of them are our own relatives, and we love them. We defend their ignorance and excuse their sin (if they have any sin), and think they have not had adequate facilition for understanding the gospel. We do not want to put the blame upon you and exonerate them, but "he that heareth my word" is what you say, and these people have no chance to hear it. These poor souls must "pass from death to life" whether they "hear" your word or not. Pity them, Lord, and either rescind the law of hearing, or pass them from death to life without obedience to the law thou has enacted—we do not care which.

God's Reply to the Argument

"He that heareth my word" is the law, and I cannot abolish my word though heaven and earth should pass away (Matt. 5·18), much less to accommodate your friends in disobedience. If they are as "good" as you say they are why do they not do that which I tell them? They cannot pass from death to life unless they obey me. I have distinctly said "death" is to be the portion of the ignorant, even though they may be honorable. In the 49th Psalm I have said, "Unto eternity they shall never see light." View the word "light" in any legitimate sense, understand it in any way in which it is understandable, and it contradicts the sentiments of quasi-universalism. If "light" is taken in a physical, literal sense, then their resurrection can "never" occur during the reign of "eternity." If "light" is given a mental and religious sense, then they cannot, while "eternity" continues, "see the light" of enlightenment. They can never pass from death unto life so long as eternity lasts. Blame me for this decision of their destiny if you will; I can bear it. My judgments are always right, and my policy of revealing the truth to some and of hiding it from others—the ground of all these complaints before me—caused my "well beloved Son" to burst out into a gush of adoration, praise, and gratitude, expressed in these words: "I thank thee, Lord of heaven and earth, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes. Even so, Father; for so it seemed good in thy sight" (Matt. 11:25,26). As "Lord of heaven and earth" I have the right "to hide these things" from some and to "reveal" them to others. My Son thanked me for doing this. The fact that this action on my part begets no "I thank thee" in your hearts, is a clear indication that you are out of sympathy with my rulings, my Son, and myself. You refuse to say submissively, "Even so" (Amen) to what "seems good in my sight." What "seems good" to me seems bad to you. Therefore you are demonstrated to be sinners, and must give up your thoughts and ways and become converted to mine, or I can neither pardon you nor your friends on whose behalf you plead so earnestly (Isa. 55:6-9).

And I say that this freedom and victory are waiting only for those lives that have been broken beneath the cross of an absolute restraint of God, and have so mastered themselves under God's name by the help of Christ that control has been given over in trust into their hands.—Robert E. Speer.

COMMUNICATIONS

"They shall make known unto you all things which are done here" (Col. 4:9).

The following recent letter is from our dear aged Brother Cattell, now residing in Oxford, England, father of Sister Goss, of Cleveland. Brother Cattell was an Elder of Cleveland Ecclesia for many years, contemporary with Brothers Joblin, Elton, and McLaughlan, and was well known to the brethren at large for his hospitality and devotion to the truth. He passed his 87th birthday August 22nd at his present home, and though nearly blind, has his mind clear and faculties unimpaired, greatly enjoying to hear from friends who write. His address is 27 Divinity Road, Oxford, England.

To our dear Brother and Sister Lang, to all the household of faith, readers of the dear old Restitution, Greetings:

I feel it is my duty to address one more letter to all the faithful in the Anointed ere it be too late, as my capacity for such work is becoming very poor, both from loss of sight and ability for the task, althrough the task I love as well as all those that are with me in the faith and hope. Such a hope maketh not ashamed. What a favor and privilege to be found in company with that sect that is everywhere spoken against. Never mind, ye followers of the meek and lowly Nazarene who has once suffered on our account, the just for the unjust, when on this sin-stricken earth as a "man of sorrows and acquainted with grief," and he well knows all about what we may have to suffer on account of trying to follow in his steps. He went away, but promised to return, and we are anxiously looking for him. When he comes his reward will be with him. He will not forget one of his followers, so keep right along till you can see the strait gate, the narrow way that leads to life, yes, everlasting life, which will be the reward of all the faithful. O what a grand outlook opens up to all such as shall endure to the end of the race!

L. C. Cattell.

Wednesday, Sept. 26, the writer began a special meeting at Cove Springs, Warren Co., Va. This church was organized in 1899, and has been visited by a number of our ministers. However for several years the church has not had regular services, and as a result there are but few in the church to carry on the work. They have a nice house and a good organ. This church is about thirty miles from the writer's home.

The meeting continued till Oct. 2, and then the writer was under the necessity of closing as he was needed at home. The attendance and interest were very good. On Sunday evening the attendance was estimated at one hundred and fifty, and many were compelled to remain on the outside, as the house is too small to accommodate the number that were there. In the meeting the writer tried to preach the pure word and leave results with God. Well, God did give an increase. On Monday, Oct. 1, we met at the water and baptized Mrs. Grace E. Grove; Miss Beulah E. Updike, daughter of Brother Randolph Updike; and Mrs. Ella E. Johnson. After the baptism we met at the church and partook of the Lord's Supper. Several others at this place are considering baptism. We have, I think, ten or eleven members at Cove Springs, but like the writer, they are not rich in this world's goods, but are willing to do all they can to keep the work going. While there are ten or eleven members living near the church there are only two or three families. I know of no place where there is a better field for work than this one, but to meet success it will take regular work, at least once a month, and then several days should be put in. I remember that some time ago some of our people sent money to India to carry on a work there, and I have been thinking that perhaps some would like to help carry on the work at this place. The writer is very anxious to see a conference worked up in Va., but he realizes that there is lots of work to do. May God help us to be workers.

FAITH AND LOVE

"Faith Without Works is Dead"

I was deeply impressed with Sister Flora Wood's article, especially some parts of it. She says it seems as if we have relied upon our knowledge and have somewhat neglected the weightier matters, love and good works. Yes, "neglected" is the right word. None I am sure but what believes that according to our Master's teachings to love our neighbor as ourselves is the most important of all the law or the prophets; yet the brethren all seem to lay all stress upon what a person believes. They often forget to say one word about how he lives. "By their fruits you shall know them"; not by their creed or belief alto other. What are the "fruits" mentioned that we shall know them by? Love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness faith, etc. "Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ." Read this verse again and ponder it carefully. Would we really fulfill the law of Christ by bearing one another's burdens? We would at least fulfill the greatest command of the New Testament. It does not say "all"; there are, of course, other laws and we must keep the whole law. So help us, heavenly Father, to try and fulfill thy greatest command; and when we do our neighbors will say surely he (or she) has been with Jesus.

Let me tell you now a little personal story. Last summer a dear little woman, one of our faith, came to visit Brotner S. H. Thomas. We live close by. I was not very strong at the time. From childhood up we have tried to sew and make our garments, etc. I had more work than I could do. Cousin F., a sister, was a delicate, frail, little body and needed rest, and hoped to gain health and strength while on this visit with the brother. Did she gain? did she rest? I don't know. This I do know: she had a finger in lifting or trying to lift everyone's burdens wherever she turned. It was no strange sight for me to look from my window and see Cousin F. coming every afternoon until she had helped me so much with my sewing and little worries that I begged her to stop and rest more.

I then commenced to ask myself, Why does she do so much for me? If I had been a relative or one of her own family I would not have wondered, for it is easy to love our own. But what was it that caused her to take hold and lift some of my burdens? Surely nothing but the love of Jesus. My husband is not one of us, but he got a glimpse of Christian love, of what it is to be a Christian. Oh if we could only stoop to lift another's burden oftener, how much oftener would our neighbors see Jesus! Help us, Father, to put on the whole armor of God, to obey and work for thee every day. Help us to start in today and measure our deeds by thy great law of love, and to do by others as we would have them do by us.

Mrs. Chas. H. Thomas.

CHRIST COMPARED WITH GREAT MEN

It would be well if occasionally we would detach our minds from our theological conceptions of Christ, true and reverent as they may be, and endeavour to estimate the immense intellectual force which he has exerted on the world. Where is there any other force like it? There is a memorable letter of Browning's in which this is put with great force, and the deduction drawn is that this intellectual force of Christ is so great that the mind can only bow before it, and call it divine. Browning quotes a story of Napoleon, who one day in St. Helena, after a prolonged study of the gospel, closed the book and said, "I am an understander, a reader of men, I tell you this man was more than a man."

And he finishes the letter by saying that one night a group of literary men were discussing how they would feel if suddenly the great men of the past entered the room. "And if Shakespeare entered," said someone to Charles Lamb, "what then?" "We should all rise," said Lamb. "And if Christ?" "We should all kneel," he replied, bowing his head as he spoke. The distinction between Christ and all others who have ever spoken to the minds and the souls of men could not be more finely put.—Selected by Brother Titman from "The Young Man."

AN IMPOSSIBLE IDEAL

She had two boys. The mother wished not only to give them a serious idea of her desire to make them good, but also to make clear to their minds the gravity of the task before her. At the end of a particularly touching adjuration five-year-old Francis was suddenly overcome with the impossibility of ever attaining his mother's ideal.

"Don't try to make us good, mother," he said earnestly. "Just shoot us."

Today our central thought will be

The Parents of our Young People and to them we dedicate this page. We all have had parents, and they are the best earthly friends we ever will have. You think your parents are the best people who ever lived. I have the same thought regarding mine. Who will ever work for you as father worked? who will ever suffer for you as mother suffered? God uses our parents as an illustration of his own love: don't forget this in the day when all having grown older, dear mother or father perhaps will want to lean upon you for support as today you lean upon them but help them all you can, realizing that God has acknowledged their love and likened it to his own.

"She Hath Done What She Could."

This simple inscription tells of the beginning and the ending of the earthly life of my father and mother: a couple that abhorred strife, and whose very lives were built on the foundation of love.

My parents were born in Scotland, father in Aberdeen, mother in Edinburgh. In Glasgow on father's 22nd birthday they were married; and in the same city about 3 years later they made a covenant with God by putting on the all-saving name of Jesus their Lord, by being buried in the waters of baptism to arise and walk in newness of life.

As Christians they were humble yet confident; trusting yet firm; in all things they were obedient to the command of their Lord; they had the respect of their acquaintances and the love of their friends. "And having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise, God having provided some better thing for us, that they with us should not be made perfect."

This is mother's birthday—written on Aug.9—and I have just come from the cemetery. It is a beautiful place, famed the world over as a city of the dead; yet to us some who lie there are not dead. In blessed sleep they are resting from their earthly labor, and the influence of their work goes journeying on. As we stood there in the shade of a friendly tree, head uncovered, we thanked the Author of all good, the giver of every blessing, that it had been our privilege to have as parents a couple who were touched with his love, who knew of his long-suffering, who believed in his promises, had felt of his grace and accepted his plan of salvation; a couple who appreciated the perfect, obedient life of Jesus, his sacrificial death, saw hope in his resurrection, and who daily lived in the hope of witnessing his glorious return; and with softened heart and audible lips we prayed that as they had believed in and followed after God and his Christ so might we follow after them, being as a beacon light set on a hill, drawing many from the miry valley of sin, destruction, and death, to the heights of the glorious liberty of God to dwell in eternal life with peace and joy.

Yes, they sleep: they rest from the care, the worry, and the turmoil of this mortal life But soon he for whom we faithfully look, anxiously wait, and earnestly pray, shall come and awake them out of sleep. Then they, with us being heirs of God and his Christ, shall come into their inheritance, the perfect kingdom of God. Then shall they experience that rest, that eternal rest, that remaineth to the people of God. "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."

Father and Mother

This grateful, loving song of praise
With hearts attuned to joy we raise
To those who o'er life's dawning years
Kept faithful watch and soothed our fears.
When cloudlets veil life's lofty height
And day seems drifting into night,
They hold aloft the lamp of truth
To brighten, smooth the path of youth.
The future may not write their name
As heroes on the scroll of fame;
But dearer, sweeter, nobler far
They are our life's bright guiding star.

Religion presents few difficulties to the humble, many to the proud, insuperable ones to the vain.

To be honest—to earn a little, and to spend a little less; to make upon the whole a family happier for his presence; to renounce when that shall be necessary and not to be embittered; to keep a few friends, but these without capitulation—above all, on the same grim conditions to keep friends with himself—here is a task for all that man has of fortitude and delicacy.—Stevenson.

God calls us to duty, and the only right answer is obedience. If it can be glad and willing and loving obedience, happy are we, but, in any case, whether we ourselves get enjoyment and blessings from the task or not, the call must be obeyed. The will of God must be done for the sake of God, not for the sake of ourselves. Undertake the duty, and step by step God will provide the disposition. We can at least obey. Ideal obedience includes the whole will and the whole heart. We cannot begin with that. But we can begin with what we have. God calls. It is better to obey blunderigly than not to obey at all.—George Hodges.

BIBLE LESSONS ON FIRST PRINCIPLES

The editor of "The Restitution" is now preparing for publication a series of Bible lessons designed to explain every essential feature of gospel truth. Two lessons of the series have just been published entitled respectively, "Introduction" and "The Word of God in Threefold Aspect." Valuable for conducting Bible studies and classes and for giving Berean lessons, as well as for individual study. Written primarily to teach the elemental principles of the gospel to candidates for baptism. Three cents for one copy; twenty-five cents the dozen.

"Denying the Faith"

A sermon. Both doctrinal and practical. 20 pages; one copy 5 cents; 40 cents per dozen.

"The Death of Christ"

A doctrinal sermon, setting forth scripturally the reality of Christ's death. 3 cents each, or 12 for 25 cents.

"Paradise Lost; Paradise Regained"

A sermon in which every text in the Bible where paradise occurs, either in the English or original tongue, is quoted and explained. 5 cents each; 12 for 40 cents.

"The Bible: Its Principles and Texts"

As indicated by its title, this book is divided into three sections: The first consists of a disquisition on "The Bible;" the second simplifies its "Principles" in formulated propositions; and the third expounds in a homiletic manner particular "Texts." As an Editor, the Author has untied many knotty questions submitted to him by readers; more than a hundred and fifteen are considered in this volume. $1.10 the copy.

VOLUME 69 CLEVELAND, O, OCTOBER 24, 1917 NUMBER 40

NOBODY WANTS HIM

Nobody wants him, God only knows him,
He is too full of laughter,
Too full of cry. His heart is Too big, the tears they will come
When his friends turn him down,
And his mother is gone.

The mother's heart cry:
"O, Savior of men,
Didst thou hear the sweet pleading,
The heart-throb of love,
The cry of protection
For help from above?

"O God, thou who livest,
Thy throne is on high;
May thy mercies, thy love,
Thy compassionate care,
Be with and abide in this child,
In answer to prayer."

Thou knowest that mother,
How tender and sweet,
She pleads for her child;
And lo! at thy feet
She petitioned thy care.

She bowed her head low
And asked him to bless
This dear lonely boy,
The trial and test
Of those who should love him.

And asked from above
For the friendship and love
Of some one who could,
And some one who would,
Love this lone, lonely boy.

How that mother did plead
For the Savior to send
To the heart of some friend
A motive, a need,
A kind word, a kind deed,
For this lone, lone boy,
Whom nobody wants.

"THE SMOKE OF THEIR TORMENT ASCENDETH UP FOREVER"

A Sermon by Robt. G. Huggins[*]

Pastor of the Church of God, 10623 Lee Ave., Cleveland, O

"Then shall he say unto them on his left hand, Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels" (Matt. 25:41).

"And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up for ever and ever: and they have no rest day nor night, who worship the beast and his image, and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name" (Rev. 14:11).

Everlasting Fire Prepared

By comparing the 46th, 41st, and 31st verses of Matthew twenty-fifth chapter we learn that the "cursed" are to suffer "everlasting punishment" when "the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him." They then "depart into everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels." "Prepared" is a very suggestive word. It enables us to see that while the "cursed" are punished at the coming of Christ, the devil and his angels are spared temporarily. As the fire is only "prepared" for them when Jesus returns they are not punished then; but the implication is that sometime later they will be punished like the cursed, at the same place, in the same way, and in the same fire.

Allow us to accentuate these remarks by tracing the analogy between the punishment which is to be inflicted upon the cursed at Christ's coming and the same punishment which is to be meted out to the devil and his angels later. The heaven and earth existing now are "prepared" and "stored" with fire, but it is "reserved," Peter says, "against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men" (2 Pet. 3:7). "Prepared" and "stored" away yet "reserved," it does not break into "flaming fire" until the Lord is revealed from heaven with his mighty angels (2 Thess. 1:7,8). "Prepared" but "reserved" fire then becomes "flaming fire" which, flashing from the hidden power of the Holy One from Mount Paran, becomes visible in pestilence and burning coals (Hab. 3:4,5) which destroy the cursed "from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power" (2 Thess. 1:9). "Our God shall come, and shall not keep silence: a fire shall devour before him, and it shall be very tempestuous round about him" (Psa. 50:3). This "flaming fire" in which Christ is revealed at his coming constitutes [*] Published by the Fellow Helpers' Society.

"the glory of his power" by which he destroys the cursed; not only as individuals, for they have solidified themselves into political and ecclesiastical organizations which must be broken up as well. So the prophet enlarges his view to national proportions and depicts Christ's coming as "the name of the Lord coming from far, burning with his anger, and the burning thereof is heavy: his lips are full of indignation, and his tongue as a devouring fire: and his breath, as an overflowing stream, shall reach to the midst of the neck, to sift the nations with the sieve of vanity" (Isa. 30:27,28). The "devouring fire," the "flaming fire" of Christ's presence, is not confined in its destructive effects to the wicked as individuals who are "cursed in everlasting fire": it acts like "an overflowing stream" and inundates "the nations." All the kingdoms of this world are broken in pieces and consumed (Dan. 2: 44; Rev. 11: 15). A "fiery stream issues and comes forth from before him" (Dan. 7:10) that is fatal to all the beastly governments of men, being particularly deadly to the fourth beast, which represents Rome. This beast is first slain, and then its body is destroyed, "and given to the burning flame" (Dan. 7:11). "The glory of his power" manifested in what Paul calls the "brightness of his coming," consumes the mystery of iniquity from the face of the earth (2 Thess. 2:8), destroys the "cursed" as individuals, and "prepares" an "everlasting fire for the devil and his angels," in which they shall finally suffer the extinction of being.

The Devil and His Angels

As the cursed and the devil and his angels are all punished in "everlasting fire" but at different times, we must differentiate between them. The word "devil" comes from the Greek word diabolos and means "a calumniator or accuser" (see Cruden and Parkhurst). The Bible uses the words "devil" and "sin" as interchangeable terms (Heb. 2:14; 9:26; 1 John 3:5; Rom. 5:12; Jas. 1:15; 1 Cor. 15:56), and therefore it always links the devil with the "flesh and blood" of men. It does this even when speaking of Christ in the days of his flesh (Heb. 2:14; John 6:7; Heb. 5:7). As the wages of sin is death according to God's irreversible and eternal law (Rom. 6:23; Rom. 5:12; Jude 6; 2 Pet. 2; Gen. 3:19; Deut. 32:48,52. 2 Sam. 6:6,7), it follows that both the devil and his angels, the devil and "the works of the devil," are doomed to destruction (Heb. 2:14; 1 John 3:8). Sin as embodied in political and ecclesiastical powers on the King's left hand is destroyed at the coming of Christ. "The Lord comes with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire" (Isa. 66:15). These "flames of fire" are the "everlasting fire" which consume the cursed in an individual sense, as Isa. 66:16 states: "For by fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh: and the slain of the Lord shall be many." Individual sinners are totally destroyed at the return of Christ (Zech. 14:1,4,12). The destruction is universal save that a few "left of the nations" (Zech. 12:16) find "grace in the wilderness"; and these are spared from the sword provided they obey the stringent laws promulgated from Zion by the King of kings when he sits upon his throne (Jer. 31:2; Isa. 2; Matt. 25:31). But the nations, through whom sin has expressed itself, are also fuel for the "flaming fire." Jehovah sends a fire on Magog (Ezek. 39:6), and the beast and false prophet, symbols of papal, political and ecclesiastical systems, together with all Protestant nations, are smitten with the sword and "cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone" (Rev. 19:15,19,20). This lake of fire devours all Catholic and Protestant nations at the coming of Christ, but the devil and his angels are not then thrust into it, although it is then and there "prepared" for them. The devil is deprived of his nations and (false) prophet as organs through which to manifest himself, but he exists still. The descending angel, after plunging the beast and false prophet into the lake of fire proceeds to "bind the devil" with a "great chain"; imprisons, shuts him up and seals him to prison-life for a thousand years (Rev. 20). The culprit is incarcerated, and the lake of fire is "prepared" as the place of his execution, but that is all. The devil bound is sin restrained; and the restraint of sin during the thousand years reign of Christ and the saints results from the fact that they execute "the judgment written" when Christ comes, an "honor" they both have of binding the devil, an apocalyptic symbol which is explained to mean an execution of "vengeance upon the heathen (nations) and punishments upon the people (national and individual punishments combined, notice); to bind their kings with chains, and their nobles with fetters of iron" (Psa. 149:7-9). To execute such a judgment as this upon the nations and their rulers is to "bind the devil" in apocalyptic phraseology.

Everlasting Fire

The terms "everlasting" and "unquenchable" when applied to fire in the word of God signify that it is eternal in its effects. "Fire unquenchable" is puri asbesto in the Greek. Eusebius makes use of this very term when speaking of the martyrdom of Julian, Cronion Epimachus and other Christians at Alexandria (Eccl. History, 6: 41). Eusebius was a Christian bishop and a learned Greek who lived within three hundred years of Christ. He surely knew how to use his mother tongue accurately and write it correctly, and he says martyrs were consumed in "unquenchable fire." If unquenchable fire burnt up saints, as Eusebius declares, certainly it can burn up sinners, as the word of God affirms. And the classical reader will recall the famous passage of Homer where he speaks of the Trojans hurling "unquenchable fire" upon the Grecian ships (Homer, Iliad, 16:123,194). Unquenchable fire means a fire that cannot be extinguished until it consumes all the fuel on which it preys. Eternal preservation and torment form no part of its meaning. Scriptural illustrations are many which show this. An unquenchable fire is said to be poured "upon man, and upon beast, and upon the trees of the field, and upon the fruit of the ground" in Jer. 7:20; but certainly no one understands by this that "beast," "trees," and "fruit" are tortured eternally in hell! "I will kindle a fire in the gates (of Jerusalem), and it shall devour the palaces of Jerusalem, and it shall not be quenched" (Jer. 17: 27). This certainly cannot mean that "the palaces of Jerusalem" were to be preserved and tormented eternally! We understand that unquenchable fire is "everlasting fire," burning like an oven; "and all the proud, yea, and all they that do wickedly, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch" (Mal. 4: 1). Everlasting fire inflicts an "everlasting destruction" upon the wicked (2 Thess. 1: 9). "They shall be ashes under the soles of your feet in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of hosts" (Mal. 4: 3).

"The Smoke of Their Torment Ascendeth up Forever and Ever"

With the fund of scriptural information which we have now acquired about the devil and his angels, unquenchable and everlasting fire, we are qualified to understand Rev. 14: 11: "And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever." This passage is confidently relied upon to prove the existence of a hell of eternal woe. That this is a mistaken interpretation of the text is manifest when we read Isaiah 34th chapter, the fountain head of Rev. 14: 10, 11. In predicting judgment upon Idumea the prophet says in verses 9: 10: "The streams thereof shall be turned into pitch, and the dust thereof into brimstone, and the land thereof shall become burning pitch. It shall not be quenched night nor day; the smoke thereof shall go up forever: from generation to generation it shall lie waste." As this prophecy pertains to the past and not the future, we have the facts of history to give us a clew to its interpretation. The poetic figures of Idumea's judgment, such as the perpetual furnace of burning pitch, brimstone, unquenchable fire and smoke ascending forever, are all reproduced in Rev. 14: 10,11. The meaning of these figures in both texts is therefore the same. Isaiah 34 describes Idumea's irrecoverable ruin and gives a spectacle of God's vengeance to all succeeding ages. This is the essence of his figures when they are reduced to sober prose. A hell of woe as generally understood and believed is not described by them. Any one, it seems to us, must see this simply by reading the chapter. "The cormorant (pelican) and the bittern shall possess it; the owl also and the ravens shall dwell in it" (vs. 11). The popular mind never conceives of these birds being in hell, suffering eternal torment! "There shall the great owl make her nest, and lay, and hatch, and gather under her shadow: there shall the vultures also be gathered, every one with his mate" (vs. 15). Owls, ravens, and vultures do not live in the popular hell; they do not make nests, lay eggs, and "hatch" them there! The orthodox mind could conceive how eggs might be cooked in the regions of the lost, but "hatched"—never! From his viewpoint the place is so hot that the mother bird's "shadow" would make no shade whatever for her little babes.

Now Isaiah 34 is the historic basis of Rev. 14: 10,11. Idumea's judgment is a type of Babylon's when Jesus comes. Therefore we observe that as Isaiah did not describe the hell of popular conception by his poetic figures, neither does the apocalyptic seer in the images he borrows from the evangelistic prophet. In John's smoke that ascends forever there are "fowls" and "horses" as well as men (Rev. 19: 17,18), but even orthodoxy grants them exemption from eternal torture. Rev. 14: 10, 11 then is certainly not a description of the orthodox hell.

The pertinent question now presents itself as to what John really means by the smoke of torment ascending forever. The smoke ascends forever, you will notice, not the torment. Read Rev. 14 : 10,11; 18: 20,21,24, and the entire 19th chapter and you will learn that at the return of Jesus Babylon (Rome) is swallowed up by a volcanic earthquake after the analogy of Num. 16: 32. A mighty angel took a great millstone and cast it into the sea to show John how violently and suddenly Rome is to go down (Rev. 18: 21). After going down in a volcano "her smoke rose up forever" amid the joyous alleluias of the redeemed (Rev. 19: 3). In this way "the beast was taken and with him the false prophet. . . . .These both were cast alive into a lake of fire burning with brimstone" (Rev. 19: 20). When Rome sinks into this volcanic abyss a "lake of fire" is formed; and as the "smoke ascends forever" from this lake, it ascends "in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb" (Rev. 14: 10), because when Christ comes all the holy angels come with him (Matt. 25 : 31). Smouldering Rome will be an "example" to sinners during the reign of Christ as the Dead Sea has been a memorial of Sodom for centuries—a warning to all who live ungodly. It appears from Isa. 66: 23 24 that the carcasses of transgressors will be monuments of God's wrath in the new earth, "an abhorring unto all flesh." It seems, then, that John, with admirable wisdom, combines past judgments with future ones; he uses judgments accomplished to illustrate those hereafter, using the same expressions to describe both. Temporal judgments are not mere types of the eternal: they are identical, the first often being an "example" of the second (Luke 13: 3; 1 Cor. 10: 9-11; Jude 7; 2 Pet. 2: 6). To make these "examples" of temporal judgments consonant with endless misery is a task we leave in the hands of the advocates of eternal agony.

Destruction of the Devil A Thousand Years After the Beast

When Christ comes he destroys both the beast and false prophet in a "lake of fire burning with brimstone" (Rev. 19: 20); the wicked also perish at the same time and in the same lake. Rome sinks in volcanic convulsions, which form the lake of fire that emits memorial smoke during the millennium. The lake of fire thus "prepared for the devil and his angels" is the "bottomless pit" in which the devil is bound during the thousand years (Rev. 20). The tenth verse of this chapter now becomes, in view of these facts, deeply significant: "And the devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and false prophet are." There is no Greek word for "are" in the text, and the translators have filled the hiatus with the wrong word. The beast and false prophet had been cast into this smoking lake, as you may see from Rev. 19:20. A millennium now elapses, the lake smoking, and the fire "prepared," and now the time comes for the devil to be cast into the same lake the beast and false prophet had perished in a thousand years before; therefore Rev. 20:10 is correctly translated: "And the devil that deceived them was cast into a lake of fire and brimstone, where the beast and false prophet were cast." "Fire from God out of heaven" (vs. 9) is now added to the seething, smoking volcano of Rome, and all belligerents are electrocuted, "devoured"; "and the devil that deceived them was cast into a lake of fire and brimstone ('prepared for the devil and his angels'—the belligerents deceived by him), where the beast and false prophet (had been cast a thousand years before), and shall be tormented day and night forever and ever" (Rev. 20:9,10).

"Tormented" and "Forever"

Terms of Limited Time Lexically and Scripturally

The words "tormented" and "forever" in this passage have been made to do service for the cruel doctrine of eternal torment. Just a word or two about them in conclusion. "Torment" is a word of temporary duration, and is applied to things without life as to living things. The same Greek verb translated "torment" is used to describe the "tossing" of the boat in Matt. 14:24. In Heb. 11:37 Paul speaks of the ancient worthies "being destitute, afflicted, tormented": but he never dreamed of saying those men of "whom the world was not worthy" suffered or would suffer, eternal torture. The word is plainly of limited duration.

The Greek word aion, translated "forever," and its adjective aionios, rendered "everlasting," is often used with a limited meaning. Neither of these words, of themselves, signify eternity. Stuart says of aion, page 15: "The classical sense of aion is (1) length or space of time, time of life, age of man, age considered as a space of time; (2) long time, eternity, long indefinite space of time. These are the usual significations given by lexicographers." Clearly, then, aion may signify a short or long time, time or eternity. Bible usage sustains this indefinite sense of the word. In Matt. 13:39 we read of aion, forever: "So will it be at the end of this forever (aionos): the harvest is the end of this forever" (aionos). The end of forever! Very unorthodox language, but it is biblical nevertheless.

"Tormented day and night forever and ever" in Rev. 20:10 is limited by John in several ways. In the first place, he says only "a little season" is meant by the phrase (vs. 3). Again he limits the torment by saying it is to last only while "day and night" continue to alternate. After seeing Christ enthroned on Mount Zion (Rev. 19:1), Rome overthrown, the beast and false prophet destroyed (vs. 20), the reign of Christ and the saints one thousand years accomplished (Rev. 20:4), a "little season" of judgment after that expired (vs. 3)—then he sees a new heaven and a new earth. "There shall be no night there" (Rev. 21:25). "It shall be one day (continually) . . . not day nor night (alternating as now): but it shall come to pass, that at evening time (when usually darkness enshrouds the earth) it shall be light" (Zech. 14:7). The Lord be praised, there shall be no smoke, torment, fire, brimstone lake of fire, death, hell, tears, sorrow, nor crying, "neither shall there be any more pain: for the(se) former things are passed away. And he that sat upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new" (Rev. 21:4,5).

A SERIOUS EXHORTATION

"If the righteous scarcely be saved, where shall the ungodly and the sinner appear?" (1 Pet. 4:18).

The question arises who will be saved? The answer is, those who are in Christ. To be in Christ we must hear, understand and believe the gospel and become obedient in the ordinance of baptism and live Christian lives, following Jesus' example.

2 Cor. 2:17: "Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature: old things have passed away; behold, all things have become new." The convert should forsake all his sins, and start a new life, search the Scriptures daily, and make them his guide and counsellor. Galatians 3:29: "And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." If we are in Christ we are joint heirs with him and Abraham. Jesus is the seed that God promised to Abraham. Gen. 22:18: "And in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed; because thou hast obeyed my voice."

If we are in Christ, we must obey his voice if we obtain the reward that will be given at the resurrection of the just. This is no easy task as many of us know. But many appear to think that if they have their names on the Church roll that is all that is required; they can go on as the rest of the world does. The parable of the ten virgins illustrates the condition of some churches: only half were ready to go in with the Lord.

Our fleshly natures are contrary to the spirit. We are easily led astray, as our first parents were. See what Paul says in Gal. 5:16, Rotherham's version: "I say moreover, by spirit be walking, and fleshly coveting ye will in no wise fulfill; for the flesh coveteth against the spirit, but the spirit against the flesh; for these unto one another are opposed, lest whatsoever things ye chance to desire these ye should be doing! And if by spirit ye are being led ye are not under law. Manifest however are the works of the flesh, which indeed are fornication, impurity, wantonness, idolatry, enchantment, enmity, strife, jealousy, outbursts of wrath, factions, parties, envying, drunkenness, revellings; and such things as these: as to which I forewarn you, even as I have forewarned you that they who such things as these do practice shall not inherit God's kingdom. But the fruit of the spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, graciousness, goodness, faithfulness, meekness, self-control: against such things as these there is no law And they who are of Christ Jesus have crucified the flesh with its susceptibilities and coveting. If we live by spirit, by spirit let us all walk."

According to this Scripture there is a great difference between the works of the flesh and the works of the spirit. There is no middle ground: we are doing the "works" of either the one or the other. "We cannot serve two masters." So we must make our choice. We can deceive ourselves, but we cannot deceive God.

USELESS ADORNMENTS

Just because a few people go to an extreme in harping on dress and outward adorning, the great majority of us seem to pay no attention to the extravagence in dress and jewelry which is swamping so many souls in darkness. There are some people so fastidious and squeamish that they cannot bear to have their outer adornments alluded to without showing an uneasiness. It is true that we must drive plainly at the heart and get that right; but poor human nature is so blind and slow to learn that we must, according to God's word, look after the practical details of holiness as well as the doctrine and experience. It is a shame to see so many all professing holiness dangling off in the heathenish habit of jewelry. You say where is the dividing line in this matter of what, and what not, to put on. I say that in legitimate articles of dress, no one can draw the absolute line, but in articles of jewelry which are absolutely useless, it seem that anyone ought to be able to draw the line.

Ear-rings, finger-rings, bracelets, gold chains, charms, trinklest, etc., are not articles of clothing; they add nothing to comfort or convenience; they give neither protection to health, nor beauty to the human body; they are absolutely without a rational use and conduce to nothing in the world but vanity. Now anything that is utterly useless can only be harmful.

You say that the wearing of jewelry is a life long habit with you, and does not stand in your way. I reply that many sins are life long habits and do not stand in the way of those who commit them. Some have been lying, and stealing and backbiting ever since their childhood, and they say these things do not stand in their way; they can commit these sins, day after day, just as thoughtlessly as you can trick yourself out in useless adornments.

You say that these rings, or bracelets or charms were inherited from your dear parents and you wear them for their sakes. Well, you inherited your depravity from your parents; some persons inherit their thirst for liquor from their parents, and if we are going into the heirloom business why not deck ourselves out in all the vices of our parents? If one is decked out in dear grandmother's jewelry, why should not another be decked out in dear grandfather's drunkenness? Where is the difference? If we are born of God we must drop the inherited things of the first Adam, and put on the things of the second Adam. You say wearing jewelry does not hurt you. That is just what the people say who drink wine and dance. You say you enjoy the love of God, or a clean heart, and wear useless ornaments which God forbids and say it does not hurt you. If you would follow all the words of Scripture, it would hurt you. Nay, it does hurt you already more than you dream of.

Some may say, "Why, I never think of these little ornaments." Well, if you never think of them why do you always remember to put the stuff on? What a lovely sight to see men and women modestly arrayed with bright salvation faces, with ears, hands and necks clean from the senseless trappings of vanity! And what an ugly, incongruous sight to see them tricked out in satan's trash! Yes I say, get the heart right first; but your heart will not stay right if you keep on the external garb of satan.—From a Tract.

SAFE AT LAST

A man who was continually losing his collar button while dressing complained to his wife about it. With an ingenuity born of the use of hairpins, she told him to hold his collar button in his mouth. The next morning she was startled by an unusual commotion.

"What's the matter?" she asked anxiously.

"I've swallowed the collar button," said the man.

"Well," responded his wife, "there's one comfort; for once in your life you know where it is."

DON'T FORGET THE HELPING FUND

We whose names are given below, believing it to be our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the manager of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. Those whose circumstances do not permit of the paying for the paper themselves should notify the manager, signifying their willingness to accept the paper, and it will be cheerfully sent from the proceeds of this fund.

EDITORIAL

As October 30th is a fifth Tuesday, the next Restitution will be dated November 6th.

From special notices received it appears that Brother A. S. Bradley is making a lecturing tour in Texas. May God bless the seed of the kingdom as he sows it with a faithful and a generous hand.

Brother B. F. Smith offers $100.00 towards the republication of Brother Wiley Jones' ten sermons entitled "The Gospel of the Kingdom." It is very generous and commendable in Brother Smith to make this offer, and we hope a few other brethren blessed with financial ability will join hands with him in financing this laudable effort to give us and the world good literature in exposition of the gospel. If any feels moved to join Brother Smith in this work, and would like to see a copy of the sermons it is proposed to reprint, we will gladly send him a copy from our library for examination.

The sermon by the editor in this number entitled "The Smoke of Their Torment Assendeth up Forever" has been published by the Fellow-Helpers' Society in a twelve page booklet, four and one-half by seven inches. Price three cents each; twenty-five cents per dozen. The most plausable texts used to defend the pagan doctrine of endless torture are explained consistently with the humane and scriptural doctrine of destruction, and prophetically it sets forth the penal retribution of God upon the beast and false prophet at the coming of Christ, and the destruction of the devil and his angels a thousand years subsequently. We ask brethren and sisters, Berean Societies, and all our exchanges to join the Fellow-Helpers in giving this sermon a wide circulaton.

Many subscriptions to The Restitution will soon be due. With the price of everything high and still advancing, it looks like an impossibility for the Directors of the paper to offer it the coming year at the same old price of $1.50, but this is what they propose to do. The Restitution carries no paid advertisements; it depends entirely upon subscriptions to pay the expenses of its publication. It offers no glittering "premiums" to induce you to take it, like the world offers for its inferior periodicals. It advocates and teaches "the gospel of the kingdom" continually, uncompromisingly, and plainly; and if you love the truth it asks you to contribute either out of your riches or poverty, to help sustain and support it. This is our appeal—if you love the truth support The Restitution willingly and liberally. Please send your renewal soon.

SALUTATION OF THE SEVEN CHURCHES DESTRUCTIVE OF THE PERSONALITY OF THE HOLY SPIRIT

"Grace be unto you, and peace from him which is . . . . and from the seven spirits . . . . and from Jesus Christ" (Rev. 1:4,5).

I. Trinitarian Interpretation Stated

1. "Grace and peace" imply superiority; always personality.
2. Angels (Rev. 22:8,9).
3. The Holy Spirit.

II. The Spirit of God is not a Person, but the Power of a Person

1. Called "he" in parabolic language owing to the exigencies of grammar. Not a person: if so, the Holy Spirit is the only being in the universe without a name! (1) (John 14:16,17; 16:13-25; 1 Pet. 1:11; Rom. 8:26).

2. It is the power of God (1 Cor. 2:9-13; Luke 24:49; Acts 1:8; Mi. 3:8; John 15:26).

3. Power of animals; charming power of serpents.

4 Power of man; mesmerism, hypnotism, etc. (Gen. 1:26).

5. Power of God (1 Cor. 12:13; John 15:26).

6. "Pouring," a metaphor frequently applied to the Holy Spirit, is destructive of its personality (Isa. 42:1; John 3:34; Acts 10:38; Isa. 63.11).

III. "Before His Throne"

1. Nowhere in the Bible are we taught to love, pray to, or worship the Holy Spirit.

2. "Before": not on his throne (vs. 4;4:5;7:9,15; 8.2; 11:4,16; 12:10; 14:3; 20:12).

IV. The Apocalyptic Salutation Explained by Comparison with the Greetings in the Apostolic Epistles

1. There are twelve salutations in the Epistles: in not one of them is the Holy Spirit so much as mentioned! (1 Cor. 1:3; Rom. 1:7; 2 Cor. 1:2; Gal. 1:3; Eph. 1:2; Phil. 1:2; Col. 1:2; 1 Thess. 1:1; 2 Thess. 1:2; 1 Tim. 1:2; 2 Tim. 1:2; Phile. 3).

(1) The article "the" never stands before a name. We do not say, we cannot say, "the Paul, the James, the Jesus," etc.; nor could we say "the Holy Spirit" if it were a name.

THE GOSPEL FOR ALL

No. XII.

The Jews were at one time the people who received God's high but unmerited favor. Instead of God's favor making them humble and grateful to him, and desirous of manifesting to others, less favored, the love he was showing them, they became proud and boastful of their high position in God's plan, and called forth Jesus' burning condemnation: "Woe unto you scribes and pharisees, hypocrites! for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men, for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in" (Matt. 23:13). The Jewish nation, as God's chosen people, was typical of the church as God's chosen people. The antitype must heed the warning in the type.

Humble believers will follow Jesus' example found in John 12:47,48: "If any man hear my word and believe not, I judge him not; for I came not to judge the world, but to save the world. He that rejecteth me and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him: the words that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day." By Christ's own words even hearers who remain unbelievers, do not receive sentence until the last day. If the ignorant and those who know, but refuse, pass into eternal death during this age, then there are as many judgment days as the orthodox belief of heaven going requires. The pronouncing of the eternal sentence upon individuals is in the hands of an all-wise and loving God who, in the ages to come, will show the exceeding riches of his grace in his kindness to us through Jesus Christ. What if in the ages to come, he should use us, to whom he has shown so much kindness through Christ Jesus, as instruments to show the exceeding riches of his grace until all men who are not "vessels of wrath fitted to destruction" (Rom. 9:22), are drawn to him? "And I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all unto me," are the words of Jesus (John 12:32). He endured the cross, despising the shame, for the joy set before him. What joy? The joy of seeing himself in all the glory and honor of immortality and a world-wide king? Such joy would be selfishness. It was rather the joy in knowing that he, as such a king, would be able to lift the curse of sin and death, and bring happiness to all who have suffered under it, if they only accept his service of love when they learn of the offer.—Alta King.

EDITOR'S REPLY

Two Weak, Puerile Arguments Pleaded Before God

Resuming my argument I plead that all must come to an understanding of the truth. "What if, in the ages to come, he should use us, to whom he has showed so much kindness through Christ Jesus, as instruments to show the exceeding riches of his grace, until all men are drawn to him?" "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me."

God Explains These Two Passages of Scripture

Your fluent exhortation inculcating humility of heart and gratitude of spirit for God's kindness to you, is appreciated. Truly this is the "time of visitation" which he has graciously granted to you (Luke 19:44). But the moment you try to prove by the Bible that those who "know not the time of their visitation" (Luke 19:44) are to have another "visitation" of the gospel in the coming age, your brilliance which was so conspicuous in exhortation, fades. Your Bible arguments are manifestly weak and painfully puerile. Only two Scriptures are used to sustain the theory of Larger Hope. The first is garbled and the second is used arbitrarily. The "exceeding riches of his grace" and the "kindness" relating to "the ages to come" spoken of in Eph. 2:7 are "toward us, through Christ Jesus." "Toward us" —not somebody else!

The second text is quoted more correctly: "I, if I be lifted up from the earth, will draw all men unto me" (John 12:32). The expression "all men" is the magnet of attraction here. But "men" is a supplied word, and is not in the Greek text. You are welcome to the "all" provided you will give up the "men." "All" is of little worth with no "men" included in it. But "all men" here does not teach that all will be drawn into an understanding of the truth in the coming age any more than in this age; and it is no more universal in its scope of meaning than when Luke says of Christ's ministry upon one occasion, "Then drew near unto him all the publicans and sinners for to hear him" (Luke 15:1). Does this statement mean that all the publicans of Judea and all the sinners of the Roman Empire were present when this sermon was given? O ye of little understanding! Read John 12:32; Rom. 5:18; 11:32; 1 Tim. 2:4; 1 John 2:2, and you will learn how the pencil of inspiration has drawn a bright and joyous picture of the gospel—a plan of divine mercy embracing the whole world, all sinners without distinction; but it relates to an offered grace, not to a necessary effect. Paul's expression in Rom. 5:19; hoi polloi, designates humanity in the collective sense. However, such a general expression admits of many exceptions. If I say that Jenner's discovery has delivered "humanity" from a terrible scourge, I would not, in so saying, mean to deny that thousands of children and adults die of smallpox in countries where vaccination is not practiced.

John 12:32 and many similar texts relate, as I have said, "to an offered grace, not to a necessary effect." Your admiration of this gracious truth must not cause you to forget that men may still "make void the plan of God as respects themselves" (Ethetesan) (Luke 7:30). My Son states the facts concisely in these words: "How often would I have gathered thy children together, as a hen gathereth her brood under wings, and ye would not" (Luke 13:34; cf. John 15:22,23) ! Jesus embraces and "draws" the world in his love; but how many there are who resist him and say to both him and me: "Let us break their bands asunder and cast away their cords from us" (Psa. 2: 3) ! Thus it comes to pass that while he "draws all," thousands are not responsive to his magnetic touch.

BAPTISM

The South Bend Church put forth an extra effort at their regular services for October 7th, and we enjoyed a very good attendance and interest. At the afternoon meeting Brother and Sister Richard Reed confessed their faith in the gospel message and immediately afterwards we went to the St. Joe River and administered baptism. At the evening service we extended to them the right hand of fellowship. They will put their membership in with the Morning Star Church near Bourbon. We are glad to welcome Brother and Sister Reed and bid them Godspeed in the race for the mark for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. They came to take this step after careful study from their own research, and from the teaching of Brother J. H. Anderson, from the solicitations of Brother R. C. Railsback and others. May the Lord richly bless them.

APPEAL FOR NEBRASKA TRACT FUND

Dear Restitution:

I am now arranging for a supply of tracts for use in the state of Nebraska, and hope all the brethren and local churches will assist in the distribution of these tracts.

As we approach the end of the age it becomes more apparent every day of the need for spreading the gospel. I wish to say in the way of appeal to the loyal brethren of Nebraska, send some donations for this Tract Fund to Sister Lulu Pickering, of Freedom, Neb.

When you read this please do not lay it aside and then forget it, but act on it while it is fresh in your minds. A few cents or a dollar from each one will make a sufficient sum to carry out this work, and remember, it may be the means of bringing someone to the knowledge of the truth.

It seems to me a very important work and should elicit the combined help of all. As Secretary of the Berean Tract Society I make this appeal, because I wish to do my duty and be busy getting out tracts, but I can not do this alone: the work must be accomplished by our combined efforts. We do not wish to confine either the contributions or the distributions to Nebraska only: a contribution from anyone will be thankfully received.

Another thing I wish to menton is, look for and notify me of anyone whom you think might desire some of these tracts, also mentioning the subjects you think they would be most interested in. Now, brethren, please send your donations to Sister Pickering and we will try to secure tracts which will meet all your demands.

In conclusion, I wish to say it so common for us to lay papers aside having such appeals in, thinking that some time later we will respond. Then when the spirit does move us we find that days, weeks, and sometimes months have elapsed; the paper has disappeared and consequently the address is lost. Then we have to make the excuse that we cannot respond on account of this neglect. There are just two ways to avoid any such contingencies: First, act at once when possible; second, file the address away where you may easily put your hand on it when needed. This is a business way, the way God desires things done, for he says, "Let everything be done decently and in order." So what you do "do quickly," for the opportunity may pass never to return.

Who will be the first to respond ?

Ethel Hargleroad, Secretary,
Stratton, Nebraska.

REPORT OF THE NEBRASKA STATE BEREAN SOCIETY CONFERENCE

The Nebraska State Berean Society was organized in August, 1916.

First conference held at Cambridge, August 31, 1917.

Program

Brother Russell E. Zeller gave an address outlining the aims and purposes of the Berean Society.

Instrumental duet by Sisters Maud and Ethel Hargleroad.

Address by Brother John Hammond in which he told of the work of the Society at Avery, Neb.

Reports of the Secretary and Treasurer were then read.

Vocal duet by Sister Myrtle Adams and Ethel Hargleroad.

Suggestions to hold one model Berean class for the benefit of new beginners. This class was held later in which a collection was taken for the Tract Fund.

The following officers were elected:
Brother R. E. Zeller, President;
Sister Rose Storiohn, Vice-President; and Sister Lulu Pickering, Secretary and Treasurer.

Lulu Pickering, Secretary.

REPORT OF INDIANA BUSINESS MEETING

Held at Roll, Ind., Aug, 11, 1917.

The meeting was called to order by the President. Lulu Stilson was appointed Secretary pro. tem. and read the minutes of the last meeting.

Aug. 11,	1917, Balance on hand		45.51

Reports of the work of the classes over the state were heard.

The question of relationship of the state to the national organization was then taken up and discussed. It seemed to be the sense of the meeting that the portion of dues to be sent to national society should be about one-tenth instead of one half, with the hope that we might co-operate more fully on this basis.

In accordance with a request from the National Organization that we elect a member on the outline committee, Floyd Stilson was elected for this work. Lydia Railsback was chosen isolated committee.

Election of officers resulted as follows:
Emma Railsback, President;
Lulu Stilson, Vice-President;
Florence Reed, Recording Secretary;
Mabel Strawn, Corresponding Secretary; and Leora Roose, Treasurer.

Per. Lulu Stilson, Sec. Pro. Tem.

OBITUARIES

Ethel Cordray-Jaconet was born September 27, 1896. She was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Edward Cordray but had lived with her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Cordray, for nine years. She was married about four months ago to Maine Jacone , and they had gotten just nicely settled to housekeeping at 611 E. Kalarma Street, when she was stricken with typhoid fever (quit prevalent in the city), and died Oct. 8, 1917. She was baptized June 14, 1912, by Brother Williams and united with the Church of God in South Bend where she was a member at the time of her death.

Funeral services were held at the residence at 2:30, October 10th. The home was filled with friends and neighbors to whom we spoke words of comfort and hope from Heb. 2:5-9.

D. E. VanVactor.

Michell

On Oct. 11, 1917, Jane Michell, in her 79th year. Funeral services Saturday, October 13, at 8 p. m., at her late residence, 50 Jefferson Ave. Brooklyn, N. Y. Interment at Hoboken Cemetery.

Our Sister Michell was a sincere upright Christian. She had a thorough knowledge of the Bible, and believed it to be the true word of God, the method God has of communicating his plan of salvation unto man; and that its peges contained all that is necessary to make man happy, contented, and joyful here as well as give him eternal life in the kingdom of God. She never tired of imparting her knowledge to others "who know not God and who keep not his commandments." But now the earthly race is run, her voice is still, for, through sin that now reigneth she has fallen on sleep. She "rests from her labors and her works will follow her." But though she did receive a good report through faith, she received not the promise, God having provided some better thing for us, that she without us should not be made perfect." We know that her hope for perfection soon shall be realized, for in these great troubles that have visited the earth she, with us, saw the sign of the soon coming of the Son of God. And when he does come our Sister Michell shall be raised, perfected, immortalized--she shall be like her Lord for she shall see him as he is.

Our sympathy is extended to her children and grandchildren, also to the Church of God at Brooklyn, for we all have lost a wise counsellor and a loving friend.

Prayer is the greatest force we can wield. God has given it to every Christian. There is a democracy in this matter. We may differ as to wealth, social position, education, native ability, inherent characteristics, but in this matter in exercising the greatest force that is at work today, we are on the same footing.

The Two Glasses

There sat two glasses filled to the brim,
On a rich man's table, rim to rim,
One was ruddy and red as blood
And one was clear as the crystal flood.

Said the glass of wine to his paler brother,
"Let us tell tales of the past to each other.
I can tell of banquet and revel and mirth
Where I was king, for I ruled in might;
For the proudest and grandest souls on earth
Fell under my touch as though struck with blight.
From the heads of kings I have torn the crown;
From the height of fame I have hurled men down.
I have blasted many an honored name;
I have taken virtue and given shame;
I have tempted the youth with a sip, a taste,
That has made his future a barren waste.
Far greater than any king am I,
Or than any army beneath the sky.
I have made the arm of the driver fall,
I have sent the train from the iron rail.
I have made good ships go down to sea,
And the shrieks of the lost were sweet to me.
Fame, strength, wealth, genius before me fall
And my might and power are over all.
Ho, ho, pale brother," said the wine,
"Can you boast of deeds as great as mine?"

Said the water glass, "I cannot boast
Of a king dethroned or a murdered host,
But I can tell of hearts that were sad
By my crystal drops made bright and glad;
Of thirsts I have quenched, and brows I have laved;
Of hands I have cooled and souls I have saved.
I have leaped through the valley, dashed down the mountain,
Slept in the sunshine and dripped from the fountain.
I have burst my cloud fetters and dropped from the sky
And everywhere gladdened the prospect and eye;
I have eased the hot forehead of fever and pain,
I have made the parched meadows grow fertile with grain.
I can tell of the powerful wheel of the mill,
I can tell of manhood debased by you
That I have uplifted and crowned anew;
I cheer, I help, I strengthen and aid;
I gladden the heart of man and maid.
I set the wine chained captive free
And all are better for knowing me."

These are the tales they told each other,
The glass of wine and its paler brother,
As they sat together filled to the brim
On a rich man's table, rim to rim.

Dr. William Brady
Uses Very Plain Language Regarding Tobacco.

Scientific physicians all agree that tobacco, when used by minors, that is to say, boys under 25, causes a measurable reduction of mental and physical effeciency. Every practicing doctor knows that tobacco is a cause of hardening of the arteries. Good authorities believe that it favors lip, tongue and throat cancer. And the man on the street is well aware that it produces "heartburn," stomach trouble, disturbed heart function and catarrhal conditions of the throat. Some of the most distressing cases of angina pectoris (heart pang) are unquestionably caused by tobacco and relieved only when tobacco is given up. Tobacco amblyopia (loss of vision) is well known.

I personally believe that tobacco, when used by boys under 25, almost invariably leads to moral weakness. Therefore, as a doctor, I believe it should be made a very serious crime for a boy under 25 years of age to have tobacco in his possession. I am speaking, if you please, as a physician of experience.

Some tobacco users can break the habit by an effort of the will. More require assistance. So it may be well to repeat here the measures which have proved helpful in beating old Nicotine.

1. Adopt a diet without meat, fish or eggs for a period of not less than three weeks. (This includes meat soups). Meat extractives, being stimulating, whet the craving for tobacco.

2. Eat apples or other whole fresh fruits three times a day. Fruit acids diminish the craving.

3. Keep some good candy on hand and eat some when the desire for tobacco grows insistent. Sugar is an immediately available source of energy, and an antidote to alcohol and tobacco appetite.

4. Avoid the association of smokers.

5. Walk at least two miles a day, or take fifteen minutes of gymnastic exercise at home—enough to get a little tired.

6. Rinse the mouth and gargle the throat night and morning with a very weak solution of silver nitrate—thirty grains (30) in a pint of distilled water, kept in an amber bottle away from the light. Use not over a tablespoonful at a time.

7. If your general condition warrants it, ask your doctor to prescribe an active tonic for temporary use, but beware of alleged tonics containing alcohol.

8. If the intestinal function is not active, take every second morning a full dose of any saline cathartic—epsom, rochelle, carlsbad salts, phosphate of soda, seidlitz powder, magnesium citrate, it does not not matter what saline.

Follow this regimen for three weeks and you will have conquered the habit.

Shoes with quickly detachable soles and heels have been invented by a Frenchman for railroad men to enable them to escape should their feet be caught in the rails.

If you have a son and fortune, keep them apart.

School Boys and Cigarettes

Medical authorities trace serious diseases to the habitual use of cigarettes, especially by persons not yet mature.

Willis Brown field organizer of the anti-cigarette league, reported that in the seventh and eighth grades of a school in Columbus, Ohio, out of forty-one boys thirty-six had used or were smoking cigarettes. Out of thirty-five boys in the fifth and sixth grades there were twenty-six smokers. In the third and fourth grades, composed of boys from eight to twelve years of age, there were only eleven out of fifty-three that did not smoke. Of the whole one hundred and twenty-nine boys over eighty-two per cent were cigarette users. This school, it may be said, is attended by Jews, Italians, Poles and colored boys.

In another school where the pupils came from better homes, the statictics are equally startling. In the first eighth and second eighth grades, out of thirty-three only two had not smoked cigarettes. In the two seventh grades two out of fifty-three did not smoke. In the fifth and sixth grades out of fifty-nine, fifty were smokers. In the total of one hundred and ninety-eight boys over eighty-three per cent smoked.

In the Fort Wayne, Indiana, school seventy-one per cent smoked. In the Liberty Grammar school of Pittsburg Penn., fourteen out of fifty-five did not smoke. Boys, boys, do not begin, then you will not be asked to quit.

A Practical Lesson on Temperance
An Expensive Family

The following figures compiled by Prof. Belman, of the university of Bonn, relates the career of a notorious drunkard who was born in 1740, and died in [illegible]. Her descendants numbered eight hundred and thiry-four of whom seven hundred and nine have been traced from their youth. Of these seven were convicted of murder, seventy six of other crimes, one hundred and forty-two were professional beggers, sixty-four lived on charity, and one hundred and eighty one women of the family led disreputable lives. The family cost the German government for maintenance and costs in the courts, almshouses, and prisons no less a sum than $1,250,000. In other words, just a fraction under $1,500 each.—Copied from the Orange Judd Farmer, Jan. 9, 1897, by E. W. Knapp.

BIBLE LESSONS ON FIRST PRINCIPLES

The editor of "The Restitution" is now preparing for publication a series of Bible lessons designed to explain every essential feature of gospel truth. Two lessons of the series have just been published entitled respectively, "Introduction" and "The Word of God in Threefold Aspect." Valuable for conducting Bible studies and classes and for giving Berean lessons, as well as for individual study. Written primarily to teach the elemental principles of the gospel to candidates for baptism. Three cents for one copy; twenty-five cents the dozen.

"Denying the Faith"

A sermon. Both doctrinal and practical. 20 pages; one copy 5 cents; 40 cents per dozen.

"The Death of Christ"

A doctrinal sermon, setting forth scripturally the reality of Christ's death. 3 cents each, or 12 for 25 cents.

"Paradise Lost; Paradise Regained"

A sermon in which every text in the Bible where paradise occurs, either in the English or original tongue, is quoted and explained. 5 cents each; 12 for 40 cents.

"The Bible: Its Principles and Texts"

As indicated by its title, this book is divided into three sections: The first consists of a disquisition on "The Bible;" the second simplifies its "Principles" in formulated propositions; and the third expounds in a homiletic manner particular "Texts." As an Editor, the Author has untied many knotty questions submitted to him by readers; more than a hundred and fifteen are considered in this volume. $1.10 the copy.

A PAPER REPRESENTING THE CHURCH OF GOD, AND DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF "THE THINGS CONCERNING THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND THE NAME OF JESUS CHRIST" (ACTS 8:12)

VOLUME 69 CLEVELAND, O. NOVEMBER 6, 1917 NUMBER 41

WAR, REDEMPTION, BLISS

When we hear of murderous war,
Spreading o'er the earth afar;
When nations rise in greed and strife,
To rob their neighbor and take his life;
When oceans roar, and earthquake shock,
Lift up your heads, ye little flock,
Know your redemption draweth nigh,
Your Lord will meet you in the sky.

Then when the world is bathed in blood,
And sorrow comes, a rushing flood;
Nations then shall pass away,
Before God's great and awful day;
Then we shall be within the fold,
As prophesied by seers of old;
And when the carnage at last is o'er,
And Christ shall open wide the door;
With him then the saints descend;
Their songs of praise shall never end;
While endless ages roll away,
As one continuous happy day.

But if those blessings we would share,
We here must live with constant care;
Not let sin's soft arts beguile,
Nor draw us with a friendly smile;
But walk in hope the narrow way,
That leads us to that better day;
And when at last we reach that shore,
Where sin and death can come no more;
All will be well at Christ's right hand,
In Canaan's blissful happy land.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES

An Address Given in Cleveland, O., Aug. 26, 1917

By Brother Walter S. Tomlinson

Our pastor's vacation has become an annual occurrence and, with his return, we start, as it were, another year's work. In the mercantile world it is customary to take stock once a year, and I have thought that now is a good time for us to take stock, post our books, and see how we stand before we do anything else. What has Brother Huggins' work during the past year done for us? Have we always felt that we could stand shoulder to shoulder with him? Could we always say Amen to what he has said? If not, have we been to him as a brother beloved and told him why? Or if we do not agree with what he has said, do we think it was intended for someone else? A dangerous policy. The word tells us that the elders (and he is an elder, as well as pastor) "watch for us as those who must give an account." He has a duty to perform, and if his ministry has been helpful to us he will be able to render his stewardship with joy.

Personal Questions

In short, then, let us each ask ourselves as in the sight of God, have we been growing in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ? Have we been keeping our bodies in subjecton? Have we been weaning ourselves from the world? Have we presented to the world a fair sample of the religion of Jesus so that they have taken note of us? Have we striven to create within us the altogether lovely spirit of the Master? Have we been depending upon the word of God as the "man of our counsel"? Do we realize that our past status is no guide: the question is, How do we stand now? Are we fighting the good fight of faith; and it must be living faith, too. As breath imparts vitality to the blood, so work gives vitality to faith. Faith without works is dead. Hence the injunction not to be weary in well doing. If we grow weary faith loses its power. What I wish to impress is the idea that mere mental or intellectual assent to the gospel truth will not save us. The truth must take hold of our affections and control our actions. It is no trouble to do right when our environment is agreeable, but when it cuts into the flesh and calls for self-denial, sacrifice, and downright suffering for Christ thus like Paul we must be able to cast aside every weight, and the sin which does so easily beset us, if by any means we might attain unto the resurrection out from among the dead.

Signs of the Approaching Day

Beloved, in view of the shortness and uncertainty of this life; in view of the imminence of the times we live in; in view of the utter worthlessness of the whole world to us if we fail of acceptance of Christ at his appearing; like Peter, I desire to stir up your minds by way of remembrance, by directing your attention to signs of the approaching day. I believe the pastor himself would approve of such a course, for you will doubtless remember his word of warning to his little band of believers relative to the destruction of Jerusalem and the signs by which they might know when they were to escape the impending judgments. And the loving Father through that same word has warned all the saints of a far greater crisis, so they may as thoroughly isolate themselves from the present evil world, and be prepared for the great work he has in store for them under the captain of their salvation when he comes.

Fig Tree Sign and its Relation to Israel

If we carefully study the words of Jesus, found in the 24th chapter of Matthew 21st chapter of Luke and the 13th of Mark, we see that mention is made of the parable relating to the fig tree in all three accounts; and in our study a few weeks back regarding the signs we learned that the fig tree represents the Jewish nation. If this is significant then we may expect to find the chief, or most prominent sign of the times in the Jewish nation and in their land. And this is just what we do see. When the great war burst upon the world with Germany as the aggressive power, the brethren hesitated to discuss it as a fulfilment of prophecy, but as soon as the land of Israel became involved all restraint was removed and comment was freely given. Then again we see the armies of at least two powers fighting the Turk in Palestine and pressing on toward Jerusalem, a city of no (or at least small) military importance. Why is this ? There is no answer except that God is working out his program in fulfilment of what is written. Ages ago it was declared by the Psalmist that God would "have mercy upon Zion: for the time to favor her; yea the set time is come" (Psa. 102). Then he adds, "This shall be written for generations to come, and the people which shall be created shall praise the Lord." The prophet Isaiah made the same truth known to us in these words: "Speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her that her appointed time is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned." Jesus said: "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Beyond the appointed time then. Gentile domination shall not extend. The greatest sign to believers in the sure word of prophecy must surely be the approaching liberation of the Holy Land from the Turk. Never in the history of the Jews since their dispersion from their land at the time of the destruction of Jerusalem have they manifested such interest in their return to the land of their forefathers. It is only twenty years since the formation of the Zionist movement and the then president, Dr. Heizl, said that was the first time the Jewish nation showed signs of natural life. Since then great changes have taken place, and instead of the Zionist movement being scoffed at as formerly it has become a thing of dignity.

An interesting comment on the Zionist movement is afforded by a recent press notice, announcing the conversion of Mr. Jacob H. Schiff, the New York banker, to Zionism. Mr. Schiff is reported to have said: "Overnight 3,000,000 of our brethren have become free in Russia. It is the greatest thing that has happened to Israel since the Exodus from Egypt. If we do not wish Israel to remain what it has been during the last 3,000 years we must remember our ideals. I am a believer in the Jewish people and the mission of the Jews. And I believe that somewhere there should be a great reservoir whence Jewish culture may spread its beautiful ideals over the world. Naturally that land would be Palestine whence it may develop unhampered by the materialism of the world. The present war may bring the development of this ideal nearer.

The Interest of Public Men in the Jewish Question

To show you how some of the public men are interested in the Jewish question I will quote a few of their utterances. The pope received Mr. Sokolow, a member of the Zionist Executive Committee, in special audience. The pope declared that the Jewish efforts for establishing a national home in Palestine were viewed by him sympathetically. He saw no obstacle whatsoever from the point of view of his religious interests, but was concerned only with the holy places, which he hoped would be guarded. Mr. Sokolow gave the assurance that the Jews would most carefully respect Christian religious properties and Christian sentiments.

In addition to this audience with the pope Mr. Sokolow had an audience with the prime minister of Italy. His excellency with his customary courtesy and affability showed that he was thoroughly acquainted with the principal questions which interested the Jews, and declared that he had no doubt that complete enjoyment of civil and political rights would be granted to them as the result of the present war.

Viscount Bryce cabled as follows to the Jewish Morning Journal, of New York: "Much sympathetic interest is taken here in the re-establishment of the Jews in Palestine. To effect this three things are needed: Turkish rule must be extinguished, not only in Palestine, but everywhere south and east of Taurus mountains: a large body of American and other Jews must indicate a wish to return. Large funds are needed to repair the ruin recently wrought by the Turks in Palestine, and enable the execution of irrigation and other works required to make Palestine support a larger population than it now feeds."

Lord Northcliffe cabled to the same paper: "Sympathise entirely with the idea of the restoration of ancient Jewish patrimony. If autonomus Jewish state practical, think it should be assisted. Personally visited Palestine convinced much could be done toward development.

Dr. Weizmann, president of the English Zionits Federation, delivered the following in a recent speech: "The British government has expressed its readiness to support Zionism, with the approval of its allies. The question of the future of Palestine cannot fail to come up for settlement at the end of the war, and we know now quite definitely that the weight of Great Britain and her allies will be thrown on the side of a Jewish Palestine. That is a fact on which we are entitled to congratulate ourseves. It is not only a great triumph for those who have put the Zionist case to the allied governments, but a testimony to the hold which the Zionist idea has gained on the Jewish people; for obviously no government would pledge itself to support a Jewish Palestine if it were not convinced that the Jewish people as a whole wanted Palestine."

From the Press Association's special correspondent: "The most remarkable fact about our eastern front is that it should be there at all. I have just returned from a visit to the Eastern Force Headquarters, and as one travels comfortably by rail mile after mile through a sandy wilderness, where there is no water, shade, or shelter, where every step in the soft, shifty surface costs more than double the effort on hard ground, one realizes the immensity of the achievement of our engineers in laying down a line at record-beating pace in war time.

"The line is safe today from all threat of enemy depredations, but it still has to contend with a natural foe in the shape of violent winds, which sweep the sand occasionally across the track, and breakdown gangs are always ready in certain of the more exposed parts to clear the traffic, which has never been interrupted for more than a few hours. Already at several stations solid stone structures replace the temporary wooden erections, giving an air of permanence to this war line, which doubtless will one day become the favored route of tourists to the Holy Land, and will also afford travelers access to Egypt without the necessity of a sea journey."

How much this reminds us of the prophecy in the 11th chapter of Isaiah: "And there shall be an highway for the remnant of his people, which shall be left from Assyria; like as it was to Israel in the day that he came up out of the land of Egypt."

The Zionist Review, July 1917 said: "I celebrated Passover in the land of the Philistines and the land of Abraham, camped with the English army before Gaza. One night I was out with a patrol in the very fields where Abraham pitched his tents. It is extraordinary how the feeling of being home, of belonging to the country, springs up within the coldest of us. We have all that experience, Gentile and Jew. Hundreds of officers have read their Bible (borrowed usually from the Chaplain or a "pi" friend) in these latter days, and broken through the neglect of years. And if the country of Abraham and Samson and David and Goliath has dear associations for the Englishman, how much more for the Jew ! When we go back to Palestine we can but go back to the Bible.

"We make our way silently across the frequent fields lit up by the orb of fire above, and seem to be living through the Exodus again. The strong hand and the outstretched arm of God are as manifestly leading humanity today as when the children of Irael came out of Egypt. This last year has brought untold misery, but it has brought also the revolution in Russia and the participation of America in the war. The year, too, has seen an English army build an highway from Egypt to Syria across the Sinai desert. Verily the testimony of God is faithful, making wise the simple; the ordinances of God are upright, bringing joy to the heart ! Terrible as the war is, yet by divine guidance in the war great purposes work themselves out for the world and for the Jew which might otherwise have taken generations to accomplish.

"The pilgrimage of the British army has shown signally how the capacities of the land may be developed. In the less fertile part the wells now give sufficient water for tens of thousands of men —I may not give the numbers—and tens of thousands of beasts. It was once the fashion to scoff at the idea that Palestine was flowing with milk and honey. But as soon as loving hands and wise heads are gathered in her borders, her wilderness shall be set as Eden, and her barren plain as the garden of God."

Let us look again at the parable of the fig tree. What did the Savior say ? "When they shoot forth, ye see and know of your own selves that summer is nigh at hand. So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand."

Jewish Nationality Restored After Christ Comes, Not Before

But I presume some one is ready to ask, "To what extent are the Jews required to be gathered back to their land before we may look for the coming of our Lord"? In other words, must they have a national government of their own to warrant us in looking for the fulfilment of the prophecies found in the book of Ezekiel ? That is a good question, and one deserving our careful consideration. The words found in the 11th and 12th verses of the 38th chapter of Ezekiel have led some of our brethren to look for a large settlement of Jews in Palestine: "And thou shalt say, I will go unto the land of unwalled villages; I will go to them that are at rest, that dwell safely, to take a spoil, and to take a prey . . . . and upon the people gathered out of the nations, which have gotten cattle and goods, that dwell in the midst of the land." Notice the words, "In the midst of the land," or as the margin reads, "In the navel of the land." This word is only used in one other place in the Scripture, viz: Judges 9:37, and refers to a particular part of Palestine. That part is the mountains round Shechem. Now Shechem is about midway from north to south, and midway from east to west, answering in every way to this description. Shechem is near Samaria, and in Jeremiah 31:5 it is written, "Thou shalt again plant vines upon the mountains of Samaria, and shall eat them as common things:" In the year 1904, 2,000,000 vines were ordered from America to be planted by the Jewish colonies in Palestine. An English brother by the name of Janaway, who has recently visited Palestine, in his book "Palestine and the Jews," describes the Jewish work in Samaria "where there are ten colonies owning between them forty thousand acres of land, and a population of over eleven hundred Jews. In the Galilean districts there are sixteen Jewish agricultural colonies. Within trumpet call of Jerusalem there are fifty-seven such colonies; southward there are fifteen more. Farming is taught the rising generation of Jews on scientific, up-to-date methods." It seems to me that the prophecy clearly refers to agricultural colonies, and the colonies established fulfill that condition. This is the strongest testimony quoted in support of the return of Israel to their land before the Lord comes.

On the other hand, we have many explicit testimonies showing large numbers of the children of Israel will be gathered to Palestine after the kingdom is set up. The eleventh chapter of Isaiah records some of the works of the Lord Jesus, and reading from the tenth verse it says: "In that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people: to it shall the Gentiles seek: and his rest shall be glorious And is shall come to pass in that day"—what day? In the day of the setting of the ensign. "The Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left, from Assyria, Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from Elam, and from the islands of the sea. And he shall assemble the outcast of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah, from the four corners of the earth."

The 66th chapter says, "Behold the Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, adn his rebuke with flames of fire. For by fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh: and the slain of the Lord shall be many." Then he says (verse 19): "I will set a sign among them, and I will send those that escape of them to the nations, to Tarshish, Pul, and Lud, to Tubal, and Javan, to the Isles afar off, that have not heard my fame, neither have seen my glory. . . . . and they shall bring your brethren for an offering unto the Lord out of all nations, to my holy mountain Jerusalem." Jeremiah 16:16 says: "It shall no more be said, The Lord liveth that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt, but the Lord liveth that brought the children of Israel from the land of the north, from all the land whither he had driven them: and I will bring them to the land that I gave unto their fathers. Behold, I will send many fishers, saith the Lord, and they shall fish for them; and after I will send many hunters and they shall hunt for them, from every mountain and from every hill." Verse 21: "I will cause them to know my hand and my might, and they shall know that my name is the Lord."

Now listen to the words of the prophet like unto Moses when told that Herod would seek his life: "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, which killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee; how oft would I have gathered thy children together as a hen doth gather her brood under her wings, and ye would not. Behold, your house is left unto you desolate: and verily I say unto you, ye shall not see me, until the time come when ye shall say, Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." What is it to be desolate ? The word is defined to mean, lone, marred; and such is the description of the nation given by the prophet Hosea, "The children of Israel shall abide many days without a king, and without a prince, and without a sacrifice. Afterward shall the children of Israel return and seek the Lord their God and shall fear the Lord in the latter days."

We have found then that after the ensign (which is the Lord Jesus) has been set up, God shall set his hand "the second time" to gather his people. After the Lord pleads with all flesh by fire and by sword he will send those that escape to the remnant of his people. As truly as the Lord liveth he will send fishers and hunters to bring his people to the land he gave their fathers. As a nation they shall be desolate, unmarried, without a king or prince, until they say, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord." If I be right in these conclusions then concerning the Jews and their land nothing more remains to be accomplished before the Lord comes.

An Exhortation to Humbly Walk Before God

If time and strength permitted we could have dwelt more fully with the subject. But we trust enough has been said to show we are living in times of wonderful events when God's plan and purpose regarding man and the earth are unfolding before our eyes every day. Beloved, every day's news deepens the conviction in my mind that mighty changes will soon take place; converging lines of prophecy indicate we are in the last days of Gentile supremacy; God is shaking all nations (as he said), then the "desire of all nations shall come." It behooves us to be ready. If we fail of the great salvation we have only ourselves to blame. We have been amply warned. Let us then keep aloof from the world and its entanglements. If we are to appear in his presence with exceeding joy it will be because as his servants we have done our duty to ourselves and our fellow men; because we have clean hands and a pure heart, because we have loved righteousness and hated iniquity, and walked humbly before our God. Let us then watch at every season, making supplication that we may be accounted worthy to escape all that shall come to pass, and stand before the Son of Man.

THE HOLY SPIRIT

Its Nature and Work

1 Kings 18:12: "Spirit of the Lord carry thee."
1 Kings 22:24: "Spirit of the Lord from me to speak unto thee."
2 Kings 2:16: Similar to 1 Kings 18:12.
2 Chron. 15:1: "Spirit of God came upon."
2 Chron. 20:14: "Spirit of the Lord came upon."

These verses are reiterated proof, if any is needed, that "the spirit of God" and "spirit of the Lord" are equivalent terms. In each case the Revised Version has altered the initial letter from a capital to a small "s," viz., from "Spirit" to "spirit"—surely evidence sufficient to prove that the third person in the Trinity is not in the least suggested by the terms used, and that the action attributed to the spirit does not necessitate the personality of the spirit. Notice for instance 1 Kings 22:24.

Neh. 9:20

"Thy good spirit to instruct them." One of the stock arguments used in the attempt to prove the personality of the "spirit" is that the promise is made of guidance and instruction by or through the spirit. Here, however, is an instance of instruction by God's "good spirit" to which none of the learned translators and revisers of the Old and New versions attribute personality—indeed, the fair inference is that they deny it; for no recognition of personality is evidenced by their translation. If a personal instructor, apart from God himself, or the Lord Jesus Christ is necessary in the case why not in the Old Testament instance? Surely it would be, but then there would be two distinct spirits of God, and if the Trinity it true which of these would belong to the Trinity? Paul affirms only "one spirit." That the Holy Spirit of the New Testament is identical with the spirit of the Old Testament is clearly proved by Stephen in Holy spirit is of necessity a personality, it is im-(personal) comforter.

Neh. 9:30

Here we have a clear Old Testament illustration as to how God's spirit works: "Thou testifiedest against them by the spirit, through the prophets." The prophets did the testifying under the influence of the spirit. See Acts 7:51; 1 Pet. 1:11, 2 Pet. 1:21. The prophets were "filled" with the spirit of God.

Job 26:3

"By his spirit he garnished the heavens." See Genesis 1:2 Revised Version, and note alterations in both text and margin. God's spirit pervades everything in heaven above and in the earth beneath (Psa. 139:7).

Job 27:3

"The spirit of God is in my nostrils." The comment in margin reads, "that is, the breath which God gave him." From time to time men have added to the knowledge of the wonders of the air about them and which they breathe, but as yet no scientist would claim that knowledge is complete. Job's breath is here called "the spirit of God" because when first given to man it was energized by the spirit emanating from God himself. See Job 33:4.

Job 33:4; 34:14,15

As in Job 27:3, "spirit" and "breath" are used interchangeably in these passages. In the former passage we are told how mankind receives life, and in the latter how it is taken from him.

Psa. 104:29,30

"Thou takest away their breath, they die and return to their dust. Thou sendeth forth thy spirit (see Gen. 1:2), they are creaed, thou renewest the face of the ground." Very similar in the import of the verses in Job, but verse 20 being followed by verse 30, seems to convey some slight hint of resurrection.

Psa. 139:7

See 1 Kings 8:27; Jeremiah 23:24. Here we notice one or two important considerations. The verse is frequently quoted by those contending for the personality of the spirit, yet on investigation what are the evidences of personality portrayed in the verse ? Are there any ? Neither the translators nor the revisers detected any, else they would have used the capital letter. If any fact is clear it is that God can only be omnipresent by his spirit, and the futility of contending for the personality of the spirit is demonstrated by the fact, for otherwise it is evident that, in such case were the spirit a personality he would have powers superior to the Creator himself !

Psa. 143:10

See rendering in Revised Version, margin, "Let thy good spirit lead me." Here the expression is the same as in Neh. 9.20, and the remarks there apply equally here, but in this passage it is clearly brought out that God himself is the source of action.

Isa. 11:2,3

Here is the first mention of the "spirit" in the prophetical books, and there is nothing whatever to suggest any different conclusion than that already arrived at. The "spirit of the Lord" is to "rest upon him"; and what is the nature of that spirit ? It is the spirit of wisdom and understanding, of counsel and might, of knowledge and fear of the Lord." See Luke 2:40: "And the child grew and waxed strong, becoming full of wisdom." See also Luke 4:1: "Jesus being full of the Holy Spirit." See also Jas. 1:5,17 where we have the source of wisdom definitely stated.

Isa. 32:15

"Until the spirit be poured upon us from on high." How frequently are such terms as "poured" used with respect to the spirit, yet so obstinately do people cling to an inculcated and cherished idea that they are ready to accept the idea of the personality of the spirit in the face of the impossible. It is impossible to pour a living personality. Search the Bible for such language relating to God the Father or to Jesus the Christ, and you will search in vain.

Isa. 34:16

"And his spirit it hath gathered them." Here is definitely stated one of the various phrases of the works of the spirit of God. The language is so brief and explicit little comment is needed. Let special notice be taken that the neuter pronoun is used, which is altogether derogative to personality. No one supposes that the hand referred to in verse 17 is any other than the hand of God himself.

Isa. 48:16

If any verse in the Old Testament lends support to the view of personality of the spirit this does as it is rendered in the Authorized Version, but the Revised Version quite alters the case, leaving that idea without the pale of probability.

EDITORIAL

October 28th we enjoyed visits from Brother Gardy, Brother and Sister Fankbonner, of Unionville, Ohio, and Brother Thompson, of Buffalo, N. Y.

$3.50 credited to Brother Thos. Gibbs in the Helping Fund Oct. 16, 1917, should have been credited to the Sunday School, per Sister Marvel Gibbs.

October 30th we refunded to the donors all the money which was in the Wilson Fund, except $4.00 which was credited to "A Sister" $2.00, "A Sister" $2.00. If this sister (or sisters as the case may be) will kindly notify us of her name and address, her donation will be refunded immediately.

After the usual Sunday evening sermon on the evening of October 28th the following friends were baptized, having previously made the good confession of faith: Miss Jane Robson, formerly Congregationalist, daughter of Sister Nettie Robson; and Mr. and Mrs. A. B. Luther, of Geneva, Ohio. Brother and Sister Luther had formerly been connected with the Christian Church. They will meet with the brethren in Unionville, Ohio.

Sister Lillie B. Gillot writes: "We are keeping up our study of the Scriptures and are watching for the coming of our Lord. We think The Restitution grows better with each issue, and we hope that the sermon outlines on the book of Revelation will be published weekly in it." Sister Gillot sends $2.00 to have the paper sent to a friend. The holiday season approaches, and we must begin to think of presents for our friends. We suggest that you think of The Restitution in this connection. We know of no better gift to send to relatives and friends.

By the time this paper is in the hands of the reader "The Only True Gospel," the third lesson of the series called "Bible Lessons on First Principles," will probably be ready to mail. The Fellow Helper's Society, an organization of young people, which we hope to tell the reader about in these pages soon, has published this issue. If you want to interest your neighbor, friend or relative in the truth, we recommend "Bible Lessons on First Principles" as inexpensive and suitable literature. Berean societies, churches, and individuals who would like to join the Fellow Helpers in scattering the literature of the truth broadcast may have sample copies of these lessons upon application to The Restitution office.

The tribe of Levi was a priestly tribe, and had no inheritance in Israel. Preachers now are doing priestly work which the tribe of Levi did under the law. Therefore they should relinquish all right and desire to amass wealth, esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of earth. Many of our ministers, were they desirous of living for themselves, and of making a reputation among men, could obtain an abundance of this world's goods. They could compete successfully with men of the world in the ranks of political aspiration. But churches should watch their ministers closely and discourage their going into the business world.

From few of our friends have we ever received expression of brotherly and Christian feelings. Almost all seem to feel that restraint must be imposed upon the soul when religion is broached, lest there should be something to offend fastidious and worldly tastes. Christians meet, converse, and correspond, and know little or nothing of each other's religious life. Instead of confessing faults one to another, and praying one for another, each seems to conceal as much as possible all that passes in the soul. This is certaionly wrong. While we ought not to blazen to the world our experience, we ought to be ready to give every one a reason of the hope that is in us. Among believers today there is, we fear, very little of that ardent love for each other which characterized our brethren of the first century, and which Christ prayed might subsist among his disciples. We treat each other politely, talk on the general topics of the truth, but how rarely does heart meet heart, and the real order of Christian love bind souls of believers together!

Our tendency to concealment, so far as the truth is concerned, we should strive to overcome, especially when it interferes with the exhortation and happiness of others. A communicative and frank disposition is far more fitted to win the confidence and affection of the world, as a rule, than a retired one. Especially is this true of those in a grade of society below us. If we wish to become useful we must become communicative to those whom we would influence. "He that would have friends must show himself friendly." And he who would draw out the feeliings of others, must express his own. When we want to gain the confidence of another we must unfold our own feelings first, and this draws him out to express his own. Confidence begets confidence, and the most wary, suspicious, and reserved may thus be led to open their hearts to us.

"THE SMOKE OF THEIR TORMENT ASCENDETH UP FOREVER"

This is the title of a sermon by the Editor of The Restitution just published by the Fellow Helpers' Society. Its subject matter is of unusual interest as it deals largely with

Doctrinal Matters,

and expounds such subjects as everlasting fire, the devil and his angels, the smoke of torment ascending forever, tormented day and night, forever and ever, etc. To the doctrinal interest of the sermon must be added its

Prophetic Features

about the lake of fire prepared by Rome sinking into a volcano at our Lord's return, the destruction of the beast and false prophet in the same lake; how it emits memorial smoke during the reign of Christ; and how the devil and his angels are engulphed in its flames at the close of the thousand years; after which there is left no "former things." Wonderful subjects of doctrine and prophecy explained exegetically, simply, and scripturally. One copy three cents; one dozen copies twenty-five cents. Address

PAINLESS BAYONET

Alexander Foster Humphrey, of Pittsburg, invented a narcotic bullet that would kill moose or other animals without hurting them. Now he comes along with an antiseptic, painless bayonet. The Popular Science Monthly says it carries in its blade a capsule containing a mixture of antiseptics, anaesthetics and gelatin. "When the bayonet is plunged into a soldier," it says, "the heat of the body will melt the capsule and release its healing contents, the anaesthetic deadening the wounded man's pain, the antiseptic preventing infection, and the gelatin stopping the flow of blood."

THE NATIONAL BEREAN SOCIETY

Leota Hanson, Editor, 5622 Vernon Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Motto: Search the Scriptures daily.
Slogan: We stand for unity. truth, and righteousness.

Have you noticed our new slogan which was adopted at the National Conference just passed? "We stand for Unity, Truth, and Righteousness." What a call to the Master's service it is!

Unity—What is this unity for which the Bereans stand? The breaking down of state lines, the rising above all church dissentions, the building up of a body that is as one in loving service for the Master—just one body in Christ Jesus. "The unity of the spirit in the bond of peace" (Eph. 4:3).

Truth—The simple gospel message as given to us by Jesus, the apostles and the prophets (Acts 8:12).

Righteousness—As faith without works is dead, daily Christian living must go hand in hand with our faith in the truth, "being filled with the fruits of righteousness" (Phil. 1:11).

This is our battle cry, live your Christian privileges, and make this year one of personal consecration to the service of the Lord.

Berean Report

The fourth annual conference of the National Berean Society of the Church of God of the Abrahamic Faith met at Oregon, Ill., August 15, 16, 1917.

The business meeting was called to order by the president.

Every affiliated state was represented at the meeting, but we were very much disappointed that the delegates from Eden Valley, Minn., and Fonthill, Canada, were unable to attend.

The reports of all commitees and secretaries showed a great increase in the work over last year and a marked activity in every department but one.

The Treasurer's report showed a balance of $37.81. This was very good news.

Because we have added new departments and extended fields of the old departments, we will need more money this year because the National Bereans will finance the publication of the new books entirely, instead of as formally by the cooperation of the states with the National.

Tract committee reported nearly three thousand tracts distributed this year. They were sent to sixteen states and England for redistribution. This number is about one thousand more than was sent out last year.

The National Society has decided to add a Tract Library Department for free use of Local Societies and isolated members in their Bible study. Write to Lydia Railsback, 621 S. Fellows St., South Bend, Ind., for any tracts you wish for distribution or for local use and information concerning this new department.

Report from he Literary committee was rather discouraging. The Bereans were most emphatic in their demand that this column be continued in the church paper. If you want it you must do your part by contributing one article a year. This is not a heavy burden. Why not have the Local Societies send in a report of their work occasionally ? Let us use this column as a getting acquainted corner.

The Social Correspondence Department is new. The committee from this department reports having sent one hundred and thirty-seven letters this year. In answers received those written expressed such gratitude and appreciation at being remembered and, as one has said, "the isolated feel they are in touch with the rest of the family."

They have reached some who have not the privilege of hearing a gospel sermon from one year's end to the next, and others who in order to meet with those of like precious faith, must drive many miles.

The object of this department is not to receive answers, though that is always gratifying, but to reach our brethren through correspondence, give them strength to feel they are not standing alone. Will ministers please send names of new converts to the chairman of this committee, Anna L. Adams, 423 Second Ave., R. F. D. 7, Dixon, Ill.

The Organization Committee reported Nebraska State organized and several points interested. Eden Valley, Minn., was organized through the efforts of Brother Patrick.

Let chairmen of the isolated committee of the various states write Anna Drew, 629 N. Galena Ave., Dixon, Ill., for plan of work.

The Book Committee for next year is:

G. Eldred Marsh, Iowa.
Mary Gesin, Illinois.
Floyd Stilson, Nebraska.
P. E. Brown, Nebraska.

The state presidents were urged to present the work of the National Society to their local societies and ask them to pay the annual National dues of twenty-five cents, as soon as possible, and send the same to the Treasurer. This is not a heavy burden, and if every Berean in each affiliated state or society would pay it promptly, we could broaden our work very much and answer the loud and oft repeated cry for an organizer in the field.

We received an invitation to meet ot Omaha, Nebr., next year, so begin now to save pennies, buffalo nickels, and new money to pay your car fare.

The election of officers was as follows:

Leila Whitehead, President, 5439 Ohio St., Chicago, Ill.;
Frank Siple, First Vice-President, Oregon, Ill.;
Lawrence Howell, Second Vice-President, Ohio;
Evelyn K. Harsch, Cor. Secretary, 5447 Ohio St., Chicago, Ill.;
Ind.; and
Leland Roose, Treasurer, Charter Oak, Iowa.
Leila Whitehead, President.
Dessie McDonald, Rec. Secretary.

Lelia Whitehead, Pres.
Dessie McDonald, Rec. Secy.

Ledand Roose, Treasurer.

Submitted by Anna L. Adams,

The nineteenth annual business meeting of the Illinois Bereans was held in Oregon, Ill., Aug. 17, 1917. All officers were present, except the Treasurer. The minutes of the last meeting were read and approved.

Reports from officers and committees were given and from the following societies: Macomb, Dixon, Oregon, Ripley, Chicago, Aurora, and Lanark; and from the following isolated Bereans, Lillie Willis, and Mrs. W. W. Johnston.

The Treasurer's report was as follows:

Amount on hand	$13.62
Amount collected	66.70	$ 80.32
Expenditures including National dues		41.64
Balance on hand		$ 38.68

It was moved and carried that the constitution be amended as voted upon at last year's meeting and that it be reprinted.

Election of officers resulted as follows:

President, Anna E. Drew, Dixon, Ill.
First Vice-President, Almeda Glotfelty, Lanark, Ill.
Second Vice-President, Mae Hanson Miller, St. Jacob, Ill.
Secretary, Anna L. Adams, Dixon, Ill.
Treasurer, Lillian Dauntler, Dixon, Ill.

Committees

Literary. Wm. Hanson, Lebanon, Ill.; Mabel Canode, Oregon, Ill.; Mrs. Agnes Eckert, Dixon, Ill. R. R. 7.

Program: Florence Laning, Mt. Sterling, Ill.; Cecil Cross, Oregon, Ill.; Silas Claypool, Marshall, Ill.

Tract: Mrs. Cordelia Gray, Lanark, Ill.

Isolated: Jessie Wilson, 620 Long Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Truth is not ours till we appropriate it, and make it part of our lives.

OBITUARY

James Snodgrass was born August 6th, 1840, in Decatur County, Indiana. He was the son of James and Anna Snodgrass and one of a family of eight children and the last surviver. He was married to Rebecca J. Goble in 1859, and they became the parents of three children. He was again married to Fannie Byrley in 1867. They were the parents of five children. He was again married to Samantha Jackson, who died in less than a year. He was again married to Editha McCarty. To them was born one son, Byron. This companion died some fourteen years ago and he has since made his home in Hillisburg, living alone.

He became a member of the Church of God eighteen years ago under the pastorate of Brother J. F. Wagoner, and has lived a consistent Christian life since.

He was a soldier in the Civil War, going out in the last call and serving to the close. He died October 12, 1917, aged 77 years, 2 months, and 6 days.

He leaves five sons, Thomas, Samuel, Leonard, John M., and Byron. His other children preceded him in death. He also leaves several grandchildren and great grandchildren and many other relatives.

His life has been full of hardship and trial, but he fought the battle honorably, and reached the haven of old age with an untarinshed name, and fell asleep in Jesus in full hope of the future life by a resurrection when Jesus comes.

Funeral services were held at the M. E. church in Hillisburg, Sunday October 14th, at 2 o'clock, and burial was made in the cemetery east from Scircleville.

Remarks

During September we have as usual been very busy. On the second at the close of the conference we initiated five into the body of Christ, one of the number being a daughter of S. A. Story, which is the last of his family, the entire family now being believers.

Our next point was at Archie, Mo., where we went to baptize Brother Wilson and Wife. This Brother and Sister came all the way to Omaha to be baptized, and I was away in Colorado. But it was for the best, for when I got there Sister Wilson's parents declared their faith in the gospel and were planted in the likeness of Christ's death. The Baptists had just started a meeting, so we decided not to conflict, in fact, the Christians would not let us have their church until the other meeting closed. So after a couple of days with this worthy family we boarded the train for Kansas City.

On our way there we stopped off one night with Sister Fugate where we spent a very enjoyable night. We had not met for twenty-four years and yet they walked straight to me when I got off the train. On our return we started a meeting at the house of an old friend in Kansas City, Kan., where we met some of the old timers in the faith. Just below Kansas City we held our first series of meetings at the call of Sister Calkins thirty years ago, and she attended these meetings. Sister Whitton was there whom I baptized at that time. Brother and Sister Michals came up from Pleasant Hill, Mo., and we all stayed at Sister Fugate's, who is an aunt of Sister Michals. These I baptized while they were residents of St. Paul, Nebr. I was more than surprised and pleased to find them still sound in the faith. All these years they have stood aloof from everything that is not quite sound in doctrine. Sister Fugate is not only surprisingly well posted but has written some articles for the local paper that shows splendid ability as a writer. To meet these time worn veterans in the faith was truly a feast and an inspiration. The talks of bygone days and our experiences since we last met were interesting.

On Sunday we all took our dinners and went to Sister Shaferman's in Kansas City, Kan., and held a forenoon meeting. In the afternoon we went to the Advent Christian Church in Chelsa Park and gave a talk on prophecy. At the close three expressed a desire to obey the gospel. Sister Shaferman, who is a daughter of our dear Brother Whitton who sleeps awaiting our Master's return, whom we so thoroughly miss, was one of the number; Ed. Whitton, a son of this beloved and mourned Brother and his wife, were the others. They are now working to prepare themselves for the Lord's coming. After the night's meeting we went home with Sister Fugate, in company with Sister Michals, where Sister Addie had supper waiting, after which we hurried to the train and started for Omaha. This meeting will always be a bright spot in our remembrance.

Yesterday we closed the month's work by all the churches meeting at Kennard. We began on Friday and closed Sunday evening. The attenddance was large and the meeting all that could be wish. At the afternoon service two young ladies took a stand for the truth and were inducted into the family of God. One of these was a daughter of Brother Mehrens, of Iowa. We hope they will walk in newness of life. Now we start for the western part of the state where we go to finish work previously begun. Pray for the success of our work.

DON'T FORGET THE HELPING FUND

We whose names are given below, believing it to be our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the manager of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. Those whose circumstances do not permit of the paying for the paper themselves should notify the manager, signifying their willingness to accept the paper, and it will be cheerfully sent from the proceeds of this fund.

A Song in Your Heart

Keep a song in your heart, my lassie,
  Whatever may be the weather—
Or sunshine or rain, or pleasure or pain,
  Or sunshine or showers together.
Keep singing no matter how goes it, my dear;
Keep singing when days are surpassingly drear;
Keep singing; the skies will tomorrow be clear.
  Keep a song in your heart, my lassie.

Keep a song in your heart, my laddie,
  Whatever the years may bring you,
Or 'vantage or loss, a crown or a cross;
  Or roses, or thorns to sting you.
Keep singing, no matter how goes it, my boy;
Keep singing, 'mid shadows, a carol of joy;
Keep singing, no matter what troubles annoy.
  Keep a song in your heart, my laddie.

How to be Happy

One makes one's happiness only by taking care of the happiness of others.

Study these rules for happiness.

First: Try your best to make others happy. "I never was happy," said a certain king, "till I began to take pleasure in the welfare of my people; but ever since then, in the darkest day I have had sunshine in my heart."

Second: "Be content with little." There are many good reasons for this rule. We deserve but little, we require but little, and better is little with the fear of God than great treasure and troubles therewith.

Two men were determined to be rich, but they set about it in different ways. The one strove to raise up his means to his desires, while the other did his best to bring his desires down to his means. The result was that the one who coveted much always was repining, while he who desired but little was always contented.

Third: Look on the sunny side of things. The skipping lamb, the singing lark, and the leaping fish tell us that happiness is not confined to one place. God in his goodness has spread it abroad on the earth, in the air, and in the waters. Two aged women lived in the same cottage; one always was fearing a storm, the other was always looking for sunshine. Hardly need I tell you which it was that wore a forbidding aspect, or which it was whose face was lightened up with joy.

Lord, guide my heart that I may do thy will,
And fill my hands with such convenient skill
As will conduce to virtue void of shame,
And I will give the glory to thy name.

Men cannot read the heart; they can judge of the purpose only by acts and words. But it is not so with God. In his sight the treason of the human heart is manifest, and no outward acts are needed to declare it. The truest test of a man is not conduct, but character; not what he does, but what he is. Human judgment must, of course, be guided by a man's acts and words. But God is not thus limited. Man judges character by conduct;God judges conduct by character. Therefore it is that "what is highly esteemed among men is abomination in the sight of God."—Sir Robert Anderson.

The world seems good, and is good, to the man who is full of goodness himself.

The Story of Indoor Sun

Once upon a time in far Japan,
There lived a busy little man,
So merry and so full of fun
That people called him Indoor Sun.

Now Indoor Sun made mirrows fine,
Like those in your house and in mine,
And in these looking-glasses bright
His own face saw from morn to night.

It made him feel so very sad
To see his face look cross and mad
That he began to take great care
To keep a sweet smile always there.

And soon he found that those he knew
All seemed to like him better, too;
For, like the mirrows, every one
Began to smile on Indoor Sun.

Now try this, just one day, and see
How bright and smiling you can be;
You'll find both happiness and fun
In playing your're an "Indoor Sun!"

The Beauty of Tidiness

Untidiness is a serious fault. No matter how pretty or facinating you are, if you are untidy it spoils all. The girl who is untidy about her person is sure to make a poor home keeper.

Untidiness and thrift do not go together.

If you are pretty you cannot afford to be untidy, and if you are plain it is sheer foolishness to be untidy. Neatness has a beauty and charm all its own.

It is a positive pleasure to look at a girl who is spotlessly neat. There is something so dainty and attractive about her.

A frayed skirt braid or ripped glove finger will spoil the grandest costume.

It is just as important to be neat about the house as it is to be neat about your person.

Don't leave your clothes on a chair, or your boots under the bed, or any place they happen to drop when you take them off.

At one time a promising romance was shattered through untidiness. A young woman was visiting in town. A prominent young man was attracted by her, and his attention became pronounced.

Soon she went home, and shortly the young man called upon her. It was expected an engagement would be announced, but time passed without anything being said. But to his intimate friends the young man confided that the young woman's home was so untidy he could not think of marrying the cause of it.

Don't be untidy, girls; you can't afford to. It spoils your appearance and ruins your prospects.

"If you from slips
Would keep your lips,
Of these five things beware—
Of whom you speak, to whom you speak,
And how, and when, and where."

BIBLE LESSONS ON FIRST PRINCIPLES

The editor of "The Restitution" is now preparing for publication a series of Bible lessons designed to explain every essential feature of gospel truth. Two lessons of the series have just been published entitled respectively, "Introduction" and "The Word of God in Threefold Aspect." Valuable for conducting Bible studies and classes and for giving Berean lessons, as well as for individual study. Written primarily to teach the elemental principles of the gospel to candidates for baptism. Three cents for one copy; twenty-five cents the dozen.

"Denying the Faith"

A sermon. Both doctrinal and practical. 20 pages; one copy 5 cents; 40 cents per dozen.

"The Death of Christ"

A doctrinal sermon, setting forth scripturally the reality of Christ's death. 3 cents each, or 12 for 25 cents.

"Paradise Lost; Paradise Regained"

A sermon in which every text in the Bible where paradise occurs, either in the English or original tongue, is quoted and explained. 5 cents each; 12 for 40 cents.

"The Bible: Its Principles and Texts"

As indicated by its title, this book is divided into three sections: The first consists of a disquisition on "The Bible;" the second simplifies its "Principles" in formulated propositions; and the third expounds in a homiletic manner particular "Texts." As an Editor, the Author has untied many knotty questions submitted to him by readers; more than a hundred and fifteen are considered in this volume. $1.10 the copy.

LIVING IN THE FEAR OF GOD

When you think, when you speak, when you read, when your write,
When you walk, when you sing, when you seek for delight,
To be kept from all evil at home and abroad,
Live always as under the eye of the Lord,
Whatever you think, never think what you feel
You would blush in the presence of God to reveal,
Whatever you say, in a whisper or clear,
Say nothing you would not like God to hear.
Whatever you read, though the page may allure,
Read nothing of which you are perfectly sure,
Consternation at once would be seen in your look,
If God should say solemnly, "Show me that book."
Whatever you write, in haste or with heed,
Write nothing you would not like God to read.
Wherever you go, never go where you fear
God's question being asked you, "What doest thou here ?"
Whatever you sing in the midst of your glees,
Sing nothing God's listening ear can displease.
Whatever the pastime in which you engage,
For the cheering of youth or the solace of age,
Turn away from each pleasure you'd shrink from pursuing,
If God should look down and say, "What are you doing ?"—Selected by Nellie Alldridge.

WHAT AFTER THE RESURRECTION ?

Brother Huggins:

I enclose an article that finishes my seven articles on "The Kingdom of God and Co-ordinate Incidents." I think every article will be the last, but I am still on the upper crust of the earth. I am now starting with a new remedy that has cured some very bad cases similar to mine. Hoping that I may find relief and continue as one of your contributors, I am,

Your brother looking daily for the Lord, D. C. Robison.

I notice in reading the different articles that some claim that when the Lord comes the saints will meet him in the clouds above the earth and remain there an indefinite time; others that they will go with the Lord to Jerusalem where they will meet the armies of the nations, when the battle of Armageddon will be fought and the Lord and the saints will be victorious and the kingdom will be set up. Neither of these seem to agree with scriptural testimony. They give no time for the judgment of the saints and the ripening up of the mystery of iniquity which will take place during the time that Jesus is judging the saints and will constitute the period of "the indignation" spoken of by the prophet (Isa. 26:20). It is evident that it will require time to give to each saint the reward due him, which will be a position in the kingdom of God. Some of our best writers claim that it will require a period of forty years. Jesus remained forty days with his apostles preparing them for the work before them, which was to preach the gospel of the kingdom of God. They count a day for a year. Iknow this much that "the times and the seasons" are in the power of our heavenly Father. The apostles were not to know what would take place during the preaching of the gospel to every creature. The coming of Jesus and the resurrection and the period of the indignation are co-ordinate incidents and must, I think, be considered together.

I also notice that some put off the coming of our Lord for a period of years. This mistake occurs through their disregarding the times and seasons required for a certain work to be accomplished. As we glean from the Scriptures there can be but little to delay the Lord's coming (see my outline of the kingdom of God and co-ordinate incidents, June 12). We would be thankful to have those who wish to, offer their criticism. To us there is no subject more important. Some no doubt would like to know what will occur during the indignation period. I shall be pleased to give my thoughts on this subject. I have stated above that during the judgment period the mystery of iniquity will ripen. The apostles John and Paul state that antichrist was then working. The antichrist in that day was the false doctrines taught. In 2 Thess. 2 we learn that this system was at work in Paul's day, but something withheld it until the time that hindrance should be taken out of the way. To us the Scriptures teach that the church, in which the spirit, hinders the work of this system, when the church is taken out of the way the spirit will no longer strive with man, but times will become as they were in the days of Noah. There being nothing to check sin, their cup of iniquity will soon be full. We are evidently now in the "time of the end."

It will be well to note, if we can, where we are at this time. The world is being disturbed by the most terrible war in its history. This will have a tendency to unify the different factions of these systems which are the political, religious, social and industrial. Note how politics gave way in the work of the last congress. The same may be said of the religions, as they have but one system of evangelizing, that is the Sunday system. This war is destroying the "caste" that has existed in our social system. The Red Cross society is doing its work. The rich and the poor are alike laboring together to prepare material for those who suffer through the results of the war. The industrial, made up of the iron and the clay, are doing their part to produce a oneness of the system. When I say that all are working to one end I mean that a large majority are. There are two elements, the political and religious, that will dominate this system, the political and industrial being the stronger. The religious and social have worked together with the social, ruling through their clubs and secret societies. The churches are made to recognize these conditions that they may live. Through this working the faith of the gospel has been eliminated from their creed. We should remember the words of Jesus when he said, "When the Son of Man cometh shall he find (the) faith on the earth?" These conditions seem to prevail today. This war need not end that the mystery of iniquity may work. For there is a time when God will send them strong delusions that they (of this system) will believe a lie, because they believe not the truth. The leaven of sin will then do its work. Woe be unto those who refuse to do the work of this system!

I wish to call attention to the fact that the world will be fully converted to the religious views of this system as it was just before the flood. The leaven that will ripen this system will be religious. There is one feature in the development of this system, and that is the revelation of the man of sin, the son of perdition. The doctrine of the federation of the churches has been taught for more than a quarter of a century. Today they have but one purpose in mind, viz., the unifying of all the churches. During this time much of the hatred that existed in the Protestant Churches against the mother church has died out. Now there seems to be a more kindly feeling between these churches. To see things as they are we should notice carefully the work of the present pope. His system of diplomacy will work wonders. We should remember that the Roman Church is the only religious body that has one head over all. When the proper time comes he will be able to "exalt himself above all that is called God, or that is worshiped." I can see a purpose in the organization of the society called The Knights of Columbus. A very innocent society today, but when "his holiness" is in need of a well equipped army it will spring into existence in a moment. This will occur when he wishes to silence opposition. His wish will be their wish. Some may object because Paul says that he must be seated in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God. We are aware that he is a prisoner within the Vatican walls as other popes have been. In regard to this I wish to call your attention to the fact that the former pope made tn effort to leave his prison to visit the distressed of an earthquake in Italy. His age and physical weakness prevented. Pope Bendict has both mental and physical strength to leave the Vatican when his presence is needed. Keep an eye on this man and observe that as a diplomat he is first. He has but one thing to do to bring the belligerent powers together to treat for peace, that is, to give assurance that Germany will in the future respect treaties with other nations. In this event the armies of the nations will not be removed. Neither will there be a disarmament of the armies and nations. Here is where the cry of peace, peace, will come, when the sacred writers have said there is no peace.

Another feature of this war that strengthens our position is that all seem to be unconsciously moving toward the Holy Land. England has an army there and another in the last driving the Turk into the mountains of Israel, where he will fall and none can help him. With the Turk out of the way an opportunity is given for the return of the Jewish people with their wealth. The Zionist party will aid in this, thinking that they will secure the land to Israel. No greater mistake has ever been made. The land was deeded to Abraham and his seed (see Gen. 15). While this is being done the nations will be busy in the commercial war that will follow that all may gain in part the treasures lost in the present war. During this time a part of the armies may be withdrawn, but not disbanded. The mystery of iniquity will work and the pope will be adding to himself greater powers. When the wealth of the Jews becomes noticeable then will Gog see it. We will let the prophet Ezekiel tell of the times as recorded in chapters 38 and 39.

When all the nations are gathered at Jerusalem it must include the belligerents as well as the neutral powers. China and Japan are preparing for a future something. Because of wealth of the Jews Daniel's people will be there and recognize the one for whom they have been looking. There will be a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time. It will be the time of Jacob's trouble out of which the Lord will relieve him.

According to the prophet Ezekiel and Zechariah, a large portion of these armies will be destroyed by the Lord when he reaches Jerusalem after the judgment of the saints. The mystery of iniquity will have gained her greatest power at the coming of Jesus and his saints and will oppose him. He and his will be consumed by the brightness of his coming. This will establish Jesus in Jerusalem and the land when he will begin the establishment of his kingdom, which will require the gathering and purging of Israel and the renovation of the land, making it habitable for a righteous people. They will become the seed of the blessed of the Lord and their offspring with them. If you think there has not been sufficient time for so many things to take place, note what our government has done since it became a belligerent power.

In conclusion let me say that in the last twenty years things have been ripening for one of the most important events in the world's history, and that is the coming of Jesus the Son of the living God. Upon his advent rests the fulfilment of the promise made to Abraham and his seed, in which are included all the faithful righteous from Abel to the coming of Jesus. One of the things that has occupied the minds of the people is rapid transportation. Many shall run to and fro. Another is the manufacture of implements of war (Joel 3). No one doubts today in regard to the completion of airplanes, which will greatly increase the rate of travel. The invention of the telegraph, telephone, and many others have been added. It would require more space in our paper than could be spared to name all that will transpire in the indignation period.

INVENTIONS

No. 1

"Lo, this only have I found, that God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions" (Eccl 7:29).

The kind of inventions that corrupt men are described by David thus: "They joined themselves unto Baal-peor, and ate the sacrifices of the dead. Thus they provoked him (God) to anger with their inventions; and the plague break in upon them" (Psa. 106:28,29). Then to worhip contrary to God's prescribed rule, and invent ways and means whereby such worship may be performed, is to bring the plagues written in the book upon ourselves. How careful every saint should be that he is not guilty of following some man-made invention in place of the prescribed conditions God has revealed.

Your scribe was recently, through the mails, presented with a copy of a book written by one J. L. Barlow, entitled, "Endless Being, or Man Made for Eternity, Refuting the Doctrines of Conditional Immortality, and Annihilationism." On page 148 we are told: "An immortal soul is a soul in no sense subject to death. All souls here are subject to death— saint as well as sinner. The latter already spiritually dead—will die physically—and unless regenerated will fall under the power of the second death. The sinner then knows no immortality here; nor will he ever know it hereafter, as seen from the meaning of the word. To tell a sinner to seek the salvation of his immortal soul, is to ask him to care for something not in his possession. An ever-existing soul he has, but not an immortal one. That a sinner, as a sinner, can never have. Only the righteous can have that, and they only at the resurrection of the just" (page 149).

"Never dying soul is another of these popular phrases which points to no fact, and expresses no truth." "An ever-dying soul, as applied to unregenerate persons, would be truth." Mr Barlow agrees that the word mortal means subject to death; immortal not subject to death; immortality, the undying condition.

His inventions are "an ever existing soul," and "an ever dying soul." The Bible never mentions either. He further says, "Life is a condition of existence, and death is not and cannot be non-existence." He adds: "It is with perfect assurance now affirmed that death is a condition of existence; but a condition the opposite of life." "These two words though so plainly opposite, may be said to have a certain relation to each other, or to an existence, of which they are, or may become, conditions" (page 85).

Now let us read some passages of Scripture with the last definition in mind. "I am the resurrection and the life" (John 11:25). If life is a condition of existence, then the life is the condition of existence, and that would make Jesus say, "I am the resurrection, and the condition of existence." And as he is referring to the future life he is most certainly teaching that a future existence depends upon our acceptance of him; and this text alone spoils Mr Barlow's definition of death. John 6:53: "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood, ye have no life in you." No condition of existence in you, is Mr. Barlow's way of expressing it, and we do not object: but if death is also a condition of existence, and those who do not eat Jesus' flesh are to go into it, then they do have a condition of existence in themselves, and Jesus stated a falsehood. Then if life is a condition of existence, death must be a condition of non-existence; for those promised future life are the only ones who eat, partake of him.

John 5:40: "Ye will not come unto me that ye might have life." "A condition of existence" (Barlow). Then will men who do not come into Christ have a condition of existence? If yes, then Christ used superflous language here, and stated more than what is true; but if men who come to Jesus obtain a condition of future existence those who do not come will not have it; and again we show that death is not a condition of existence.

John 10:10: "I am come that they might have life." A condition of existence. Then had not Jesus come men would not have had a condition of existence, but they would have died; hence death is not a condition of existence. In Acts 5:20 the apostles were commanded, "Go stand in the temple, and speak to the people the words of this life." This condition of existence, the future life is here referred to, and as it is a condition of existence those who do not obtain it will not obtain a condition of future existence. But once more: "But godliness is profitable unto all things, having the promise of the life (condition of existence) that now is, and of that which is to come" (1 Tim. 4:8). Here are two conditions of existence mentioned, and they are mentioned as though they were the only ones: the condition of existence that now is (definite article is used), and not one of them which is to come, but "that," definite again. Then we agree that to humanity there are two conditions of existence, and only two, and they are the two lives spoken of in the word of God. The future life is obtained through Christ; and hence is conditional. But the future life is eternal. "The righteous (go) into life eternal" (Matt. 25:46) at the judgment. God renders it to them who by patient continuance in well doing, seek glory, honor, and incorruptibility (Rom. 2:7). Then as the condition is eternal we conclude that the existence is also, and believe the condition is the cause of the existence, that is no person who fails to have eternal life rendered unto him at the judgment will have a condition of endless existence, and hence will finally go out of existence. Even if we granted Mr. Barlow's definition of death it would remain to be proved that it is an eternal condition of existence; for it is not said to be eternal by the word of God, but the wicked are said to go into eternal destruction, which is a state of non-existence. When once a thing is destroyed it does not exist. Hence the reader can readily see Barlow's definition is not broad enough to destroy the fact that the wicked will be destroyed. The Bible often speaks of "taking life," "destroying life," "seeking thy life." Now if we read "conditions of existence" into such passages we are clearly shown that life is man's only condition of existence. Again, God told Hezekiah, "Set thine house in order; for thou shalt die, and not live" (Isa. 38:1). If both life and death are conditions of existence, he was told, "Thou shalt have a condition of existence, and not be in a condition of existence"—self-contradictory; but if death is a condition of non-existence, then all is harmony.

But can it be proven that death brings about non-existence? Let Job answer: "Wherefore then hast thou brought me forth out of the womb? Oh, that I had given up the spirit, and no eye had seen me! I should have been as though I had not been; I should have been carried from the womb to the grave" (Job 10:18,19). For Job to be as though he had not been, most certainly must be as though he had never existed, and that is non-existence; but death would have caused or been the condition of it, hence death is a condition of non-existence. God's word says: "And all flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of beast, and of every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth, and every man. All in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was upon the dry land, died. And every living substance was destroyed which was upon the face of the ground, both men, and cattle, and the fowls of the heaven; and they were destroyed from the earth: and Noah only remained alive, and they that were with him in the ark." If Mr. Barlow's definition of death is correct, everything that was on dry land went into a condition of existence—even the bodies of the small creeping things of the earth, and the flesh of the men and animals, and hence all exist somewhere! But if Job's definition of death is correct, then all pass into a condition of non-existence, and are as though they had not been. That flesh soon decays and goes out of existence as flesh is evident to every one. We are told all flesh died. Flesh soon ceases to be flesh after death. Therefore death brings about non-existence. Man is flesh (Gen. 6:3). Death causes flesh to corrupt, and go out of existence, therefore death places man in non-existence. "Dust thou art, and undust shalt thou return," is the sentence placed upon man after he is told that he should surely die; and here is another proof that man loses his existence in death. Without resurrection man should make the most of this life, according to the apostle Paul (1 Cor. 15:32); but why so if man can exist while dead? But if death places man in non-existence we can see a reason why man should be resurrected in order that he may enjoy the life which is to come. Mr. Barlow's invention here will not stand the test, and his definition of death falls flat when placed by the side of the unerring word of God.

WHO SHOULD GO TO WAR?

Can the above question be answered in a manner to satisfy every mind? We know that it is right for the world to fight for their respective governments. The reasons are apparent, because they are under the protection of said governments, and they have no other means of protection. They cannot look to God because they are not God's children: they have to look to their own rulers and themselves.

But what about those that claim to be followers of Christ? That it is wrong for a Christian to fight is so plainly taught in the word of God that it would seem unnecessary to discuss that phrase of the subject. If the word of God teaches against war, then why are so many professors going to war? The answer would seem to be this, that they do not understand the word of God.

And just here a question arises not generally understood, namely, that the church and state are closely allied. In the history of the church there never was a time when the doctrine of church and state was so plainly taught as now.

We are aware that the M. E. Church tried to make itself the established church of America. But is it not true that one recognizes the other as being the church of God? Therefore is it not true that they are all one? Then being incorporated they as one are the established church. Now for the proof. In every church separate and yet but one in spirit, they are holding patriotic meetings, decorating their churches with flags, and the ministers, like politicians, are advocating war. So while not going through the formality of law to unite church and state, yet in fact we see them hand in hand. Now please look over the field and pick them out and tell me which is which; and if you succeed, please tell me what the mark of distinction is. Perhaps one of the things that has been the greatest menace to principles and systems is the idea of jumping at conclusions. In these last days we find the Church of God confronted with so many questions that it is necessary for us to be very careful and see that we are not entangled with condemnatory systems. If a church incorporates she takes her protection from God and puts it in the state, therefore should fight for her protector. It certainly would be a shame for any body of people to ask the protection of the state, and then on the other hand, refuse to fight for their protector. In incorporation articles they say of the body being incorporated that they can be sued. Then why not say they can fight and be fought? In fact, this is just what Jesus taught when he said, "They that kill with the sword, shall be killed by the sword, and they that lead into captivity shall go into captivity."

That the Church of God is separate and distinct from the world and all the worldly organizations is plainly taught by the Scriptures and by the example of the early church, also the church in the wilderness.

Jesus said, "If the world hates you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you." Now what is the reason for this hatred? Is there any cause for friction between the world and the so-called churches of today? If so, why? Are they not standing together? Then the only ones that they can hate are the ones that stand aloof who they think ought to help fight their battles. "If you let this man go you are no friend of Caesar," was the statement made by Christ's opposers which caused fear to arise in Pilate's heart and caused him to pronounce the sentence of death upon Christ.

Now we can see the real cause of hatred, and if we take the same stand that Jesus did, the same hatred will arise. "If ye are of the world, the world would love his own," says the Savior. Does not this statement, brethren, come to us in thunder tones today? As we have already said, the world and the church are most intimately connected, therefore must love one another; and if the world loves its own, they must own the so-called church.

Now if we find a church today in the world "but not of the world," true to name, true to principle, not incorporated, claiming the protection only of God, acknowledging no head but Christ, then that church must be the church of God. "But because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you." Now let me ask the church of God, Are we entirely out of the world? Now if in any way we find we are connected with the world, let us sever that connection and stand firm and true and take the consequences. It is evident to me from the above that all incorporated bodies are of the world and have no hope, so let the dead bury the dead"; but we will preach the kingdom of God.

Our fight is to come to overcome the world, not to fight with the world. The world rules now; we shall rule later.

The idea of the so-called church making the world better by her principles has failed, so what they could not do by their gospel they are going to try to do with the sword. Now I believe the caption of this article has been answered and made so plain that there would be no need to continue the discussion. We trust when Jesus comes he will find the church of God watching, waiting and ready, "without spot and without blemish." James says, "keep yourselves unspotted from the world." Are we unspotted if we are connected with the world and help to fight their battles?

In conclusion, let us ask this solemn question: If when Jesus comes, we should claim to be separate from the world, and then he should look on the records and find our names attached to articles of incorporation connecting us with the world, could we say we were unspotted from the world, or would it prove we were a part of the world? We may have been guilty of some things that would connect us and give us worldly spots because we have not given them thorough study, but it is never too late to right a wrong. May the time soon come when we will be under a righteous rule.

LESSON ON HEBREWS 12:13

"Make straight paths for your feet, lest that which is lame be turned out of the way."

I think the same meaning or teaching is in Matt. 5: "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works and glorify your Father which is in heaven." Make straight paths or even paths for your feet. If we profess we are Christ's and walk in the way of the world, in the broad way, we are not Christ's. Let us walk worthy of the high calling. Prov. 4:26,27: "Ponder the way of thy feet; think of the way, then shalt thou walk in thy way safely, and thy foot shall not stumble."

Psa. 119: "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet, and a light unto my path." "The path of the just is as a shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." The Lord giveth wisdom he keepeth the paths of judgment and preserveth the way of his saints. The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord, and he delighteth in his way. Blessed is every one that feareth the Lord and walketh in his ways. Blessed is the man that walketh not in the counsel of the ungodly, nor standeth in the way of sinners. But his delight is in the law of the Lord. Teach me, O Lord, and lead me in a plain path.

Are we walking by faith according to the gospel of Christ? He says: "Enter ye in at the strait gate, because strait is the path, and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life." Job 22:10: "He knoweth the way that I take. And when he hath tried me I shall come forth as gold." May we all come forth as pure gold. Let us ask for strength and help to make straight paths for our feet and help others to keep in the way that leads to life eternal. "This is the promise that he has promised us, even eternal life."

Rejoice in the Lord alway: and again I say, Rejoice (Phil. 4:4).

Remember the distinction between happiness and joy. Happiness depends upon what happens, and it is no play upon words that sees the connection between happiness and that which happens—the hap, the circumstance of life. St. Paul could not have felt very happy when he said he was sorrowful; and yet he said "sorrowful, yet always rejoicing." We are never told to be happy always; that would be impossible. Happiness today on the surface of our life is like the calm of the wave; unhappiness would be like the turbulence of the waves tomorrow. But joy is like the bed of the ocean, independent of any changes on the surface. Joy is a condition of soul in relationship with God in Christ.—Dr. W. H. G. Thomas.

EDITORIAL

From Brother Lent, of Ontario, Canada, we learn that he and other brethren there are much exercised over Canada's conscription law. They have our prayers in their efforts to stay clear of the worldly spirit of militarism with its unchristian spirit and unholy entanglements.

We have lost the company of Brother Eugene Miller, who has returned to Maryland at the call of the military authorities. He was given exemption from military and naval duty, but is held for non-combative service.

There has been an increase in postage, as our readers know. If subscribers would only send on their subscriptions without waiting for the manager to send them a bill, it would save us many dollars. Please help us in trying to be economical by sending your renewal at once. Read the sensible letter from Sister Barber in this number. Sister A. J. Martin writes:

"Find enclosed one dollar and seventy-five cents. Please extend my subscription to The Restitution another year, and send me a dozen of your sermons, "The Smoke of Their Torment Torment Ascendeth up Forever." It is certainly a fine sermon—do wish we could have been present when you delivered it. Brother A. S. Bradley was with us last week and delivered some splendid lectures on "Prophecy"; "The Second Coming of Christ"; "The Tree of Life Lost and Found," etc. He is a fearless defender of the gospel. With much Christian love to you and family."

THE COMPLETE MANIFESTATION OF GOD IN CHRIST BY THE SEVEN SPIRITS

"John to the seven churches which are in Asia: Grace be unto you, and peace from him which is, and which was, and which is to come; and from the seven spirits which are (ha estin, Greek) before his throne" (Rev.1:4).

I. Apocalypse for John, the Seven Churches, and All "Servants" of God until Christ Comes.

1. This practical and helpful point is entirely lost by the Futurist (vss. 1-4; 2:11; 22:6,7,10,12,18, 19).

II. Deity Before His Manifestation in Flesh

1. "Which was" (vs. 4; 1 Tim. 3:16; John 1:1; Prov. 8:22).

2. God, Theos, Deus, Deity, means "position, placing, formation" (Jer. 10:16; Isa. 43:21; 45:7,12, 18).

3. Logos, "reason and speech." God (Theos) has a substantial and glorious body (John 1:1; Heb. 1:3; Ezek. 1.26; 8:2,3; Dan. 7:9; 1 Cor. 8:6).

III. Deity After His Manifestation in Flesh

1. "Which is" (vs. 4; Ex. 3:6,7; John 1:14, Zech. 13:7; John 5:18; 14:9).

IV. Deity Manifested in Spirit

1. Which is to come" (1 Tim. 3:16; Heb. 4:15; 5:8; Luke 13:22; 2 Cor. 13:4; Rev. 1:4; Ex. 3:2-26; Isa. 9:6).

V. The Complete Manifestation of God in Christ and the Saints will be Effected by the Seven Spirits

1. "Which are" (Greek, "which is," ha estin) (vs. 4; Zech. 3:9; 4:2,6,10; Rev. 3:1; 4:5; 5:6; Eph. 4:4; 1 Cor. 12:4-13; John 3:24).

COMMUNICATION

"They shall make known unto you all things which are done here." (Col. 4:9).

Dear Brethren:

I see where some have to be urged to renew their subscription to The Restitution. Now dear brethren, this should not be the case with any of us. We know that prices on all supplies are advancing, and we should appreciate the fact that we can get the paper at the same price as before, and so send in renewals at once. Do not have to be urged any more. We should be as zealous in the Lord's work as the world is in their work. They advocate economy, and have their meatless and wheatless days, etc. It seems that they would be willing to fast certain days if necessary. Now if any have not the money for renewal, I advocate a fast until enough is saved to pay for the paper. Let us not be in arrears with the gospel work when Jesus comes. It surely seems that we are in the last days, and let us be prepared to meet the bridegroom when he calls.

Yours in Christ Hanna M. Barber.

"SIN WHEN IT IS FINISHED BRINGETH FORTH DEATH" James 1:15

Read Jas. 1:15; Rom. 5:21; 6:21, 23, 10, 11, 2; 5:12; 7:9.

The sentence quoted above is from the pen of the man who said, "If any of you lacketh wisdom, let him ask of God, who giveth to all liberally and upbraideth not: and it shall be given him." Truly then we are not unreasonable in expecting to find "gems of wisdom" in the writings of such a man. Those who study his epistle will not be disappointed. Pithy and to the point, his statements carry weight, and many of them have become household words in multitudes of Christian homes. The words under present consideration are no exception; they are familiar to every Bible reader.

The opening of the epistle shews us a man of like passions with ourselves, for it is clear he knew something of what a life of "manifold trials" meant. Like many of us, he felt keenly the continual warfare against evil—the incesssant battling against sin. He hated sin, yet saw in each temptation a stepping stone of "patience" leading to higher and victorious ideals; and after long experience he says: "Blessed (or happy, and who does not seek happiness?) is the man that endureth temptation, for when he hath been approved he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord has promised to them that love him." In these two quotations, the one heading our paper, and the other just quoted, we have ample to keep our minds occupied for some considerable time.

James seems to like getting down to bedrock facts, and stating the issues with amazing clearness. He watches the course of events around him, and draws a dramatic picture of the evils existing and increasing in his day, and there seems to be an unspoken yearning, an intense desre to see the end of them. We can almost hear him ask the question, "Will sin always exist? Is there no consummation?" Patiently we wait for the answer, for to us also the question is a vital one. Then in a still small voice, each word accentuated and articulate, comes the forceful reply, "Sin when it is finished, bringeth forth death." Here then, is an end to sin, "for the end of these things is death" (Rom. 6:21). Thus the nightmare of original sin, by an eternal sinner in an orthodox eternal hell, is brushed aside like a spider's web, or the haze over the eyes of one just awake from sleep. "How shall he that is dead to sin, live any longer therein?" says Paul (Rom. 6:2). He cannot, for a man cannot be dead and alive at the same time.

Have you ever noticed how man's wisdom often reverses God's truth? Here is an instance: Man says "death ends all," and many would like to have it so, for "the wish is father to the thought;" but God's word says "the end of these things is death." Notice the contrast! Do you see the difference? Some things God will end, and he plainly tells us what (1 Pet. 4:17; 2 Cor. 11:15; Phil. 3:19); but other things will not end. "For the things which are seen are temporal: but the things which are not seen are eternal" (2 Cor. 4:18). And again we can almost hear James say, "Brother Paul, thank God, thank God it is so. Did not I tell you, 'Happy is the man that endureth temptation; for when he hath been approved he shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him'" (Jas. 1:12). "Aye," says Paul, "The wages of sin is death: but the free gift of God is eternal life in Christ Jesus our Lord" (Rom. 6:23). There is no end to that, for "he that doeth the will of God abideth forever" (1 John 2:17).

Reader, let me call your attention to the fact that the things "which are not seen and are eternal are just as much "things" (tangible and real) as the "things" which do appear, and are as plainly stated in God's word as the things which shall pass away. Let us praise God then with a full heart, knowing that what he has promised he is able to perform, and that sin, sorrow, and death shall be no more.

Your brother in Christ, R. H. Judd.

ANGELS

This word, both in the Greek and Hebrew languages, signifies a messenger. It denotes office, and not the nature of the agent. The word occurs one hundred and eighty-three times in the New Testament, and is applied to celestial beings, to men, good and bad; to the winds, fire, pestilence, and every creature which God employs as his special agent; and also to the agents of every creature. In all the versions the word anggelos is occasionally rendered by the term "messenger," and frequently by the word "angel," which is, indeed, naturalized and adopted into our language (Emphatic Diaglott).

Many believers in the immortality of the soul, believe angels are the souls of departed friends. This cannot be, as God placed cherubim and a flaming sword to keep the way of the "tree of life." Some doubt that cherubim are angels. They are at least living beings, and do God's will and were placed to guard "the tree of life" before there had been any death in the Adamic race. So they were not the souls of departed friends. Their office seems to be to continually say, "Holy, holy, holy Lord God, the Omnipotent," and have no rest, day nor night, and are said to have six wings and as many eyes (Rev. 4:8).

The angels that appeared to people on earth, seem to be a different class. Paul says God makes his angels spirits, and his ministers a flame of fire (Heb. 1:7; Psa. 104:4). An angel of the Lord appeared unto Hagar; she talked with him and followed his advice (Gen. 16:7-13). The three men that appeared unto Abraham, and the two angels that appeared unto Lot, were both God's messengers and are called men and angels (Gen. 18:2; 19:1). They could not be the souls of departed friends, for they had bodies, and walked, and talked, and ate, and pulled Lot into the house and shut the door (Gen. 19.10). They certainly had not received the body that was buried here on earth and had returned to dust for that is the body they are coming after when Jesus comes. What are they going to do with two bodies ? and how did they come by this body that they bring with them when they visit the earth ? Nonsense! God has angels, and the devil has angels, and God's angel Michael is to lead a band of angels in a fight with the devil and his angels, and the devil and his angels shall not prevail (Rev. 12:7-9).

Now if God's messengers are not such angels as are made by people dying and going to heaven, then where did the angels come from, and when did God create them ? We believe the angels are the redeemed of the earth who lived in some age prior to Adam's time. Why ? Because God said unto Adam, "Be fruitful, multiply, and replenish the earth and subdue it" (Gen. 1:28). Replenish means to fill again. We have the history of Adam's people for about 1500 years; they had increased wonderfully, and had become corrupt, and violent, so it repented the Lord that he had made man; so he declared he would destroy man by a flood of water. He commanded Noah to prepare an ark to save himself and his family. He did so and God destroyed all mankind, but those in the ark. When they came out of the ark, God blessed them, and gave them the same command that he gave Adam 1500 years before: "Be fruitful, multiply, and replenish the earth." We know the earth was filled with people, and God destroyed all but Noah and his family, and commanded him to refill it again. So we infer as he gave Adam the same command, that the earth had been filled with people prior to Adam's time. Jude refers to angels which kept not their first estate (vs. 6). Paul says the saints will judge angels (1 Cor. 6:3). Where will we judge them ? Here on earth. When do they come to earth ? When Christ comes, "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory and all the holy angels with him" (Matt. 25:31; Heb. 12:22). Jude 14 calls them thousand of his saints. Rev. 5:11 gives the number as ten thousand times ten thousand and thousands of thousands.

Perhaps you will think that I speculate on the belief I now advance. I believe when one obeys and has his name written in the "book of life" there is an angel appointed to look after that one, and make a report as to his standing in righteousness. It is recorded that Peter had an angel (Acts 12:15). If Peter, why not I ? Take heed that ye despise not one of these little ones, for I say unto you, that in heaven their angels do always behold the face of my Father which is in heaven (Matt. 18:10; Luke 1:19). Are they not all ministering spirits, sent both to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation (Heb. 1:14) ? There are none who are heirs of salvation but those that obey and are baptized in Christ, and angels minister unto them. "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him, and delivereth them" (Psa. 34:7; 37:23,24). "For he shall give his angels charge over thee, to keep thee in all thy ways. They shall bear thee up in their hands, lest thou dash thy foot against a stone" (Psa. 91:11,12; Matt. 4:6; Luke 4:10,11). The angel of the Lord by night opened the prison doors, and brought apostles forth and said, "Go, stand and speak in the temple to the people all the words of this life" (Acts 5:19; 12:7). What a glorious honor it will be to judge holy angels that have been doing God's will for six thousand years! Many of us must improve our morals, and increase our faith, if we ever reach that exalted position.

A TREATISE ON HELL

Article II.

Shrieking in eternal agony

The doctrine of hell fire, of eternal torment is as thoroughly unscriptural, as it is ferociously inhuman. The commonly accepted theory of the day is, that there is an unfathomable ocean of fire roaring in endless circles, over a dark and bottomless abyss, filled with malignant spirits in horrid shape, in which are reserved the most excruciating torments for all who are to be consigned to its terrible custody. They are represented as shrieking in eternal agony, a revelry of infernal sounds arising from a sweltering ocean of blackness, fire and horrible confusion, and I was taught that God in his eternal counsels of wisdom and mercy had decreed the perpetual continuance of this awful triumph of deviltry.

What sacrilege, to claim that our loving, kind, merciful Father would, for what evil men and women might do, consign them to such a fate. What terrible lies have been told on our kind heavenly Father. Could a worse lie be told on the governor of this state, than that he took his wife and burnt her head off ? Could a worse lie be told on any mother than that she took her child and first burnt its feet off, then its limbs, then its hands, and lastly its head ? But what would that be compared to the lie you tell on the eternal God, when you say that he not only would burn them the few short moments that it would take to end this life, but that they would continue to burn through an endless eternity. Just think of it for a moment dear friends—never ending torture, and you too will be caused to cry out against such a terrible doctrine. Can you believe this savage doctrine ?

It Makes Infidels

No man of real intelligence and goodness of heart can calmly sit down and think it over without feeling that it cannot be true. Rather than believe it he will reject the Bible altogether, and in fact the very doctrine that is claimed turns men to God, has caused thousands to become infidels rejecting God and his blessed word. There never was a greater lie told on the mighty God than the one we are now refuting, and in the day of Christ's coming, the prophet declares that all who are saved will have to acknowledge that they have believed in lies. Jer. 16:19. "O Lord, my strength, and my fortress and my refuge in the day of affliction, the Gentiles shall come unto thee from the ends of the earth, and shall say, Surely our fathers have inherited lies, vanity, and things wherein there is no profit." Yes, the Gentiles shall surely come from the ends of the earth and acknowledge that they have inherited lies, and vanity and things wherein there is no profit. In that day of affliction, when God's judgments are poured out, they will see that there is no profit in this lie that God will forever torture the wicked. They will see that instead of being profitable, it has only hardened the minds of men, and made it more difficult for them to turn from their evil ways.

The Bible nowhere teaches that the fear of hell fire causes men and women to turn from their evil deeds, but it does teach the opposite. What does the blessed Bible say it is that leads us to repentence ? Listen, Rom. 2: 7. "Or, despiseth thou the riches of his goodness, and forbearance and longsuffering, not knowing that the goodness of God leadeth thee to repentance ?" Paul makes it plain; he speaks of a class who do not know that the goodness of God leads men to repentance. They do not know this blessed truth, they have turned aside to the lie, that the fear of hell fire will lead men to God, and do not know that it is the goodness of God that will alone lead men to God. Paul says that by denying this blessed truth, "They despise the riches of his goodnes, and forbearance and longsuffering."

Dear readers, do you want to know this blessed truth, and no longer despise the riches of his goodness and forbearance and longsuffering ? In the next verse, Paul tells us that all who do not know that it is the goodness of God that leads men to repentance, have hard and impenitent hearts. These wonderful verses in Romans second chapter, should convince every honest heart that the theory of hell fire is false, and that they have been mistaken in thinking that it led any man to God. The man, or woman, who does not believe that it is the goodness of God that leads men to repentance, and has his eye fixed on future glory, that summer land of love, will never turn from evil. Truly as Peter declared, they are exceeding great and precious promises. Second Peter 1:4: "Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust."—L. T. Nichols.

An Exceeding and Eternal Weight of Glory

Not by fear of hell fire can you escape the corruption that is in the world through lust: the only way to escape is by the strength given by these exceeding great and precious promises. Second Cor. 4: 17. "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." The hope of obtaining this far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory, is what will cause men and women to turn from all evil. Its inspiring sunlit pictures of eternal felicity is what will cause men and women to become pure of heart. Psa. 36: 7. "How excellent is thy loving kindness, O God; therefore the children of men put their trust under the shadow of thy wings." Yes, how excellent is his loving kindness; and it is this loving kindness, and not fear of hell fire, that will cause his children to put their trust under the shadow of his wings. Eighth verse: "They shall be abundantly satisfied with the fatness of thy house, and thou shalt make them drink of the river of thy pleasures." To be worthy of having the right to drink of the river of his pleasures is what will cause men and women to forsake all evil. No wonder the Psalmist exclaimed, Psalm 31: 19. "Oh, how great is thy goodness which thou hast laid up for them that fear thee!" Truly this goodness is great and wonderful. Paul says, Eph. 3: 20. "Exceeding, abundantly above all that we can ask or think." How many delicious things we would like to partake of now, how many lovely scenes we long to behold. Yet, in that summer land of love, when permitted to drink of the river of his pleasure, there will be joys supernal, far exceeding what the human mind can conceive of now. Isaiah 29: 13, so fittingly expresses the condition the world is in at the present time: "Wherefore the Lord said, Forasmuch as this people draw near me with their mouth, and with their lips do honor me, but have removed their heart far from me, and their fear towards me is taught by the precepts of men." Their fear is that of eternal torment, and their hearts are hardened by belief in this fearful doctrine—so far from God.

It is his goodness that leads men to God, and the heart hardened by such a belief cannot draw nigh to him, and put its trust under the shadow of his wings. How plainly this shows what it is that increases lawlessness and makes men and women resist the law. It would seem that enough has been brought forth to convince any man or woman that the belief in hell fire, in eternal torment, never made man or woman better, but had the opposite effect.

Man Not Immortal

The false doctrine of the immortality of the soul, of which we have treated in another pamphlet—"Man—What is He ?" is the cause of the monstrous doctrine of the eternal misery of the wicked. Believing man to be created immortal, they had to either consign him to eternal bliss, or eternal torment. This theory is a delusion that blinds the minds of all who labor under it. This Pagan doctrine, taught by Socrates and elaborated by Plato, pagans, ignorant of God's divine plan and purpose we have discarded, because not found on the pages of Holy Writ, and because in opposition to all reason. Socrates, Plato and their followers, affirmed that man possessed inherent immortality —while Paul declares that Christ "brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." (Second Tim. 1:10). Those Pagan philosophers of old claimed that all possessed it, while Paul declared, Rom. 2: 7, "To them who by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life." It is something not in our possession, but to be sought for by a patient continuance in well doing. Not only that, but says Paul, Christ is the only one of the Adamic race who possesses immortality: "That thou keep this commandment without spot, unrebukable until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ, which in his times he shall show who is the blessed and only potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords, who ony hath immortality" (First Tim. 6: 14, 15, 16,) How very plain! We are told that we do not possess immortality, and are not left in darkness as to the time when we will receive it. First Cor. 15: 20, "But now is Christ risen from the dead and become the first fruits of them that slept." Twenty-third verse: "But every man in his own order, Christ the first fruits, afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming."—L. T. Nichols.

OBITUARY

Mary Hester Guinn was born Dec. 24, 1860, at Belle Plaine, Iowa; died at her home near Moorefield, Nebr., Oct. 20, 1917, age 56 years, 9 months, and 26 days.

She was united in marriage to Alfred J. Ealy, March 4, 1886, at Indianola, Nebr. To this union were born five children, Minnie A. Ealy, Harold C. Ealy, Hazel W. McLaughlin, Gordon W. and Gertrude M. Ealy—all of Moorefield and who were all present at her death. She also leaves two sisters and four brothers, Mrs. A. J. Shultz, Moorefield, Mrs. J. L. Boots, Oklahoma City, Okla., W. S. and J. H. Guinn,, of Wellston Okla.; M. J. Guinn Colorado Springs, Colo.; and Robt. Guinn, of Belle Plaine, Iowa. She also leaves six grandchildren.

Sister Ealy united with the church of God in December of 1896, and lived a consistent Christian life. Many beautiful floral offerings gave testimony of the esteem in which she was held by her friends and neighbors. Sister Ealy was always ready to assist in the advancement of the truth, and will be greatly missed by the church.

The funeral was held in the Methodist Church, which was filled to its capacity. The auditors listened to the writer tell of her future hope through resurrection from the dead, and how all signs point to the soon return of the Master when we will again meet our sister to part from her no more. Till then we bid her farewell. May her rest be brief and may we all be worthy to meet her.

Almus Adams.

This year there are in South Africa, as nearly as can be estimated, 31,424,680 sheep and 8,920, 270 goats.

Golden Text: 1 Cor. 2:9

The Father's Love

Beloved, what love! what boundless love,
The Father hath bestowed,
Upon his servants, that they should
Be called the sons of God.

Though now indeed the sons of God,
The world knoweth us not;
Because it knew not Christ the Lord,
Who hath our sonship bought.

What we shall soon in glory be,
It doth not yet appear;
But this we know, that when he comes,
We shall his image bear.

And every man that hath this hope,
Himself doth purify;
Even as he, our Lord is pure,
In whom no sin doth lie.

Another Lesson

What a wonderful thing is love, yet what a greater wonder is the love of God, for God has done so much for us, who are so unwilling to do even a little for him.

Today's lesson will treat on

The Father's Love

Kindly read 1 John 4:12-21, then turn to the Old Testament and find Psalms 103, and let us read a few verses commencing with verse 8. In this verse, if we notice what we read, we will find that God is "merciful and gracious, slow to anger, and plenteous in mercy." In verse 9 it says, "God will not always chide, nor always be angry." Continue reading till you reach the end of verse 14, and see for yourself what a loving Father we have.

Then turn to Isaiah, and when you have found chapter 49 read verses 13-17 and notice the great love expressed for Isaiah in God's promise never to forget him. Today we can take this promise to ourselves, for now we are the Israel of God; we are God's chosen people.

In Malachi 3:16-18 we read that those who love the Lord will be blessed, and serve him, and that God's reward to them is based on their service.

We now turn to the New Testament and in Matt. 7:7-12 we see God's loving providence compared to and illustrated by the love of our natural father, ending with what generally is known as "The Golden Rule." Kindly give special attention when reading this.

The next will be Romans 5:6-15. In the first part we notice that God shows his love to us through his Son, the Lord Jesus Christ, who both died and liveth for us. In verse 12 we notice the great difference of the first Adam and the second Adam, which is Christ, and in verse 14 we are told that Adam was a type of Christ. In the latter part of this lesson (verses 12-15) we see the contrast between law and grace—Law, Words, Wages, Moses, and Faith; Grace Free Gift, Christ.

Then again in Romans 8:31-39 we have recorded that God's love is everlasting and the love of Christ is eternal. In Romans 8:14-17; Galatians 3:26-29, and 4:1-7 we read that through our faith in Jesus Christ our baptism in his name and our willingness to be led by the spirit of God, the redeemng power of the love and sacrifice of Jesus brings us to God as his children—sons and daughters of the Most High God. In 1 John 3:1-3, we read of the greatest blessing that can befall a human being, being bestowed on those who accept Jesus as their Savior and Redeemer, and that is our adoption by God as sons and daughter; and yet we read that our elevation in the future will be so great it is far beyond our present comprehension. Then in verses 7-11 of chapter 4, we read that if God's love for us has been so great, we ought also to love one another; and children, all this is ours merely by believing God; by having faith in him and his Christ; by accepting Jesus as our head; by acknowledging him as the Christ, the Son of the living God. Let us accept and acknowledge Jesus and be adopted into the family of God and receive all the blessings as promised.

Our Weekly Puzzle

"God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world; but that the world through him might be saved."

Who wrote the above? Who is the "Son" twice referred to? What is the meaning of "perish"? Where can this passage be found?

BIBLE LESSONS ON FIRST PRINCIPLES

The editor of "The Restitution" is now preparing for publication a series of Bible lessons designed to explain every essential feature of gospel truth. Two lessons of the series have just been published entitled respectively, "Introduction" and "The Word of God in Threefold Aspect." Valuable for conducting Bible studies and classes and for giving Berean lessons, as well as for individual study. Written primarily to teach the elemental principles of the gospel to candidates for baptism. Three cents for one copy; twenty-five cents the dozen.

"Denying the Faith"

A sermon. Both doctrinal and practical. 20 pages; one copy 5 cents; 40 cents per dozen.

"The Death of Christ"

A doctrinal sermon, setting forth scripturally the reality of Christ's death. 3 cents each, or 12 for 25 cents.

"Paradise Lost: Paradise Regained"

A sermon in which every text in the Bible where paradise occurs, either in the English or original tongue, is quoted and explained. 5 cents each; 12 for 40 cents.

"The Bible: Its Principles and Texts"

As indicated by its title, this book is divided into three sections: The first consists of a disquisition on "The Bible;" the second simplifies its "Principles" in formulated propositions; and the third expounds in a homiletic manner particular "Texts." As an Editor, the Author has untied many knotty questions submitted to him by readers; more than a hundred and fifteen are considered in this volume. $1.10 the copy.

Lesson III

Pastor of the Church of God, 10623 Lee Ave., Cleveland, O

THE GOSPEL OF THE KINGDOM
THE ONLY TRUE GOSPEL

I. Meaning of the Word "Gospel"

The word "gospel" comes originally from "god-spell," "god" being an Anglo-Saxon adjective for "good," and "spell" meaning "news." The gospel, then, both etymologically and scripturally, means "good news" or "glad tidings" (Luke 2:10; 8:1; Isa. 61:1).

II. The Gospel is Preached in the Old as Well as in the New Testament

The glad tidings of the gospel, instead of being limited and confined to the pages of the New Testament, as is generally supposed, are also published in the writings of the Old Testament. These were preached to (a) Abraham, (b) the antidiluvians, (c) the Israelites in the wilderness, (d) the contemporaries of David, (e) the people contemporary with John the Baptist, (f) the house of Israel before the death of Christ, and (g) all who received the "ministry of the prophets" prior to the birth of Christ.

(a) Gal. 3:8.
(b) 1 Pet. 4:6; 2 Pet. 2:5.
(c) Heb. 4:1,2.
(d) Heb. 4:7.
(e) Mark 1:1,14,15; Luke 16:16.
(f) Luke 4:16-22; Mark 1:14; Luke 20:1.
(g) Hos. 12:10; 1 Pet. 1:9-12.

III. Four Conditions of the Gospel Required of Sinners

God has conditioned the sinner's salvation upon (a) hearing, (b) believing, (c) confessing, and (d) obeying the gospel.

(a) Deut. 30: 10-20; Rom. 10: 5-17; Matt. 13: 23.
(b) 1 Cor. 1:21; 15:1,2; Mark 1:14,15; 16:16.16: Rom. 1:16.
(c) Rom. 10:8,9,10; 1 Tim. 6:13; Heb. 10:22,23.
(d) 1 Pet. 1:22-25.

IV. Subject Matter, or "The Things" which Compose the Gospel

The gospel consists of "the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Mark 1:14; Luke 4:18,43; 8:1; 9:2,6; Acts 8:12; 19:8; 20.25; 28:23, 30,31).

V. "The Gospel of the Kingdom," Consisting of "The Things Concerning the Kingdom of God, and the Name of Jesus Christ," is the Only True Gospel

A double curse has been pronounced against either man or angel who shall dare to "pervert" this gospel, or preach "any other" (Gal. 1:6-9).

Synthetic Remarks on the Lesson

I. Meaning of the Word Gospel. This word etymologically signifies a "good spell" caused by hearing a good report. "As cold waters to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country" (Prov. 25:25). Scripturally the gospel is called "good tidings" (Isa. 40:9; 41:27; 61:1) and "glad tidings" (Luke 8:1). Not good news about health, riches, fame, and many other temporal and worldly things, good and valuable perhaps in their place; not good tidings about anything; but "the glad tidings of the kingdom of God" (Luke 8:1). Notice the definite article in this passage. "The glad tidings of the kingdom of God" contain the "good tidings of faith" (1 Thess. 3:6).

II. The Gospel is Preached in Both Old and New Testaments. This proposition is pregnant with meaning and should be considered carefully and seriously. Many claim that the gospel consists merely of the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ; therefore they reason it dates from, and was first preached at, Pentecost. This leaves the world without the gospel from Adam until the death of Christ in A. D. 33. In direct contradiction of this idea are dozens of unequivocal Bible declarations which affirm that the gospel was proclaimed previous to the death of Christ. To see this, let us begin the evidence with Christ himself. The whole of his ministry was before his death except forty days between his resurrection and ascension (Acts 1:3). For three years and a half, dating from his baptism to his death, "he preached the gospel" (Luke 20:1). The affirmations which declare this are numerous, emphatic, reiterated, and unmistakable (Mark 1:14; Matt. 4:17; 6:33; 9:35; Luke 4.43; 8:1; 9:1,2; 13:22). In the beginning of his ministry he preached "the good tidings" of Isaiah 61:1 to the people of Nazareth, closed the book and said, "This day is this Scripture fulfilled in your ears" (Luke 4:21). "He hath anointed me to preach good tidings to the meek," found in Isaiah 61:1, is changed in Luke 4:18 to read, "He hath anointed me to preach the gospel to the poor."

*Published by the Fellow Helpers' Society.

Now let us consider the ages prior to Christ and we shall find the gospel existed even then. John's preaching is called "the beginning of the gospel of Jesus Christ, the Son of God" (Mark 1:1). As the "beginning" of a subject is a part of the subject, so "the beginning of the gospel" is a part of the gospel. "The law and the prophets were until John" (Luke 16:16). From John, who preached the gospel, "the law and the prophets" traverse the centuries back to Abraham, who was a prophet (Gen. 20:7). In all the centuries preceding Christ the people had the "ministry of the prophets" (Hos. 12:10). Their ministry was a ministry of the gospel. This is what Peter affirms, writing after the day of Pentecost, and alluding to that very day. He says the prophets bore testimony to both the sufferings and the glory of Christ, consequently "they did minister the things which are now reported unto you by them that have preached the gospel unto you with the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven" (1 Pet. 1:11,12). "The spirit of Christ was in them" (vs. 11), they were sons of God (Rom. 8:9,14), heirs of God and joint-heirs with Christ (vs. 17); and were therefore "holy men of God" and "spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit" (2 Pet. 1:21). They "preached the gospel with the Holy Spirit sent down from heaven" as literally and truly as the apostles did on the day of Pentecost and thereafter. Noah was "a preacher of righteousness" (2 Pet.2:5). He preached the gospel to the antidiluvians with the spirit of God assisting and co-operating (1 Pet. 4:6; 3:19,20; Gen. 6:3; Heb. 11:7). And the gospel was current with Israel in the wilderness and during the reign of the law under Moses. "Unto them was the gospel preached as well as unto us" (Heb. 4:2). "The word preached," however, "did not profit them, not being mixed with faith in them that heard it" (vs. 2). The same gospel, the same rest, and the same promise offered to them, and which they failed to obtain "because of unbelief" (Heb. 3:19), are now given to us (Heb. 4). Paul has asserted that the gospel is older than the law of Moses, having been "preached to Abraham" four hundred and thirty years previous to its inauguration (Gal. 3:8,16,17). It is by adding baptism into Christ to these Abrahamic gospel-promises that makes us "Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise" (Gal. 3:8,16,26-29).

III. Four Conditions of the Gospel Required of Sinners. The Scriptures preach the gospel (Gal. 3:8). "The word of the Lord endureth forever. And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you" (1 Pet. 1:25). When we recognize that the gospel is preached in the word of God, as these texts declare, and that the gospel proclaimed in "the Scriptures of the prophets" is the gospel "made known to all nations for the obedience of faith" (Rom. 16:26), then we realize that the gospel is as old as the Scriptures themselves. As the gospel, then, has been contemporaneous with all ages, it follows that the conditions of the gospel are applicable to all men in whatever age they live. In their application to sinners these conditions may be summarized in four propositions, namely:

(a) Hearing the gospel. Pointing to "this book of the law" (Deut. 30:10) Moses says: "It is not hidden from thee, neither is it far off. It is not in heaven, that thou shouldest say, Who shall go up for us to heaven, and bring it unto us, that we may hear it, and do it? Neither is it beyond the sea, that thou shouldest say, Who will go over the sea for us, and bring it unto us, that we may hear it, and do it? But the word is very nigh unto thee, in thy mouth, and in thy heart, that thou mayest do it" (Deut. 30:11-14). "This book" (the book, the Bible) is "not hidden" from us. Were it up in heaven or over the sea it would be beyond our reach. In the providence of God it has been brought "very nigh" to us. Holding "this book" in our hands, it is criminal to be ignorant of it. After paraphrasing this Scripture in Romans the tenth chapter Paul goes on to say: "How shall they believe in him of whom they have not heard?" (vs. 14). Hearing first, then faith. "Faith cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God" (vs. 17). Hearing God's word, that is, understanding it, always precedes belief of it. Speaking agriculturally, "the seed is the word of God" (Luke 8:11). Amplified, the word of God is "the word of the kingdom" (Matt. 13:19). "He that received the seed into good ground is he that heareth the word (of the kingdom), and understandeth it; which also beareth fruit, and bringeth forth, some an hundred fold, some sixty, some thirty" (vs. 23). The word of God is the incorruptible seed by which we are begotten (Jas. 1:18) and born again (1 Pet. 1:23-25). When farmers can raise corn without planting seed and wheat without sowing the grain, then, but not until then, will we believe that men and women can become Christians without hearing and understanding the word of God. Blessed are your eyes, dear reader, if they see; and your ears, if they hear (Matt. 13:16). "My mother and my brethren are these which hear the word of God, and do it" (Luke 8:21).

(b) Believing the gospel. In his summary of the conditions of salvation Paul includes belief: "Whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved. How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed?" (Rom. 10:13,14). Belief must be added to hearing. God saves only believers (1 Cor. 1:21). Now before the gospel can be believed it must be learned. And after it has been understood and believed it must be kept in memory, or we will be "forgetful hearers" (Jas. 1:23,24) and will "have believed in vain" (1 Cor. 15:2). But believe the gospel we must before we can have any promise of salvation (Mark 16:15,16). The power of God to save is only exerted upon those that believe (Rom. 1:16). Where there is ignorance of the gospel there can be no belief of it; and where there is no belief in it there is no "power unto salvation." Ignorant as well as enlightened unbelievers are alike beyond the pale of salvation offered by God to mankind upon the condition of faith (Rom. 5:1). Belief is listed with repentance as a commandment (Mark 1:14,15), making both equally binding as conditions of salvation. Belief is called a "commandment" in so many words (1 John 3:23). Since only those who do his commandments have a right to the tree of life and an entrance into the city (Rev. 22:14), it follows that all unbelievers must be destroyed with the abominable "without" the city of life (Rev. 22:15; 21:8).

(c) Confessing the gospel. Adverting again to Paul's summary of the conditions of salvation, we notice that as belief follows hearing in logical sequence, so "calling on the name of the Lord" or confession, follows belief. First, a belief of the gospel; then a confession of that belief. When Paul speaks of the word which is nigh us, "even in thy mouth, and in thy heart," he explains that he means "the word of faith which we preach" (Rom. 10:8). Notice, then, that the confession which the apostle proceeds to talk about is a confession of this "word of faith," not a confession of sin: "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved. For with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto (Greek, eis, for) salvation" (vss. 9,10). We must not only believe the truth in our hearts; we must "acknowledge" it with our mouths also (2 Tim. 2:25). This acknowledgment or confession was made by Christ before Pontius Pilate, and is called "a good confession" (1 Tim. 6:13). This confession on the part of Christ was a confession of "the word of faith," and related to the kingdom of God, and not to sin, as you may see by reading John 18:36,37. He had no sin to confess (Heb. 4:15; 7:26). Observe also that he made it "before Pontius Pilate," that is, publicly; and that Timothy made the same "confession before many witnesses" (1 Tim. 6:12). "This commandment" is then passed on from Christ and Timothy to us to be kept "without spot, unrebukable, until the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ" (vs. 14). Paul himself "called on the name of the Lord," that is, made this confession when he was baptized (Acts 22:16). And in keeping this commandment "without spot" it appears that all converts were required to make this confession in conjunction with their baptism: "Let us draw near with a true heart in full assurance of faith, ... and our bodies washed (baptized) with pure water. Let us hold fast the confession of our faith without wavering" (Heb. 10:22,23). "The confession of our faith," notice, not our sin. To confess our faith is to tell what we believe. And to meet the divine requirements in the case, this must be done "with the mouth" and "before witnesses." The "confession of faith" has been abolished today in a degenerate Christianity, for it is ignorant and has no "faith" to confess. Confession "with the mouth" has been superceded by revivalists who urge the people at blatant protracted meetings, "Only stand up"; "Just raise your hand"; "Sign this card"!! Such evasions and nullifications as these of God's command to make a confession of faith with the mouth and in the presence of witnesses is too palpable to need refutation here.

(d) Obeying the gospel. When an ignorant man hears the gospel, he awakes to the fact that he is a sinner (Rom. 7:8,9); when he trembles and believes it, he does nothing more than a devil (Jas. 2:19); when he confesses it, he is in his sins still. What must he do then to be saved from his sins? The answer is, he must obey the gospel. "Seeing ye have purified your souls in obeying the truth," is the way an inspired apostle puts it (1 Pet. 1:22). Purification comes, not by hearing, not by believing, not by confessing the truth, but by obeying it. Obedience implies a command. The sinner is told to repent and be baptized "for the remission of sins" (Acts 2:38). Baptism is repeatedly called "obedience" in the sixth chapter of Romans, because it is a command (Acts 10:48). Because it is a divine command baptism is appropriately called "the washing of water by the word" (Eph. 5:26) and "the obedience of faith" (Rom.16:26), because faith in the word which commands it moves the believer to obey. Thus it "saves us" (1 Pet. 3:21) by "purifying our souls" (1 Pet. 1:22) in giving us the birth of water (John 3:3). Unless we are born of water as well as of the spirit we cannot enter the kingdom of God (John 3:5). Unless born again we shall perish like the grass of the field and fade like its flowers (1 Pet. 1:21-25). Understanding that baptism includes confession, as we learned under "c," Acts 18:8 is most significant in the order of its statements: "Many of the Corinthians (a) hearing (b) believed, and (c,d) were baptized."

IV. Subject Matter, or "The Things" which Compose the Gospel. We must hear, believe, confess, and obey the gospel. Before we can discharge these duties we must know what the gospel is. To ascertain what the gospel is we must learn what its subject matter is; or in other words, the things which compose it. Now since the word gospel means "good news," what are the glad tidings about? We cannot go astray in answering this question if we look to the ministry of Christ, for he preached the truth (Rom. 15:8). Anointed to preach the gospel (Luke 4:18) he preached the kingdom of God (vs. 43). "Jesus came into Galilee, preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God" (Mark 1:14). "He went throughout every city and village preaching and showing the glad tidings of the kingdom of God" (Luke 8:1). He sent his twelve apostles to preach the kingdom of God (Luke 9:2). "They departed and went through the towns, preaching the gospel" (vs. 6). Whatever the kingdom of God is, it forms the subject matter of the gospel. The kingdom and the gospel are so interwoven that the one is the other. When the kingdom of God is preached the gospel is preached; and when the gospel is preached the kingdom of God is preached. There is no gospel apart from "this gospel of the kingdom" (Matt. 24:14). "This gospel" is not so much as mentioned in popular churches today, much less preached! They say the gospel consists exclusively of the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ. Now it is a fact that originally these truths about Christ formed no part of the gospel. The apostles "preached the gospel" (Luke 9:6) with the sacrificial import of Christ's death left out. They were not aware that Christ had to suffer. He told them of his approaching death and resurrection, but "they understood not this saying, and it was hid from them that they perceived it not" (Luke 9:22,45; 18:31-34). They could not preach that of which they were ignorant. Since in this state of ignorance concerning the sufferings of Christ they "preached the gospel," it is positive proof that the gospel originally, and as preached by them, consisted exclusively of the kingdom of God.

Previous, then, to the death of Christ the crucifixion formed no part of the gospel. Subsequently, however, it came to be preached as a supplement to "the gospel of the kingdom." This distinction appears in the phrases by which the preaching of the apostles is designated at these two different periods. In the gospels, written before the death of Christ, the proclamation is described as simply "the gospel of the kingdom of God"; whereas, in the book of Acts, after his death, the phrase runs, "The things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12). There was no alteration; there was simply addition. "The things concerning the kingdom of God" were the gospel before Christ's death; they remained the gospel after his death and resurrection; the only difference being that the "things concerning the name of Jesus Christ" were added to the kingdom as a means of procuring it (Acts 4: 12). The gospel of the kingdom, however, remained the gospel notwithstanding this addition, and has the precedence, being always put first and the things concerning Christ second, as the following texts will show, since they were all written after the death of Christ:

"And when they believed Philip preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, they were baptized, both men and women" (Acts 8:12).

"He spake boldly for the space of three months, disputing and persuading the things concerning the kingdom of God" (Acts 19:8).

"I know that ye all, among whom I have gone preaching the kingdom of God, shall see my face no more" (Acts 20:25).

"There came many unto his lodging, to whom he expounded and testified (1) the kingdom of God, persuading them (2) concerning Jesus" (Acts 28:23).

"Paul dwelt two whole years in his own hired house, and received all that came unto him, preaching (1) the kingdom of God, and (2) teaching those things which concern Jesus Christ" (Acts 28:30,31).

V. "The Gospel of the Kingdom," Consisting of "The Things Concerning the Kingdom of God, and the Name of Jesus Christ," is the Only True Gospel. From the evidence now before the reader it is plain that the gospel of the kingdom was preached by Christ and his apostles before his death and likewise after his resurrection; therefore "the gospel of the kingdom" continues to be the gospel to this day. Christ spent forty days with his disciples after his resurrection "speaking of the things pertaining to the kingdom of God" (Acts 1:3). He then left them under a commandment to preach "the gospel of the kingdom in all the world" (Mark 16:15,16; Matt. 24:14). Thus before the cross the gospel was the kingdom; after the cross the kingdom is the gospel still. As summarized by Luke in Acts 8:12 and elsewhere the gospel is composed of two sets of "things" tied together by the cross and securely held fast by the conjunction "and"—"the things concerning the kingdom of God, AND the name of Jesus Christ." "The things concerning the kingdom" are first; the things concerning the "name of Jesus Christ," second. To be ignorant of these "things" is to be ignorant of the gospel. As the Jews only accept "the things concerning the kingdom of God," and these only in a carnal and corrupt form, so the Gentiles only accept the things concerning "the name of Jesus Christ," and these they contemplate with perverted gaze. Both reject the gospel. There are many false gospels, but only one true one. Paul speaks of three gospels in Gal. 1:6-9:

1. Another gospel;
2. A perverted gospel; and
3. "The gospel of Christ";

but the first two are false. "The gospel of Christ" is a descriptive phrase which clearly identifies it with the gospel of the kingdom which he preached before and after the cross. "It is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth" (Rom.1:16). Readers, preachers, even angels in heaven are warned not to pervert this gospel, nor preach another. To change "the gospel of Christ," or to substitute another for it is a crime which will call down the curse of God upon the culprit.

"I marvel that ye are so soon removed from him that called you into the grace of Christ unto another gospel: which is not another; but there be some that trouble you, and would pervert the gospel of Christ. But though we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel unto you than that we have preached unto you, let him be accursed. As we said before, so say I now again, If any man preach any other gospel unto you than that ye have received, let him be accursed" (Gal. 1:6-9).

THE DUAL CHARACTER OF TRUTH

Truth is often of a dual character, taking the form of a magnet with two poles; and many of the differences which agitate the thinking part of mankind are to be traced to the exclusiveness with which partisan reasoners dwell upon one-half of the duality in forgetfulness of the other. The proper course appears to be to state both halves strongly, and allow each its fair share in the formation of the resultant conviction. But this waiting for the statement of the two sides of a question implies patience. It implies a resolution to suppress indignation if the statement of the one-half should clash with our convictions, and to repress equally undue elation if the half-statement should happen to chime in with our views. It implies a determination to wait calmly for the statement of the whole before we pronounce judgment in the form of either acquiescence or dissent.—Professor Tyndall.

BIBLE LESSONS ON FIRST PRINCIPLES

The Editor of "The Restitution" is now preparing for publication a series of Bible lessons designed to explain every essential feature of gospel truth. Three lessons of the series have just been published entitled respectively, "Introduction," "The Word of God in Threefold Aspect," and "The Gospel of the Kingdom the Only True Gospel." Valuable for conducting Bible studies and classes and for giving Berean lessons, as well as for individual study. Written primarily to teach the elemental principles of the gospel to candidates for baptism. Three cents for one copy; twenty-five cents the dozen.

SENTENTIOUS PARAGRAPHS

Christians at times die in order that Christianity may live.

The manliness of Christ is a good subject for consideration at this immediate juncture.

In the long run, righteousness is more powerful than evil. Such is the teaching of Christianity. Such also is the verdict of history.

A true conception of Christ's ideal humanity leads us to the assertion of his real divinity.

Belief in Jesus means to strive to be like him in all things, so much as in us lies.

The paramount need of the church and society is a renewal of faith in the absolute reality of the things pertaining to Jesus as the Christ the Son of the living God.

In the fullness of time Christianity came into the world. It has been called the consummate flower of the spiritual experience of man. This verdict is valid. The Christian faith has utilized truths contained in other systems, and has given as its unique contribution the incomparable personality of Jesus, as a special disclosure of the divine life to bless mankind here and hereafter.

THE CHEERY CRICKET

Have you ever heard Sir Cricket,
From his snug home in the thicket,
Sing his merry little lay ?
When the rain is falling, falling,
And you can't go out to play,
See if you can hear him calling.
Seems to me he tries to say:
"Cheer-up, cheer-up,
Skies will soon clear up.
Don't complain
Of the rain,
It will soon be fair again.
Cheer-up, cheer-up."

The red coral, which is used in jewelry, and which is known as precious coral, is mostly obtained in the Mediterranean, the Barbary coast furnishing the dark red, Sardinia the yellow or salmon color, and the coast of Italy the rose pink. It is also found in the Red Sea.

EDITORIAL

Following remarks from Brother E. W Knapp in a recent letter are so good we give them place here: "I see a writer quotes John 12:32 to prove Larger Hope. The 33rd verse reads, 'This he said, signifying what death he should die.' I have contended and now contend that 'all men' were drawn to him in the sense that all men were drawn to Abramam Lincoln, James Garfield, and Wm. McKinley by the manner of their death, although in the death of Lincoln there were two different classes drawn to him—the South in joy, the rest of the world in sorrow."

We have lost the company of Brother Sterling Russell indefinitely, because he has been held by the government for non-combative service. We are thankful to the government for granting him military exemption, but it grieves us as much as it does Brother Russell to have him separated from us. Our tears and prayers go with him in his enforced service. We join him ardently in prayer for the day to speed on when men shall learn war no more.

Lesson III of "Bible Lessons on First Principles" appears in this issue. It is published as a twelve page booklet, and makes a neat little messenger of truth. There will be ten lessons in the complete series. The Fellow Helpers' Society has published this number, and this explains why it takes its place among the literature of the truth at the low price of three cents per copy. In a day when everything is so high, to announce this booklet for sale at three cents the copy seems impossible. It is a marvel of cheapness, made possible by the appreciated co-operation of the Fellow Helpers and the blessing of God. We are profoundly thankful that it is possible for us to send out literature advocating the gospel of the kingdom so cheaply that the "poor have the gospel preached to them."

Brother Donaldson writes: "More than once I have wondered if it was good policy to continue 'The Young People's Page.' Not that I am tired of the work—far from it. I feel that I would miss it much; but I have grave doubts that the page is read by those for whom it is intended; for the various schemes I have tried have not brought the response desired. All letters reeived, with one exception, have been from adults who have not stated whether or not they have children in the family. If the page is not read by the young people then it is folly to continue it; for the space is too valuable to be filled with matter that is not read. What do you think about it?"

We think Brother Donaldson's page is fine, and we enjoy reading it very much; and we would regret for him to give it up—but we are among the adults, which fact makes our testimony irrelevant. After all, the question is whether the young people, for whose benefit the page is given and for whose enlightenment Brother Donaldson labors, read, enjoy, and profit by his work. He can only know that his efforts are appreciated by responses from readers; and if these are not forthcoming we suggest that Brother Donaldson discontinue his present page for young people and use his able pen as a contributor to The Restitution. In this field we know he will be read and appreciated.

THE CHURCH IN THE PRE-RESURRECTIONAL AND POST-RESURRECTIONAL STATES

Sermon Notes by the Editor on The Apocalypse

"I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord . . . . I John, who also am your brother, and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, was in the isle called Patmos . . . . I was in the spirit on the Lord's day, and heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet, saying, ...What thou seest, write in a book, and send it unto the seven churches which are in Asia" (Rev. 1:9-11).

I The Pre-Resurrectional State

1. John was a "companion" with the seven churches in the Domitian "tribulation" (vs. 9; Matt. 20:22; Acts 12:2; 2 Tim. 2:12; Rom. 8:17; 1 Pet. 4:13; Acts 14:22).

2. History of Domitian's persecution: Enthroned A. D. 81.—Last of the Flavin family.—His reign good at first; persecution began in A. D. 95.—First time Christians were persecuted by law.—Domitilla was banished; John was put in a caldron of oil (Tertullian); afterwards exiled in Patmos.—Domitian was slain A. D. 96.—Nerva came to the throne in his old age. His lenity brought home all the banished, John included, except Domitilla.—John died at the age of one hundred in A. D. 103.

3. "In spirit." Clothed with it for inspirational purposes (vs. 10; Ezek. 1:1; 2:2; 3:14; 8:3; 40:2; John 15:26; Rev. 4:2; 17:3; 21:10).

II The Post-Resurrectional State

"In (Greek, en) the Lord's day" (1) (John 8:56; 2 Thess. 2:3-8; Acts 17:31; Mal. 4:1,2; Psa. 118:24).

2. The "great voice like a trumpet." It raises the dead and sounds the alarm for war (vs. 10; Exo. 19:13; Num. 10:10; Judges 7:18; 2 Sam. 15:10; Amos 3:6; 1 Cor .15:52; 1 Thess. 4:16).

3. "I am the first and the last." The first and last of those who are raised from the dead, the immortal race, the new creation (vss. 12,17,18,19; Phil. 3:13; Dan. 9:17,18; 10:3-18; Zech. 4:1).

(1) In many instances "the Lord's day," "the day of the Lord," "the day of Christ," etc., refer to the second advent of Christ. No Bible student would think of denying this fact; but because these expressions refer sometimes and frequently to the return of our blessed Redeemer, is no reason why we should try and make them always allude to this one event. It is an easy matter to get one sense of a Bible word or phrase, and then cull from a concordance all the passages which fit that sense. A study the texts where "the day of the Lord" occurs will reveal the fact that there have been many such days. Wetstein was the first to interpret Rev. 1:10 as referring to the Lord's coming; Zullig, Maitland, and Todd following his leading. While we allow that "the Lord's day" is post-resurrectional, we are not unmindful of the fact that primarily the allusion is to Sundey. The ante-Nicene Fathers speak of Sunday as "the Lord's day" repeatedly; and Mr. Elliott, in "Horoe Apocalypticoe," points out that the primitive Syriac translates 1 Cor. 11:20, "not as befitteth the day of the Lord we eat and drink," which is proof of the early usage of calling Sunday "the Lord's day"; it is also indicative of the scriptural basis upon which that usage is built. The first day of the week was consecrated as a day of worship, alms-giving, and the Lord's supper (Acts. 20:7; 1 Cor. 16:2; John 20:19-26). "The Lord's day" in Rev. 1:10 doubtless includes the future and personal manifestation of the Son of Man; but its first and primary application is to the first day of the week. The basic construction of the Apocalypse requires this interpretation. Its visions, seals, trumpets, vials, etc., are grouped in sevens, and naturally begin on the first day of the week, Sunday—the birthday of both Christ and his church, the day on which God said, "Let there be light" (Gen. 1:3).

Pascal's thought, "It is Christianity which kills the 'I' in humanity; civilization only hides it," is one of the most arresting pronouncements of his time.

PRAYER

Article I.

Sisted Wood has asked some questions and, as prayer is a very important subject, we think it should be dealt with critically.

When the Savior sent his apostles to preach he told them first where not to go and who not to preach before he told them where to go and who to preach to. Just so when asked to teach them how to pray: he told them first of all how not to pray and what not to do before telling them how to pray and what to do. Before we could expect to talk to some one over a telephone we would have to first know we were put in connection. So before we can expect our prayers to be heard we must know that we are connected with the Father in heaven.

Access to the Father by Jesus

In doing this we must go to Jesus, who is the connecting link between us and the Father. Now let us consider the prayer that Jesus taught us to pray, when and where to pray it. Let us remember that Jesus is now answering the apostle's request, "Teach us how to pray" (Luke 11:1), and it is folly to expect that we can change it in any way and expect to have our prayers heard. Our hearts must be prepared before we go to prayer. Let us notice some of the preparations. "Take heed that ye do not alms before men to be seen of them; otherwise you have no reward of your Father which is in heaven."

Preparations for Prayer

No difference how charitable we were if it was done wholly for show it would unfit us for any future reward, also make of us hypocrites; therefore we could not expect God to hear our prayers. In order that our hearts may be prepared and our motives pure we do our alms in secret, then we may expect our prayers to be heard.

Where Not to Pray

Then Jesus tells us where not to pray. It would be hypercritical for us to pray standing in synagogues and on street corners with no other motive than to be seen of men. To remove any doubt on this point Jesus tells us where and how to pray: "But thou when thou prayest enter into thy closet, and when thou hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret; and thy Father which seeth in secret shall reward thee openly." Can we ignore this and expect God to overlook it? If so, why give it at all?

Vain Repititions Forbidden

Again, we are told not to use "vain repititions." Those who do all of their praying from prayer books, and repeat from year to year, certainly come under this head. Long drawn out prayers are also condemned. So now hear the Savior, "Be ye not therefore like unto them." So dear reader, we must clear ourselves of these faults before we go to prayer that we may lift up holy hands and expect God to hear.

Now Jesus is ready to tell us how to pray, but before giving the prayer let us consider again where and when to pray this particular prayer.

First—we ought to enter our closets and pray in secret.

Second—it is a prayer to begin the day with.

Morning and Evening Prayers

No one can expect the day to go right and end right that does not begin right. And then how fitting before leaving our bed rooms in the morning, to start the day right by taking God into our partnership.

"Our Father"

Let us notice the first sentence in this prayer, "Our Father which art in heaven." Is it true that he is our Father ? If not, then we have no right to utter this prayer. A sinner has no right to say this prayer because God is not his Father. Then how wrong is it for us to ask a promiscuous audience to repeat the Lord's prayer ! But how appropriate when within the sanctity of our rooms, closed in from the world in the freshness of the morning to acknowledge God as our Father, and to hallow his name, knowing that to us it is the most sacred of all names. And how it prepares our hearts for the duties of the day.

"Thy Kingdom Come"

When we open our eyes to a new day we at once become conscious of the fact that we are still under the rule and kingdoms of men and know that God's will is not being done, and as our desire is to have his will done, and knowing that nothing will ever accomplish this but the establishment of God's kingdom, we therefore pray "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

We know that it is possible for the kingdom to come before the day closes, and some day this will be true, and our prayer answered before the day is over. We know that God's will has always been done in heaven; nothing sinful can exist around his throne. But if war has existed there once his will has not always been done there; so our prayer would be inappropriate.

"Our Daily Bread"

"Give us this day our daily bread." He teaches us later on not to take thought for the morrow. We pray for this day's bread only, and at the close of the day when we have have had our full number of meals, we know God has heard our prayers. But how out of place it would be in the evening time as many do to stand up and say, "Give us this day our daily bread," when we have already had three full meals. How necessary then to pray with the spirit and understanding, and to be consistent. We feel grateful before retiring that God has provided us with daily bread, and that we can lie down free from hunger. Then before going to sleep we should thank him for his goodness.

Forgiveness of Debtors

"And fogive us our debts as we forgive our debtors." Let us remember that we are asking the Father to forgive us just as we forgive others. Then again, before retiring we take retrospective view of the day's conduct. If we discover we have been kind to others, and they have trespassed against us and we have forgiven them, we know the Father has forgiven us, and can go to sleep with a clear conscience. If not, we know we still owe the debt and are not forgiven; hence our sleep is troubled. But how soft the pillow seems to the one who has forgiven all trespasses: there are no tossings or misgivings to trouble the weary soul.

Help in Trials

"And abandon us not in trial, but deliver us from evil." We know when we leave our rooms in the morning we are going to have another day of trials, and our only hope of withstanding them is for the Father to prepare our means of escape, and give us strength to overcome in every trial. Again before retiring we look back over the day and see this trial and that trial that has come to us, and how it stands with us. Have we been an overcomer ? If so, we know God stood by us and heard our prayer. About this, too, we can rest with a clear conscience.

The Doxology

"For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory forever, Amen." In the morning this prayer is all before us; at night it has all been answered except "thy kingdom come," which is the only portion that is future. The rest of it belongs to everyday life, and we can understand at the close of a day just how we stand on the credit side of the ledger, and what our prospects for the kingdom are.

COMMUNICATIONS

"They shall make known unto you all things which are done here" (Col. 4:9).

Brother Huggins:

I noticed Brother Smith's offer in The Restitution. I wish to subscribe $10.00.

I am sending herewith $1.50 for renewal. Also enclosed clippings may be of interest to you, particularly Dr. Gray's article clipped from "Christian Herald."

We are holding meetings every two weeks. Have had the pleasure of two visits by Salem brethren and sisters, also from Barberton and Akron. Would be very much pleased to have visits by Cleveland brethren and sisters. Cannot yourself and family come down for a few days and be here for our meeting two weeks from tomorrow? Yours in hope, W. C. Heacock.

P. S.—Your view that Russia will make separate peace with Germany seems, as things are moving, to be correct.—W. C. H.

Dear Restitution:

I want to thank you for your kindness in sending me The Restitution. I do not live near any church of our faith, and as I am old and feeble, I do not have the chance to hear the truth; but thank God when I get The Restitution I get meat in due season. May God bless you and all the writers of the paper.

I do not understand how some of our writers can see that this war of Armageddon which is now going on is the same that is spoken of in the 38th chapter of Ezekiel. I am sure this Armageddon takes place at the coming of Christ and end of this age. Soon the devil will be bound and the reign of righteousness begin. This reign will last for a thousand years. During this thousand years the Jews will be gathered back to Palestine and become a very rich nation. Then at the close of the thousand years the devil will be loosed. Then the great battle of Gog and Magog will take place. Ezekiel says they come up like a cloud to cover the land. He says God rains on them fire and brimstone. John says fire comes down from heaven and devours them. Yes my brethren, Christ comes while this world war is going on. This is the war of Armageddon. The white horse and his rider are here. John Weeks.

LETTER TO A QUAKER MINISTER

Dear Brother Huggins:

I am sending a copy of a letter which I have written to an uncle of mine. Some one suggested that I sent it to The Restitution for publication. He says he knows he has everlasting life now, and is now born of the spirit. He does not believe in water baptism.

Sister Michael's Letter to Her Uncle

My own dear Uncle:

I will write to you this morning. I have been thinking of you a great deal since you were here, and I am sorry I did not get to see or talk with you more. It seemed everyone like myself wanted to do the talking, therefore none of us got to say just what we would like to have said. I want to write you in regard to your knowledge of being saved and being born of the spirit now. 1 John 4:1 says, "Believe not every spirit, but try the spirits whether they are of God." Isa. 8:20: "To the law and the testimony: if they speak not according to this word it is because there is no light in them."

You know sincerity will save no one, nor does it prove he is right. For example, Paul persecuted the churches of God, and thought he was doing right. You say you are born of the spirit now.

Please let me show you that you are mist....en. The Scriptures say first the natural and then the spiritual. 1 Cor. 42-48: "Howbeit, that was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward that which is spiritual. And as we have borne the image of he earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. Then shall be brought to pass this saying, Death is swallowed up in victory." Then is when we shall be born of the spirit—at the resurrection. Then we can appear and disappear as did Christ after his resurrection (John 3:8). Be not deceived; you cannot preach Christ unless you teach what he taught. He taught nothing that contradicted the Scripture.

Paul says, 2 Tim. 3:16: "All Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect (or as Revised Version says, 'complete') furnished completely unto every good work."

Then Paul goes on and charges Timothy before God and Jesus to "preach the word." He says, "The time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine." What is the word ? God's words are spirit and life, and they are truth (John 6:63; 17:17).

The word plainly teaches that we must repent, believe (the word), and be baptized. It also tells us what baptism is for, and what it represents. When a person has obeyed this ordinance he is begotten by the word. James 1:18 says, "Of his own will begat (not born) he us by the word of truth." Paul says, 1 Cor. 4:15, "For in Christ Jesus I have begotten you throught the gospel." 1 Pet. 1:22,23: "Seeing you have purified your souls in obeying the truth, through the spirit, unto unfeigned love of the brethren, being born (begotten, Revised Version) again, not to corruptible seed, but of incorruptible, by the word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." Peter then adds, "And this is the word which by the gospel is preached unto you."

Dear Uncle, .s you know, sincerity will save no man. Solomon says, Prov. 14:12: "There is a way that seemeth right unto a man, but the end thereof are the ways of death." I can of a truth say like Paul, it behooves us to "prove all things, and hold fast that which is good." Let us pray that the eyes of our understanding may be enlightened, that we may know what is the hope of his calling; which hope we have as an anchor of the soul, both sure and steadfast, and which entereth into that within the vail (Heb. 6:19). Let us believe his word is true as much as if it had all been brought to pass before our eyes, for Paul says in Heb. 10: 23, "He is faithful that promised."

Will you please read all the eleventh and twelrth chapters of Hebrews ? They are so plain on this subject. By faith we are saved through grace: and we walk by faith, not sight. When you read the first verse of the eleventh chapter of Hebrews, you will find that faith is one degree higher than knowledge.

Now dear Uncle, you say you know you are saved now. I am sure you do not claim you are better or have any pre-eminence above all these faithful ones named, do you? Well, Heb. 11:13 says, "These all died in faith, not having received the promises." You know that life eternal was one of the promises. Now read Heb. 12:1,2 in connection with this. It may make it plainer to you. How beautiful!

Now let us turn to God from idols to serve the living and true God, and wait for his Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead. The Scriptures say if the blind lead the blind both will fall in the ditch. We should study to show ourselves approved unto God, workmen that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. Peter say, 2 Pet. 3:16, "There are some things hard to be understood, and they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other Scriptures unto their own destruction Again he says, "Beware lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own steadfastness." I tell you, we should be very careful how we handle the word of God. Jesus tells us himself, "The words that I have spoken, the same shall judge us in the last day" (John 12:48).

Well, I would like to write much more, but I will close lest I worry you with much writing. All I have written has been in the spirit of love, and I hope it will be received in the same spirit. Whether we believe his word or not, "it will not return unto him void, but will accomplish that whereuno he sent it." But our life depends upon our belief of it.

Now please write soon. Your affectionate niece,
Bettie Michaels.

P. S.—It seems my mind is so full I cannot stop, so I will write a little more.

Now Uncle, the Bible is so plain to me on doctrinal points, as well as on reproof and other things, I felt if I did not write you I would not be doing what I knew to be my duty. Do not feel hard toward me for it for I know that your belief contradicts many plain Scriptures. The Scripture you think we contradict are in harmony with what we believe. I have studied the word of God more than you think, and any new doctrine that comes up I am always ready to see what is in it. I feel that to be a duty too; and while I am doing that, the plain truth of God's word is more clearly brought to view.

Grandma quite a while ago gave me some of "God's Revivalist" papers to read. In one of them is quoted that Scripture in John 3:8 about being born of the spirit. One of your belief commenting on it says, "We cannot understand the mystery." You said while here we could not understand it because we were carnally minded. This man, according to you, must be carnally minded, too. But it is very plain to my mind; as I have tried to make it plain to you in this letter.

Now Uncle, let us take every word of this letter home to ourselves. I have taken it to myself. Let us see where we stand, then prepare ourselves to meet our God. May we be able to say, "Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us." God knoweth all things, and for what purpose they are done. "His words are a savor of life unto life, or of death unto death." Let us make them life to us.

Good by. With much love, B. M.

Thankfulness To God

Praise to God, immortal praise,
For the love that crowns our days!
Bounteous source of every joy,
Let thy praise our tongues employ!
For the blessings of the field,
For the stores the gardens yield,
For the joy which harvests bring,
Grateful praises now we sing.

Flocks that whiten all the plain,
Yellow sheaves of ripened grain;
Clouds that drop their fattening dews,
Suns that temperate warmth diffuse;
All that spring, with bounteous hand,
Scatter o'er the smiling land;
All that liberal autumn pours,
From her overflowing stores:

These, to that dear Source we owe,
Whence our sweetest comforts flow;
These, through all my happy days,
Claim my cheerful songs of praise.
Lord, to thee my soul should raise
Grateful never-ending praise:
And when every blessing's flown,
Love thee for thyself alone.

Thanksgiving

Some one has most truly said that the greatest sin is ingratitude. Recently in our local papers. was reported a court action for the recovery from a young man of money paid a doctor for resetting a broken arm, caused—so the complainent stated—by rough handling on the part of the young man who, at the risk of his own life, saved the complainant—a young woman—from drowning. At the trial it was proven that had it not been for the action of the man, the woman could not have been saved; also that he had ruined a good suit of clothes, a watch and other things. He denied the rough handling. Can you imagine a nature so heinously detestable as that shown by this woman? Her utter lack of appreciation, her ingratitude, the financial loss to the young man, his loss of time, his discomfort, his good intentions—none of these things appealed to her. We will not say anything about the saving of her life, for apparently she did not value that, and we must admit we do not think it worth the effort or risk. Yes, hers is a queer nature; yet what about ourselves. ?

God in his love has given us everything we possess. Our life is a gift from his gracious hand. It was from him we received our health, sound mind, shelter, clothing, and food; it is from him we get sunshine and every pleasure in life. Even while we were rebellius, God in his love made arrangements for our redemption. God is anxious that we might live with him and his Christ throughout the countless ages of eternity. God does not ask much from us in return. He simply asks us to be appreciative, to show our gratitude in believing that he is sincere, to accept his mode of salvation which is to allow his Son Christ Jesus, who died for our sins, to dwell in our hearts, knowing that if we permit him to enter he will so rule our thoughts, action, and words that we will be acceptable sons and daughters of the Most High.

But have we shown this appreciation? have we shown our gratitude? Are we not pretty much like the woman in the true story that heads our article? Are we not more prone to complain about one rainy or cloudy day than to thank God for the five bright sunshiny days? Do we not affect a long face for one day's illness rather than give God praise for a life time of health? In other words, is not our nature more apt to abuse, blame, condemn or disapprove rather than approve, praise or thank? Do we not show very little appreciation, gratitude, or thankfulness, and yet that it all our God asks from us in return for all he has done for us. It is not very much, is it? Then my friends, let us cultivate a spirit of thankfulness; for we have much to be thankful for. God has done so much for us: we have done so little for him. Then from this nature let us change our natures by being appreciative, showing gratitude and rendering thanksgiving to God.

Our Weekly Puzzle

"And all the angels . . . . worshipped God, saying, Amen; blessing, and glory, and wisdom, and thanksgiving, and honor, and power, and might, be unto our God for ever and ever, Amen."

Where in the Bible can the above be found?

Answer next issue.

Answer to puzzle in last issue.

The passage was written by John.

The Son is Jesus the Christ.

The meaning of "Perish" is, to pass away from life; be destroyed or consumed; hence to be lost; come to nought; decay.

The passage is found in John 3:16,17.

Psalm 100

Make a joyful noise unto the Lord, all ye lands.

Serve the Lord with gladness: come before his presence with singing.

Know ye that the Lord he is God, it is he that has made us, and not we ourselves; we are his people, and the sheep of his pasture.

Enter into his gates with thanksgiving, and into his courts with praise: be thankful unto him, and bless his name.

For the Lord is good, his mercy is everlasting, and his truth endureth to all generations.

One of the greatest sins of mankind is a lack of appreciation.

"THE WAITING SAINTS WILL BE HIS WIFE"

There is a hope to mortals given,
Beyond this night of gloom;
There is a rest for captives driven,
When Christ shall ope the dismal tomb.

There is a crown that he shall wear,
Held in the courts of heaven;
There'll be a Kingdom we shall share,
When golden harps to saints are given.

O sacred love, O rapturous joy!
Our King so true, so fair,
He'll come away from courts above;
Immortal youth we then shall share.

O bliss supreme, O hope divine!
My Savior true, may I be thine?
The joys of earth soon pass away,
True joy will come, and come to stay.

The master-hand shall give the crown,
The servant then receive the gown;
The bridegroom gives immortal life;
The waiting saints will be his wife.

The God of all, his name is love,
Jesus is coming from realms above;
The Father and Son, their aim is one;
Forever on earth their will to be done.

THE SOULS UNDER THE ALTAR

An Exposition of Rev. 6:9-11

By A. E. Griffiths

"And when he had opened the fifth seal, I saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the word of God, and for the testimony which they held: and they cried with a loud voice, saying, How long, O Lord, holy and true, dost thou not judge and avenge our blood on them that dwell on the earth? And white robes were given unto every one of them; and it was said unto them, that they should rest yet for a little season, until their fellowservants also and their brethren, that should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled" (Rev. 6:9-11).

As the Bible Class in connection with the Church of God in Cleveland is studying the book of Revelation, perhaps a few words in reference to one of the many subjects of that wonderful book will not be out of place. There are many things that are difficult to understand in the Scriptures, but the fact of them being difficult does not necessarily make them impossible. Logically it makes them possible; only more research and study are required to obtain the result desired.

The Popular Interpretation

The popular idea of the "souls under the altar" is that it is a strong proof of the doctrine of the "immortal soul" and the conscious state of the dead; but when we apply a little reason and common sense to the reading of this text, this orthodox theory is entirely annihilated.

In the first place, the general idea is that the soul goes to heaven at death, yet it says here they are "under the altar"; and remember this altar referred to is the altar of sacrifice, and that was never in heaven but on earth. The only altar mentioned as being in heaven is the altar of incense (Rev. 8:3,4).

Again, if these souls are in heaven and are in the presence of God, where everything is happiness and perfection, how can they be crying out for vengeance on their persecutors? It would be repugnant to any perfect being to seek vengeance; besides, if these souls were in heaven, then by the same analogy their persecutors would be in hell, and they would be receiving all the vengeance that any of the souls in heaven could wish them to get. There would be no necessity for them to cry out to God to avenge them when he had already done it! And so just a few common sense questions applied to this reading will be sufficient to non-plus any othodox preacher or writer, as they can bring no proof from the Scriptures to uphold their doctrine, and cannot help but be defeated when the word of God is used as a weapon against them. Let us now look into the subject scripturally instead of theologically, and get a clear understanding of it.

The Altar

Our first task is to discover what is meant by "the altar." At the time God gave Moses the ten commandments he told him to build an altar of earth, as a medium by which the children of Israel might approach God: "An altar of earth thou shalt make unto me, and shall sacrifice thereon thy burnt offerings, thy sheep and thine oxen: in all places where I record my name I will come unto thee, and I will bless thee. And if thou wilt make an altar of stone, thou shalt not build it of hewn stone: for if thou lift up thy tool upon it, thou hast polluted it. Neither shalt thou go up by steps unto mine altar, that thy nakedness be not discovered thereon" (Exod. 20:24-26).

We find here that the altar was to be made of earth, which is the same material that man is made of (Gen. 2:7), therefore it is typical of humanity. Stone could be used for the same purpose, but only on condition that it was not cut or hewn by any instruments of man's contrivance. Either material could be used so long as it remained in the natural state in which God had formed it. Here we have a type of Christ who was "made of a woman, made under the law" (Gal. 4:4), and was "in all points tempted like as we are" (Heb. 4:15), and "bore the image of the earthy" (1 Cor. 15:49). And so in this case, the altar referred to represents Christ. Paul speaks very clearly on this point when he says: "We have an altar whereof they have no right to eat, which serve the tabernacle" (Heb. 14:10). When God gave Moses the law he commanded that a bullock should be killed and the blood should be poured beside the bottom of the altar (Exod. 29:12). "And thou shalt take all the fat that covereth the inwards, and the caul that is above the liver, and the two kidneys and the fat that is upon them, and burn them upon the altar, but the flesh of the bullock and his skin, and his dung, shall thou burn with fire without the camp; it is a sin offering" (Exod. 29:13,14).

Now we can begin to see why John speaks of seeing "souls" under the altar. The word "soul" is translated from the Hebrew word "nephesh"; and the word "life" in the following quotation is from the same Hebrew word: "For the life of the flesh is in the blood" (Lev. 17:11). So when John speaks about "souls" he refers to the "lives" of those who had been slain for believing the word of God; and as the blood of the sacrifice in the type was poured at the bottom of the altar, which is equivalent to being under it, the expression which John uses is perfectly clear and intelligible. Christ said: "It is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than one tittle of the law to fail" (Luke 16:17). John knowing this adapts his language according to God's purposes, and in the one word "altar" refers to Christ, not only as the Savior who was born, lived, died and rose again, but also demonstrates his relationship to the law in type. Therefore the souls that John saw under the altar, represented those who had died in the faith, and had been sacrificed on the altar of Christ who said: "Whosoever shall lose his life for my sake shall find it" (Matt. 16:25).

A Loud Voice

The next point in our text is that "they cried with a loud voice." Now we know perfectly well that dead people do not talk, let alone cry out. Then let us find what is meant in this case. It is perfectly clear that the people John saw under the altar were not literal people, therefore there is no necessity to try to explain a literal cry, or voice. We find instances in the word of God where inanimate things cry out. For example God said to Cain, "The voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground" (Gen. 4:10). It is a physical impossibility for blood to speak or possess a voice, yet this is a metaphor of speech which is of frequent occurrence in our every-day conversation. We often refer to an abstract subject as speaking for itself, and see nothing extraordinary in it. We do not presume that the subject in discussion is in possession of an immortal soul, or is a ghost: why attach such foolish ideas to the Scriptures? Again, another passage says: "For the stone shall cry out of the wall, and the beam out of the timber shall answer it" (Hab. 2:11). And James says: "Behold, the hire of the laborers who have reaped down your fields, which is of you kept back by fraud, crieth" (James 5:4). Anyone acquainted with grammar can understand that these quotations are metaphors of speech, and the same rule applies to the words of our text when they cried out with a loud voice.

But there is a deeper meaning still attached to this cry because, as they had died for the word of God, they had been

Offered as a Sacrifice

And here again we find the close connection they bore to Christ. Paul says, "Yea, and if I be offered upon the sacrifice and service of your faith, I joy and rejoice with you all" (Phil. 2:17). By referring to the Greek text we find this word "spendomai," which means "to be poured out." So as being slain for the word of God constitutes being a sacrifice, the blood of the victim is poured out under the altar, exactly where John said he saw the souls. In reference to Christ we read, "He shall divide the spoil with the strong, because he hath poured out his soul unto death" (Isa. 53:12). And Paul explains how the priest daily offered up sacrifice, first for his own sins, and then for the people; but Christ did this only once, when he offered up himself (Heb. 7:25-27).

We can now understand that the souls which John saw under the altar represented those who had been sacrificed for believing and preaching the word of God with "a loud voice" and their cry now goes up from all the saints today: "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." When that prayer is answered the souls under the altar will have been avenged, for we read, "Say to them that are of a fearful heart, Be strong, fear not, behold, your God will come with vengeance" (Isa. 35:4).

The Souls Depend on Resurrection

The text goes on to say that "they shall rest a little season, until their fellowservants should be killed as they were." Here we see the same thought that Paul wrote to the Hebrews: "And these having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise; God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect" (Heb. 11:39,40). All the ancient worthies are dead and sleeping in the dust and will so remain until the coming of Christ; and when they come forth so will the souls under the altar who represent those who have died in Christ; and as these receive their reward and enter into eternal life, their persecutors at the same time will receive God's vengeance. "They shall drink of the wine of the wrath of God, which is poured out without mixture into the cup of his indignation; and he shall be tormented with fire and brimstone in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb" (Rev. 14:10). Thus is the picture completed which John draws in the verses we have chosen for our study.

White Robes Signify Righteousness

The text says that everyone of them were given white robes. This is another proof that they were the saints redeemed, as white is the scriptural significance for righteousness. "And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white; for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints" (Rev. 19:8). When we are adopted into God's family and have taken on the name of Christ, we are exhorted to keep our garments spotless. "Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments, lest he walk naked and they see his shame" (Rev. 16:15). Therefore, beloved, let us who have taken on the all-saving name, watch for the day of his coming, and keep our garments (robes) unsullied, that we may be eligible to stand before him on the great resurrection morn, and have addressed to us those precious words: "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world" (Matt. 25:34).

A BIBLE READING

1 John 4:6: "We are of God: he that knoweth God heareth us; he that is not of God heareth not us. Hereby know we the spirit of truth and the spirit of error" John 14:17: "Even the spirit of truth, whom the world cannot receive, because it seeth him not, neither knoweth him; but ye know him, for he dwelleth with you and shall be in you." 1 Cor. 2:10: "For the spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God." Romans 8:8: "So then they that are in the flesh cannot please God." They have not the spirit of God: they know not of him.

Eph. 5:1: "Be ye therefore followers of God as dear children, and walk in love as Christ also hath loved us and hath given himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God." 1 Cor. 15:58: "Therefore my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmoveable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." 2 Pet. 3:18: "Grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. To him be glory both now and forever. Amen."

The number of women acting as substitutes for men in the field in France has passed the 1,000,000 mark.

M. M. Dowie said: "It is a great many years since I learned that people rarely say 'thank you' when they have strong reasons to do so, and say it freely on quite uncalled for occasions."

THE TRINITY

The trinity in theology is the union of three persons in one Godhead, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit. Trinity also means any combination of three parts, persons, characters, etc. The doctrine of the trinity has been taught for a long time but acording to history, it took nearly four hundred years of ecclesiastical wrangling to produce that precious dogma. It was not until the general council of bishops held at Constantinople in the year 381, that it was finally fixed that the Holy Ghost was a third person of the trinity, coequal, co-eternal, without bodily parts, or passions. The subject of the trinity has no doubt caused more strife, bitterness, discord, and even bloodshed, than any other doctrine ever promulgated.

The Christian trinity was not derived from the doctrines of Moses, Christ, or Paul, and is not taught anywhere in the Bible. Trinitarians will sometimes quote 1 John 5:7: "For there are three that bear record in heaven: the Father, the Word, and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one." Upon investigation we find that this is a spurious interpolation, and not only does the Revised Version omit this verse, but so also do all modern translations—the Emphatic Diaglott, Young's Bible translation, the American Bible Union translation, and the Improved Version, etc. The words were not found in any Greek MS. before the fifth or sixth century, and in no early version.

We might quote John 10:30; 17:11. Jesus here refers to a oneness of mind and purpose, both speaking the same thing. 1 Cor. 1:10 is another illustration of oneness of mind. So then we learn that God and Christ being two distinct personalities yet there is a oneness of mind between them.

God

1 Cor. 8:6; Eph. 4:6: "But to us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things." Mark 12:29: "Hear, O Israel; the Lord our God is one Lord." Deut. 6:4; Isa. 45:5; 1 Tim. 2:5 tell us there is one God and none else; therefore the common idea that there are three gods is unscriptural.

In Matt. 3:17 the record says that at the time Jesus was baptized a voice came from heaven saying, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." This is the first instance that we have where God recognized him as his Son. John 10:36: "I am the Son of God." John 1:49: "Thou art the Son of God." Mark 15:39: "Truly this man was the Son of God."

In 1 Tim. 2:5 we read about one mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus. Then if Christ is a mediator, how can he be a mediator and God at the same time? In John 1:18 and 1 John 4:12 we read that "no man hath seen God at any time." From this we learn that no man ever went to heaven in the presence of God, and that Jesus was not God, for he was seen of many men during his life upon earth. Also read Matt. 17:5; Mark 8:29; Luke 10:22; John 3:16. There are some fifty-five or more texts declaring that Christ is the Son of God, and it seems to us these should be sufficient.

Holy Spirit

We find that the Holy Spirit is the instrumental power of the Father, radiating from his presence, filling universal space. God and his spirit cannot be separated. They are both one. The sun and the light tnat comes from the sun are one. So God and the spirit that comes from God, are one. God is the centre and glorious substantial form of the spirit that fills heaven and earth. Gen. 1:2 tells us that in the beginning the spirit of God moved or hovered over the waters. Job 26:13; Psa. 33:6 show the power that radiated from God. In Job 33:4, in reference here to the spirit and breath, we note that translatres use spirit and breath for the same Hebrew word. Then we know that these are the workings of God. Luke 11:9,10 says it will be given only to those who ask for it.

May we all work, and be partakers of the spirit that will fit us for the promised kingdom.

ANOTHER ISSUE OF SONG BOOK PROPOSED

To the Brethren scattered abroad: Greetings!

We have a very interesting matter to present to you, one which we hope will meet with general response. Before we make the appeal we have in mind, we wish first to make a brief report of the song book. It will not be necessary for us to go into details and tell you of the many things we had to overcome in order to complete the book. Many things that we cannot speak of here caused delay in having it printed. However, it was accomplished and a few over a thousand books printed and the demand was so great that in about four months the entire lot was sold. After the plates were paid for, the printing and binding, and the books all sold, we had one hundred and thirty dollars above all expenses.

The plan was, when we started the work, to return as much as we could of the two dollars pledged by the brethren to buy the plates. This, of course, we are under obligations to do; but after all it would be a small amount divided among so many.

Now, for our appeal: We have at the present time, about one hundred and forty or fifty orders for books we cannot fill; so the demand seems to be quite urgent for another edition. We have already had it figured on and think we can print five hundred copies and sell them at eighty or ninety cents each. We sold the former books cloth bound, for fifty cents, the actual cost of making and postage. The cost of printing, paper, etc., is so much greater that we cannot possibly sell the next book for less than eighty or ninety cents, and it might be that by the time we get ready to print it would cost a dollar. But even then it would be cheap. The publishing house which bound our other book sold a book similar in size for one dollar and twenty-five cents each, and they told us they sold only three hundred in a year. They said our book had a phenomenal sale. The church now owns the plates which cost us three hundred and fifteen dollars, and probably could not be duplicated for less than five hundred dollars. You will understand that in printing another book, that the printing and binding would be all the cost. As the church owns the plates we thought of trying this plan of asking the brethren to make us a loan to put with what we have to pay for cost of printing, and then as fast as the books are sold we will return the loan. Now, we do not ask for any money. Just send us your pledges, and when we have enough to print the book we will call for the money. Instead of buying liberty bonds and helping the world in their work of slaughter, let us help the gospel along. We need more books badly, and it seems to us that there are brethren among us who could loan us a hundred dollars. To such we appeal to your patriotism for the truth, and surely we ought to show as much patriotism for the truth as the world does for their country. We will first leave it open for anyone to make us the loan of the above amount; and second, how many will pledge us ten dollars each; and third, how many five dollars each; then below that amount.

Send your pledge for just what you feel able to loan. Now do not forget that as fast as the books are sold the money will be returned, the larger amounts first, and so on down till all are paid.

Now, brethren, this matter is up to you. Who will be the first to respond and get this important work going? We might mention here that the former book was sewn in eight page fold, which is not heavy enough to hold the thread. The next one will have sixteen pages sewn together, which will be double in strength. We have some new congregations who have no books at all, and others have only half enough. Again we will say, as soon as the money is provided the work will progress rapidly and the book be gotten out in short order.

Now who will be the first to respond and help push this work along?

THE MAN OF SIN, THE SON OF DESTRUCTION

Before we can find out who this son of destruction is we will have to find out who or what destruction itself is. We find in Romans 5:12 that by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned. The question is, what caused man to sin? We will find the answer in Gen. 3:13: "And the woman said, The serpent beguiled me, and I did eat." Gen. 3:4: "And the serpent said unto the woman, Ye shall not surely die." So we see that death or destruction came by sin, and sin by the woman being deceived by false doctrine, or to be exact, a lie. We find in Rev. 12:9 that the old serpent is called the devil and satan, and Jesus said he was a liar and the father of it (John 8:44). So one who teaches the same doctrine is a son or seed of the serpent which caused destruction, and therefore is the son of destruction.

Gen. 3:15. God promises a time to come when the seed of the woman will bruise the head of the seed of the serpent. In Jesus Christ we find the seed of the woman, he being born of woman without the intervention of man (Matt. 1:18-25). The true church is the body of the seed of the woman Jesus Christ (Col. 1:24) and he (Christ) is the head (Eph. 5:23). So the seed of the serpent, or son of destruction, must have a head and body; and that is what I am going to point out.

The Head and Body of Sin

The Roman Catholic Church claims to be the mother and mistress of all churches; and she is mother of all except the true church of the living God.. All the false systems can trace their origin to the Catholic Church. The pope claims to be the head of the church, and his claim is true as far as false doctrine goes. So the papacy is the head of the seed of the serpent, the man of sin, the son of destruction—just as Jesus is the head of the true church, the seed of the woman.

The papacy being the head, those holding the doctrine of man's immortality, "We shall not surely die," must represent the body of the man of sin. "The day of Christ shall not come until that man of sin the son of destruction is revealed, who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God or that is worshipped; so that he as God sitteth in the temple of God. Remember ye not, that when I was yet with you, I told you these things"? (2 Thess. 2:2-6).

The council of Trent declared the pope to be infallible, and he claims to have the power to forgive sin. His people call him "Holy Father," "His Holiness," and "Reverend"—all which belong to God and him alone. This proves that this head of the man of sin does exalt himself above God. He claims to be the head of the church (which is the temple of God), whereas Jesus is the head.

Notice Paul says, "Sitteth in the temple of God, shewing himself (his own body or followers) that he is God." So you see he does not deceive those who are watching for the coming of the day of Christ. The man of sin is about to be revealed, body and all, in the uniting of all Christian churches (so called). This is being talked of everywhere today, so the day of Christ must be near, even at the door.

ADOPTING A QUARREL

Some girls cannot know of a quarrel without at once taking sides. If Ellen and Mary fall out, they feel it necessary to ally themselves with Mary against Ellen or to take Ellen's side against Mary. But in all probability there is fault on both sides. And except in rare cases, there is no need for you to take up either side of the quarrel. If you remain friends with both Mary and Ellen, the chance for you to reconcile them is far better than if you joined forces with either one against the other.

WHEN A BOOK IS WORTH SOMETHING

"No book is worth anything which is not worth much; nor is it serviceable, until it has been read, and reread, and loved, and loved again; and marked so that you can refer to the passages you want in it, as a soldier can seize his needs in an armory, or a housewife bring the spice she needs from her store."—John Ruskin.

EDITORIAL

We are enjoying a protracted visit from Sister Annie Lehman, of Troy, Ohio.

Nov. 20th Brother Quay Brandt and Sister Helen Meermans were united in marriage. The ceremony was solemnized in the church. We are glad that another home is built upon the foundation of truth and righteousness. May they enjoy the approving smile of God in this life and partake of the pleasures that are forever in the life that is to come.

Since last report the following have witnessed a good confession of faith and were baptized into Christ for adoption into the family of God and heirship in his kingdom: Nov. 17th, Thomas Thomson, formerly Presbyterian, and his wife, Nellie Thomson, formerly neutral; and Mrs. Isabelle Bain, formerly Presbyterian. May they all wait in faith and patience the Lord's return.

Let us provoke each other to love and good works, and not be influenced by the desire of popularity, lest we love the praise of men more than the praise of God. What a dreadful reward was it when the Pharisees sought to be seen and approved of men, and obtained what they sought—human favor with the abhorrance of their God. We shrink with fear from the thought of preaching from this unworthy motive; for in exact proportion to its increase will our love for Christ, and desire for his favor, diminish. The only path to true greatness is to seek the favor of God, to study to show ourselves "approved of God," and this can only be done by "rightly dividing the word of truth."

THE EXALTATION OF CHRIST AND THE SAINTS

Sermon Notes by the Editor on The Apocalypse

"And from Jesus Christ, who is the faithful witness, and the first begotten of the dead, and the prince of the kings of the earth. Unto him that loved us and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us a kingdom (basileia), priests for his God and Father, to him be glory and dominion forever and ever. Amen. Behold he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him; and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him" (Rev. 1:5-8).

I. "From Jesus Christ."

1. How and when Jesus became Christ (Matt. 1:21; Acts 2:36; John 20:31; Acts 10:38; Matt. 3).

II. "The Faithful Witness."

1. Witness (Greek, martus), means martyr (vs. 5; John 18:36-38; 19:12,13; Heb. 10:23; 1 Tim. 6:12,13; Matt. 27: 11; 26:25; Mark 14:61,62).

III. "First Begotten of the Dead."

1. "Protos," translated "first," is also render- "chief," and means "foremost" in the sense of importance (Matt. 20:27; Acts 16:12; 17:4; 25:2; 1 Tim. 1:15; 1 Cor. 15:3).

2. In this sense Christ is "the first" to be raised from the dead. Prior to him some had been brought out of the dominion of death; however, they were only restored to mortal life. Death had "no more dominion over" Christ after he was raised, because he had the power of "an endless life" (Rom. 8:29; Rev. 20:6; Col. 1:18; Acts 26:23; 1 Cor. 15:23).

IV. "Prince of the Kings of the Earth."

1. Christ is ruler of all kings; all power is his on earth (Matt. 11:27,28; John 17:2; Phil. 2:9,11; 1 Pet. 3:22; Rev. 17:14; 19:16; Psa. 89:27).

2. "Made for us a kingdom" (Emphatic Diaglott) (vs. 6; Ex. 19:6; 1 Pet. 2:9).

3 Dominion, kratos, "might, strength," etc.

V. He is Coming in Clouds to Execute Judgment and Establish His Kingdom

1. "Clouds" are symbolic of multitudes of saints who will assist him as kings and priests under him (vs. 7; Heb. 13:1; Nahum 1:3; Ezek. 38:9, 21-23).

Better an ounce of "did" than a pound of "going to do."

COMMUNICATION

"They shall make known unto you all things which are done here." (Col. 4:9).

Dear Brothers and Sisters in the Lord:

We of Unionville, O., are rejoicing these days both for the wonderful love and mercy of God to his believing people everywhere, and because we can see his presence in the great conflicts which are now taking place on the earth and know that every heart beat brings us closer to that great day when he, whose right it is, will come, and will not tarry.

We also rejoice because of the addition of two young and beloved members, Brother and Sister Luther, the first fruits of our meetings of four years in Unionville. They were attracted by tracts sent out by the writer which, in a rather round-about way, eventually fell in their hands. Many tracts have been sent out and many talks have been had with friends and neighbors about God's plan of salvation, and we have at last gained two, so we rejoice. Brother Luther had a heart that sought for God, and he found that we were ready to help him. And then the Brothers and Sisters of Cleveland, with a spirit of co-operation and love, sent Brother and Sister Huggins to us for five short weeks. Many hallowed and beautiful experiences were shared with Brother and Sister Huggins, and among them was the time spent in teaching the truth to several interested friends. Happy evenings and many social hours were spent among ourselves and with the brothers and sisters who came down from Cleveland.

As a result our friends enjoyed our company and we were glad to have them with us.

But the glad culmination of those gatherings came when on Sunday evening, Oct. 28, 1917, Mr. and Mrs. Luther made a public confession of their faith, being baptized in the church of God at Cleveland. They have now been made clean and free from the condition of those who are aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, without God and without hope. With rejoicing of hearts we gave them the right hand of fellowship at our little meeting on Nov. 4th, 1917, where they already felt at home, as Brother and Sister Luther before their baptism were regular in their attendance. With perhaps a long period of service before them we pray that they may remain steadfast, ever walking in the way of the righteous, so that when Jesus comes they may find an abundant entrance into the kingdom prepared for us from the foundation of the world.

Brother Chas. Fankbonner.

THE RESTITUTION SUNDAY SCHOOL LEAF

Lesson XVII

Thanksgiving

Memory Text

"O give thanks unto the Lord; for he is good; for his mercy endureth forever." (Psa. 136:1).

1. "It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord and to sing praises unto thy name, O Most High;
2. "To show forth thy loving kindness in the morning and thy faithfulness every night" (Psa. 92: 1,2).
3. "Blessed be the Lord who daily loadeth us with benefits, even the God of our salvation" (Psa. 68:19).
4. "In everything give thanks; for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you" (1 Thess. 5: 18).
5. "Give thanks always for all things unto God and the Father, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ" (Eph. 5:20).
6. "And whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus, giving thanks to God and the Father by him" (Col. 3:17).
7. "Bless the Lord, O my soul; and forget not all his benefits" (Pas. 103:2).
8. "What shall I render unto the Lord for all his benefits toward me" (Psa. 116:12).
9. "Neither murmer ye, as some of them also murmured, and were destroyed of the destroyer" (1 Cor. 10:10).
10. "But love ye your enemies, and do good, and lend, hoping for nothing again; and your reward shall be great, and ye shall be the children of the highest; for he is kind unto the unthankful and to the evil" (Luke 6:35).
11. "Cause me to hear thy loving kindness in teh morning; for in thee do I trust; cause me to know the way wherein I should walk; for I lift up my soul unto thee" (Psa. 143:8).

Practical Truths

The emotion of gratitude is one of the noblest possessions of a human heart. That person who is the continual recipient of favors is stolid indeed who remains ungrateful. Thankfulness or a fulness of thanks, is the outward expression of a grateful feeling. Gratitude is the feeling itself. Thanksgiving is the act of expressing our gratitude. The feeling of a grateful heart finds expression in thanksgiving. As thanksgiving is the language of gratitude, so murmuring is the language of a heart where gratitude does not dwell. Expression has a reflex action upon our lives, and while murmurings have a tendency to crush out gratitude, the giving of thanks stimulates and invigorates it. As we all love to see the expression of gratitude in others we ought to cultivate thankfulness toward others, and always express gratitude for favors received. God is not pleased with murmurings. Let us cultivate gratitude, and express it by "thanksgiving." Do we fully consider the fact that every good thing is a gift from God? Then how grateful we ought to be to so kind a Father, especially for the promised gift of eternal life through Jesus our Lord.

Notes on the Lesson

Thanks.—To think; to remember; to express gratitude. Thanksgiving is a giving of thanks or an expression of gratitude.

1. A Good Thing to Give Thanks.—It is good in two ways. 1st: It pleases God. 2nd: It cultivates gratitude.

2. Show Forth.—We are not to keep our gratitude to ourselves, but make it manifest. "Morning" and "night" are the fittest periods of the day to express it.

3. Daily Loadeth Us.—Just think of it, a load of blessings, a load of benefits, and that too, every day! What a reason for our gratitude! Loaded every day with benefits! Will we forget the hand that supplies our needs?

4. This is the Will of God.—To be thankful is the will of God. And why his will? That we may be made better. A grumbler is never a good man. The grateful man scatters sunshine and hope wherever he goes.

5. In the Name of.—Whatever is done in the Christian life, is to be done in the name of our Lord Jesus the Christ. We are his and thus show that relation, as well as his authority and approval.

7. Forget Not.—Keep in mind the benefits received.

8. What Shall I Render?—How can I pay the Lord for all his kindness? There is nothing I can give him but the gratitude of an appreciative heart.

9. Murmur.—Given to complaining. Oh, how much we murmur, and about almost everything! The weather, the crops, circumstances, friends—almost everything is the subject of our murmurness, he must grieve over our murmurings. Let ness, he must grieve ouer our murmurings. Let us quietly rest in Jesus, and be thankful.

10. He is kind to the Unthankful and Evil.—Here is a lesson of a different nature; we too, are to be kind to those who are ungrateful for benefits we have bestowed.

11. Trust.—Assured resting of the mind on the integrity, veracity, justice, and friendship of God. Confidence, reliance. When circumstances are adverse or dangers threaten, when the sky of life is dark, or its sun is about to set, then it is that we can trust in God as a present help and lift our thoughts to him.

Suggestive Topics and Questions

1. Duty of Giving Thanks.—What is meant by giving thanks? Is it right to be grateful for favors? Ought we to express our gratitude? In how many ways can we express our gratitude? May a person express thankfulness by signs? By words? By deeds? Why ought we to give thanks unto the Lord? In what way has he shown his goodness? Do you think it a duty to give thanks? What do you think of the custom of giving thanks at table? Is it a duty?

2. Every Benefit from God.—What does James say about every good gift (Jas. 1:17)? Does God ever vary in his gifts? Does he ever send any bad gifts? Where in our lesson are we told that God loads us with benefits every day? Do you believe that God sends all these benefits? Who then is the great object of our gratitude? In whose name should thanks be offered?

3. The Effect of Gratitude.—What effect does murmuring have upon those who murmur? Is God pleased with our gratitude? Where in our lesson are we commanded to give thanks? Why is it a good thing to give thanks?

4. Thank Offerings.—What is a thank offering (2 Chron. 29:31; 33:16; Jonah 2:9)? Can we show our gratitude to God by giving of our means to his work? By giving to the poor? Does the Bible teach us to give to the poor? Where are we taught that giving to the poor is lending to the Lord?

5. Trust in God.—What is it to trust in God? Will God take care of us? Is God kind to all? Give some Bible examples of trust in God. What is the difference between faith and trust?

Remarks

Our first point in October was Freedom, where the brethren have a neat little church which they had put in nice order, and had asked the brethren from surrounding neighborhoods to come and meet with them for an all-day meeting. The response was good, brethren coming from Moorefield, Holbrook, Pleasant View, Bartley, and Stratton. Brother Hargleroad lives at the last named place, seventy miles from the place of meeting, and he arrived in time for the first service. The house was well filled and splendid attention was given while we discoursed on Rev. 13.

The afternoon meeting was largely spoiled because of rain. However, a few remained while we gave a short talk on Rev. 14. We then got in the car with Brother Hargleroad and started in the mist for their home seventy miles away, where we arrived at eight o'clock. Being somewhat warm when we started I contracted a cold which lasted for several days. But when the word came from Sister Rogers at Stratton, Colo., we were able to respond, and proceeded to Yuma, Colo., and stayed all night with Brother and Sister Barker, who formerly lived at Palmer. We had a nice visit and a pleasant talk of former days. The following day Brother and Sister Barker drove us to a country post office twenty-five miles south where Brother Rogers met us and took us to the place of meeting, about fifteen miles still further on. Here we began meeting the same night and continued to the following Sunday, when we were called away by telegram. But before going I baptized three and set the church in order. Sister Maude Hargleroad did the playing and led the singing, which was greatly appreciated by all, and did much towards making the meeting a success. We so often have no one to play and no one to lead the singing, and it is hard on a speaker to take this added burden on himself. And how unnecessary it seems to be when there is so much talent unused. It does seem as though every talent should be employed in the Master's work. We have many who are capable of giving Bible lessons, and others whose voices could be used to sound the gospel in song; but they lack the opportunity and means to use them. Let us pray God to give us means to employ every talent. The harvest is surely white, but the laborers are few.

We were called to Moorefield to preach Sister Ealy's funeral and remained a couple of days and talked for them. Then Brother Ealy and son Gordon drove us to Bartley, forty miles, to catch the train for Stratton, Neb., where we are now. We are holding the meetings in a hall, and will tell you the result in our next report.

Don't You Worry

There's a town called Don't-You-Worry,
On the banks of the River Smile,
Where the Cheer-up and Be-Happy
Blossom sweetly all the while.
Where the Never-Grumble Flower
Blooms beside the fragrant Try,
And the Ne'er-Give-Up and Patience
Point their faces to the sky.

In the Valley of Contentment,
In the Province of I-Will,
You will find this lively city,
At the foot of No-Fret Hill.
There are thoroughfares delightful
In this very charming town,
And on every hand are shade trees
Named the Very-Seldom-Frown.

Rustic beaches, quite enticing,
You'll find scattered here and there;
And to each a vine is clinging
Called the Frequet-Earnest-Prayers.
Everybody there is happy,
And is singing all the while,
In the town of Don't-You-Worry,
On the banks of River Smile.

I. J. Bartlett.

The Sin of Worrying

It takes a great mind and a great heart to feel with Browning's expression "God's in his heaven, all's right with the world." Unless a man or woman feels that way, what we know as "worry" is inevitable. Yet if we honestly place our faith and trust in our heavenly Father and his Christ we can come to no other conclusion than that worry is equally sinful with drinking and gambling.

The following words are recorded in the sixth chapter of John. They are a part of what is know as "The Sermon on the Mount." They are from the heart and mind of our great Teacher and Example, Jesus the Christ; therefore we should give them earnest heed:

> No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and Mammon.
> Therefore I say unto you, Take no thought for your life, what ye shall eat, or what ye shall drink; nor yet for your body, what ye shall put on. Is not the life more than meat, and the body than raiment?

Behold the fowls of the air: for they sow not, neither do they reap, nor gather into barns; yet your heavenly Father feedeth them. Are ye not much better than they?

Which of you by taking thought can add one cubit unto his stature?

And why take ye thought for raiment? Consider the lilies of the field, how they grow; they toil not, neither do they spin:

And yet I say unto you, That even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these.

Wherefore, if God so clothe the grass of the field, which today is, and tomorrow is cast into the oven, shall he not much more clothe you, O ye of little faith?

Therefore take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed?

(For after all these things do the Gentiles seek:) for your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things.

But seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you.

Take therefore no thought for the morrow: for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof.

Take no thought for the morrow, neither what ye shall eat, nor what ye shall drink, or wherewithal ye shall be clothed, is an injunction literally followed in this our modern world, only by those on whom we look down as "shiftless." Our own opinion, often expressed, has been scratch the skin of a man who does not worry, and you will find a man who allows his wife to take in washing to support the family. "Ye are of more value than many sparrows" has little meaning to many of us: it ought to have more.

We do not know who wrote

"Build a little fence of trust
  Around today;
Plant it well with loving thoughts,
  And therein stay";

but it harmonizes perfectly with the faith, hope, and trust of early Christianity and with the New Testament; also fits in well with friend Bartlett's little poem at the head of our page.

Logically, for us who believe in the omniscience and the omnipotence of the Creator, to worry about what may happen in the world should be impossible. Yet we all believe, or say we believe, and we worry just the same. Particularly we worry in such times as these. The condition of the world seems to force us to worry, and the great minds and hearts that can defy conditions are very rare. So the sin of worry, as other sins, springs out of defects of nature, and like them, is to be struggled against persistently, however little the hope of its complete removal.

Kindly read Psalm 37:1-5; 55:22; Proverbs 16:3; Hebrews 13:5,6; and as a benediction, Philippians 4:5-7.

To cheat a neighbor is bad; to boast of it is worse.

Have We Grown the Wings of Surrender and Trust?

Is there no way of escape for us when in trouble or distress? Must we just plod wearily through it all and look for no relief? I rejoice to answer that there is a glorious way of escape for every one of us, if we will but mount up on wings and fly away from it all to God. All creatures that have wings can escape from every snare that is set for them, if only they will fly high enough; and the soul that uses its wings can always find a sure "way to escape" from all that can hurt or trouble it. What, then, are these wings? Their secret is contained in the words, "They that wait upon the Lord." The soul that waits upon the Lord is the soul that is entirely surrendered to him, and that trusts him perfectly. Therefore, we might name our wings the wings of Surrender and of Trust. If we will only surrender ourselves utterly to the Lord and will trust him perfectly we shall find our souls "mounting up with wings as eagles" to the "heavenly places" in Christ Jesus, where earthly annoyances or sorrows have no power to disturb us.--Hannah Whital Smith.

No trouble is too small wherein to see the will of God for thee. Great troubles come but seldom. Daily fretting trials, that is, what of thyself would fret thee, may often, in God's hands, conform thee more to his gracious will. They are the daily touches whereby he traces on thee the likeness of his divine will. There is nothing too slight wherein to practice oneness with the will of God. By daily practice in slight crosses of our own will, do we learn the lesson our Lord taught, "Not as I will, but as Thou." All the things whereof men daily complain may perfect thee in the will of God. The changes of the seasons, bodily discomforts or ailments, rude words, petty slights, little jealousies, uneveness of temper in those with whom thou livest, misunderstandings, censures of thy faith or practice, severe judgments, thanklessness of those thou wouldest benefit, interruptions in what thou wouldest do, oppressiveness or distraction of thy labors--whatever thou canst think of, wherein others fret themselves, and, still more, thyself; therein thou seest how to be of one will with God.—Edw. B. Pusey.

"I cannot always know and understand the Master's rule,
I cannot always do the task he gives in life's hard school,
But I am learning, with his help, to solve the problems one by one,
And, when I cannot understand, to say, 'Thy will be done.'"

"Be the day never so hard and long
At length it ringeth to evensong."

What to Learn

There are five things in life which we ought to learn. Here they are:

1. Learn to laugh. A good laugh is better than medicine.
2. Learn how to tell a helpful story. A well-told story is as welcome as a sunbeam in a sick-room.
3. Learn to keep your troubles to yourself. The world is too busy to linger over your ills and sorrows.
4. Learn to stop croaking. If you cannot see any good in this world, keep the bad to yourself.
5. Learn to greet your friends with a smile. They carry too many frowns in their own hearts to be bothered with any of yours.

Nay, do not fret—
    Forget!
Nay, do not pine—
    Resign!
Nay, do not grieve—
    Believe!—Lady Lindsay.

"May your days be as smiling as the waters of the babbling brook flowing between banks of many beautiful flowers."

Mercy

He took your coat away?
  Then go and fold
Your cloak around him too—
  Lest he be cold.

And if he took from you
  Your daily bread,
Offer your heart to him—
  That he be fed.

And if you give him all
  Your life could give,
Give him your death as well—
  That he may live.

THE AGE TO COME

We know that in the age to come,
For all there will be room;
Whether they are waiting here,
Or lying in the tomb.

Then press ye forward for the prize,
The waiting can't be long;
This age the time of doubt and fear—

"SIR, WE WOULD SEE JESUS"

How We Are Saved by the Cross of Christ

A dear sister remarked at a recent devotional meeting, "I wish the Elders would exhort the brethren to strive to attain a deeper understanding in spiritual things, and give less attention to things that are material." This is a fine suggestion. Hence Paul's appeal to the Galatians, that only those who are spiritual, or possess a spiritual mind should endeavour to restore a brother or sister overtaken in a fault. The writer, though an Elder, feels painfully conscious of his lack as a teacher in complying with the sister's request. All he can do is, in a simple way, try in words to give expression to thoughts that float around and hover in his mind.

The text we have selected to me is a precious one. These Greeks had heard about Jesus; they now were at Jerusalem, the one thought in their mind, the greatest desire of their life, was on the eve of fulfilment. They had heard, and from their Scriptures become familiar with the Jewish nation's long expected Messiah; the one that should establish again the throne and the house of David. But had they learned what the Jew failed to understand or realize, what was expected of the Messiah at his first advent? Their question or rather request made to Philip suggests to my mind that they did. "Sir, we would see Jesus." Had someone told them what the angel of the Lord had told Joseph: "And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus: for he shall save his people from their sins"?

Beloved, to you which name sounds the sweetest, Jesus or Christ? My answer is expressed by John Newton in his well-known hymn:

"How sweet the name of Jesus sounds
In a believer's ear!
It soothes his sorrows, heals his wounds,
And drives away his fear.
It makes the wounded spirit whole,
And calms the troubled breast;
'Tis manna to the hungry soul,
And to the weary rest."

And yet few fully realize the significance of this name or its meaning, "He shall save his people from their sins."

Why did Jesus die? Wherein lies the value of his death? Beloved, looking into my heart this answer comes forth: Jesus died that he might bring men by faith and obedience into the right relationship with God.

I ask my protestant and catholic friends, "What does Jesus mean to you"? They answer that his death is an expiatory sacrifice required by God for the remision of their sins; the satisfaction of the debt due to divine justice, the paying of which saves them from everlasting perdition resulting as the penalty of Adam's sin, God accepting the death of Christ as compensation instead. In other words God's wrath against the sinner can only be appeased by vicarious satisfaction in the death of his holy, just, obedient Son. But beloved, as I understand the gospel (God's own story to fallen man) God is a loving Father who forgives, unconditionally, all obedient and penitent sinners.

Paul in Gal. 6:14,15 makes this remarkable statement: "But God forbid that I should glory, save in the cross of our Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world is crucified unto me, and I unto the world." "For in Christ Jesus neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision, but a new creature." Jesus said: "If any man come to me, and hate not his own life, he cannot be my disciple; and whoso doth not bear his cross, and come after me, cannot be my disciple." Are we to understand by this that upon our shoulders daily we are to bear the cross, once an instrument of torture, a sign of guilt and an emblem of shame? Today the symbol of this cross is an idol or rather the idol of Christianity. We see it flaunted upon the brows of pope and kaiser, king and emperor; it crowns the summit of churches beneath the dome of which everything is preached but "Christ and him crucified." It glitters upon the breast of the beauty who sings for so much per; it is carved everywhere in wood and stone. In the centre of the amphitheatre in Rome, where once the followers of Jesus were thrown to the lions, or transfixed with the sword, it stands. It is revered and blessed by millions. The symbol everywhere is triumphant, but beloved, how fares the truth which to you and me and all lovers of the truth that symbol imports?

Today upon the battle fields of Flanders this symbol of the cross is in the van of battle. By the name of Christ each nation seeks to conquer, but how many of these millions now in the throes and death struggle of this sanguinary war really understand what is meant by him who said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life"? Beloved, the cross which a worldly piety knows and reveres is not the cross that Paul gloried in: it is not the cross which saving faith embraces, not the cross made by hands, made beautiful to please the eye of flesh, but rather the cross which daily is borne in the heart and in our lives.

Strange anomaly this: it is only with renunciation can life be truly said to begin. This is what Jesus teaches: "He that seeketh his life shall lose it, and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it." Paul, you are right: "I beseech you, therefore, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies (our lives) a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto the Lord, which is your reasonable service" (Rom. 12:1).

Peter, I think we get your thought; you have solved the problem and can tell us why Jesus died: "For this is thankworthy, if a man for conscience toward God endure grief, suffering wrongfully. For what glory is it, if, when ye be buffeted for your faults, ye shall take it patiently? but if, when ye do well and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is acceptable with God. For even hereunto were ye called; because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps: who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth; who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered he threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously: who his own self bear our sins in his own body on the tree, that we being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness: by whose stripes ye were healed. For we were as sheep going astray: but are now returned unto the Shepherd and Bishop of your souls" (1 Pet. 2: 19-25). "For in him," says Paul, "dwells all the fulness of the Godhead bodily." I look at Jesus: to me he is just what he says he was, God manifested in the flesh; God revealed in man. John says he was so manifested "to take away the sin of the world." In Jesus the perfect man is before me. To become like him means the redeeming of me from evil and thereby uniting me to God. Paul says, "Redeem the time (buy back the past) for the days are evil." Jesus said, "If I be lifted up from the earth, I will draw all men unto me." When was Jesus lifted up? Surely when the Father bestowed upon him glory, honor, immortality, eternal life (Rom. 2:7). Did his being nailed to the cross of shame draw men to him? I answer no. What then draws men to Christ? Listen: "But is now made manifest by the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel" (2 Tim. 1:10).

Who are then drawn to Jesus? Just those who believe this statement and none others. Jesus said, "And ye shall be hated of all for my name's sake, but he that endureth to the end shall be saved" (Matt. 10:22). Well, when will the end be? Listen, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life" (Rev. 2:10). What does "unto death" mean? It simply means what it says, a daily dying unto sin, sin is death; death is sin. Beloved, if you are not daily dying to sin, you can have no part in the kingdom of God.

President Lincoln by his great Emancipation Act, liberated the slaves. After their freedom from slavery the state began to clothe, feed, and educate the former slaves to become intelligent citizens. Jesus by his death has bestowed upon us who are baptized into his death spiritual emancipation, redemption from the powers of the world and sin, reconciliation and union with God, whereby now with him we can truly say, "Because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the spirit of his Son into our hearts, crying Abba, Father" (Gal. 4:6; Rom. 8:15; Mark 14:36).

If then, I have the spirit of Jesus, in the symbol of the cross, I see in Jesus the supreme example of self-renunciation, of self-annihilation, the absolute obedience and confidence in God. As I contemplate this life of dying to self and sin, it in my life exerts a saving influence upon both heart and mind. "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection" (Rom. 6: 5). Then David's prayer will be answered: "As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness" (Psa. 17:15).

It is possible to keep a drunkard sober, but in most cases only by incarceration. When liberated from prison he is as bad as ever. The great mass of humanity is of this type. They cannot be redeemed from death (Psa. 49), so God proposes to keep them in it.

God's method of redeeming men from sin and death is as follows:

First, his own beloved Son, who being obedient in all things and being made perfect through the experience of suffering, laid down his life voluntarily as a sacrifice for sins (Heb. 10:26), thus putting away sin by the sacrifice of himself (Heb. 9:26) and thus for himself "having obtained eternal redemption" (Heb. 9:12). Now he has become an example, as Peter declares, for us, who are to follow in his steps. Suppose in the case of our friend, the drunkard sees in my life or the life of any other temperate man, certain elements of character: love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance. As he compares these noble qualities of character with the results in his own from drunkeness: adultery, fornication, uncleaness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife, seditions, heresies, envyings, murders, drunkeness, revellings, and such like—a mighty influence for good comes into his life and by the power of will he struggles to conform his life to mine. Gradually the appetite for strong drink leaves him; daily his life becomes a pattern of my own. This is the power of the gospel, for therein is the righteousnes of God revealed from faith to faith: as it is written, "The just shall live by (his) faith" (Rom. 1:7).

The efficacy of Christ's death, as my mind understands it, is not a saving of men by offering to divine justice or divine wrath an equivalent for punishment, but by making men good and holy through faith in God's exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust (2 Pet. 3:1). If we do the things Peter tells us to do, we shall daily find our minds becoming less carnal and more spiritual, less worldly and more heavenly. "As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy; and as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly" (1 Cor. 15:48). "For our conversation is in heaven: from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself" (Phil. 3:20,21).

Continued

Now that we have found where and when to pray the Lord's prayer, or in other words, the prayer he taught us to pray, we now come to that part of the subject where we can ask, Are there other prayers that we can pray? The answer is, yes. The opportunities for prayer and the occasions calling for prayer are almost without number.

Opportunities and Occasions of Prayer Many

Samuel prayed for the whole house of Israel when he had gathered them all together, and the reason was because they had sinned. Then might it not be that the church of God have or could sin as a body, and the necessity arise for coming together to pray for forgiveness?

Local organizations have their dark days and times of supreme test when they should go to prayer. Just so with individual life: we have our trials, our sorrows, our misgivings—sometimes almost reaching the point of despair. Now the question might be asked, Where are we to resort under these different circumstances to pray?

Many Ways and Places of Prayer

We learn by the Scriptures that there are many ways and places. Under certain conditions the whole congregation met, or rather the whole body. In other instances the local church met like when they met to pray for Peter who had been in prison. Now if one of our brethren was in prison, like Peter, for standing by his faith as it could very easily be done in these trying times, would the local church to which he belongs get together and supplicate the throne of grace for his deliverance? If not; why not? Why not follow all of the examples set by the early church? That we do not as a people pray enough to my mind is quite evident, and I believe there shold be an awakening along this line. But brethren, in all sincerity, should we go among unbelievers to say our prayers? I for one think not.

Prayer Among Unbelievers Unseemly

In the first place, they think it does not make any difference what you believe, so no difference how much you pray in harmony with the truth, they will accept it as long as you are with them and they considered you taking part with them. They would take exception to our prayers on the the line and show that they are not God's people. They would tak exception to our prayers on the same ground. Men that preach the truth in the Baptist Church do no good. They consider them one of themselves, and many times they do not preach all the truth they know for fear of the people. So it would be far better to meet with one another or even by ourselves and to pray to God, than to mingle our voices with those we know are astray. Could not we get the same benefit out of our prayers at home, or with a few brethren, that we would get by going to these places of prayer? If we do not pray enough it is not righting the wrong to go among the orthodox people and take part in their prayer meetings, but the right thing to do is to arouse our own brethren, and as occasion arises, have hours of prayer.

"The Hour of Prayer"

I think sometimes when it says they went to certain places at the hour of prayer, it means at the appointed hour rather than that they had a set time. For instance, Paul was about to leave, and they had appointed a time and a place to pray, and instead of mingling with others, others were drawn to them, and Lydia was converted. Their attitude seemed to be according to the exigencies of the case. In great sorrow and trial they some times prostrated themselves like Jesus in the garden. When the great trial of affliction comes to us, if our hearts are right and our faith strong, will it bring us down in prayer? This would remove every chance for mere form. If we feel like prostrating ourselves, that should be our attitude. If the demands were not so great, and we feel like kneeling, then kneel. Our hearts and the circumstances should govern this. But pray we must, for it is commanded of God; but let it be among ourselves and never impact with others who hold not the truth.

The church is passing into the great trials of the last days, and our prayers should go up from day to day for courage and devotion and strength to overcome. So, Church of God, let us pray as never before.

EXPOSITION OF JOHN 5:28,29

We believe wrong conclusions are often arriv- at by not following the apostle's rule of com- ing "spiritual things with spiritual" (1 Cor.). By adhering to this rule we shall be able iscertain how the words are used in John 5:28, They are signs of ideas.

"All" A Term of Limited Meaning

The text under consideration is frequently ted to prove a universal resurrection. What here in these two verses to justify such a con- ion except the word "all" ? Applying our rule we find the word "all" is often used in a ited sense. Let us consider a few instances. n 1:7: "The same came for a witness to bear wit- s of the Light, that all men through him might eve." Now it is apparent that all universally not believe, for some have neither the disposi- nor the intellect to do so. Again Matt. 10:22: shall be hated of all men for my name's sake." s the "all men" here include both believers and elievers ? The answer is no; only the unbe- ers. See also Acts 21:28. The word "all" is ined by Webster in several ways. One is, erything included or concerned." This har- izes with the references given and the text er consideration.

Reason and Scripture Combined

Let us combine reason with Scripture and an- e this passage. "My Father worketh hitherto I work," says Jesus (John 5:17). In verse 20 continues: "The Father showeth him all things t he himself doeth. and he will show him great- works than these, that ye may marvel." What the greater things that would astonish them ? dently what immediately follows: "For as the her raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them, n so the Son quickeneth whom he will." Whom he quicken ? Answer, verse 24: "He that reth my word, and believeth on him that sent hath everlasting life, and shall not come into demnation, but is passed from death unto life." se 25 shows that only those that hear the voice he Son of God shall live, and at the same time ws that some will not hear, and consequently not live.

Passing on to verse 28 we read: "Marvel not at , for the hour is coming, in the which all that in the graves shall hear his voice." This either ans all the race of mankind who have lived, or of the class described above, viz., those who rd his word and believed on him that sent "everyone included or concerned."

We have positive evidence here that all the od ones are responsible for believing or not be- ing on him (Jesus). Does not verse 29 prove it is the class Jesus says in verse 24 hear his d, and believe on him who sent him, and the s who "do good" ? Is there any evidence that other will be credited with having done good receive life ?

The Fifth and Sixth Chapers of John Compared

In the next chapter of John's gospel Jesus declares four times that he will raise up at the last day

All that the Father gives him (vs. 39);
All that believe on him (vs. 40);
All that the Father draws (vs. 44); and
All who eat his flesh and drink his blood (vs. 54).

And in the 56th verse we find him saying, "He that eateth my flesh, and drinketh my blood, dwelleth in me, and I in him. As the living Father hath sent me, and I live by the Father; so he that eateth me shall live by me" (by being raised up implied). This really makes five times the same lesson is taught as in the 5th chapter.

Resurrection is Suspended on Precise Conditions

The resurrection, then, is an amazing privilege bestowed upon precise conditions. All who attain to it must be drawn by the Father to the Son and must hear and learn of the Father and come to the Son. So the "all" that hear the voice of the Son of Man are the all of John 5:28,29. What force would there be to these gracious words, if there be not a corresponding negative to the declaration— some who will not hear and consequently will not be raised. The following testimonies show the apostles proclaimed resurrection through Jesus and belief: Acts 17:18; 1 Cor. 6:14; 2 Cor. 4:14; Rom. 6:4; 8:11.

W. S. Tomlinson.

REGENERATION

The word "regeneration" probably is as little understood by the orthodox people as any term used in the Bible. They do not believe that this earth is to be the home of the saints. Some of them say it will be burned to a cinder, and they are all going to heaven (or the other place). The word "regeneration" consists of re, meaning back, or again; and generate, to make. God generated the earth in the beginning, made it beautiful, pure, and holy; created the fishes in the sea, and the animals to live on the earth, caused vegetation to grow that was suitable for their food, and all they required to make them happy. Last of all he created man, for whom he hal planted a garden in which was all manner of fruits suitable for his wants; a home that had every requirement for his comfort and pleasure. Sin and death were not known at that time. God surveyed what he had made and pronounced it (to be) "very good." But the tempter came on the scene and beguiled our parents, and they, like simple children, listened to his persuasions, partook of the forbidden fruit, and all was changed. Sin came into the world, and death by sin, death has passed upon all men, for that all have sinned, and come short of the glory of God.

God drove our parents out of the garden, and protected the tree of life, so they could not eat of its fruit and become immortal sinners. The penalty for disobedience was death. "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." Death is in the land. We are often reminded of the fact when we are called to follow someone to his last resting place, beneath the sod, to wait there till the trump shall call the righteous to their reward.

To meet Jesus when he comes the second time, to restore all things, to make all things new—that will be the time of regeneration. Matt. 19:27,28: "Then answered Peter and said unto him, Behold, we have forsaken all and followed thee; what shall we have therefore? And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed me, in the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel." This will be when the curse will be removed, all things made new, regenerated. What the angel told Mary will then be fulfilled. Read Luke 1:32 onward: "He shall reign on the throne of his father David forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end." He is to reign until all of his enemies are destroyed, and the last enemy to be destroyed is death. Then God's will will be done on earth as it is done in heaven. The "making back again" will then be finished. Isaiah 65: 25, in describing this time says: "The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock; and dust shall be the serpent's meat. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain." War will be no more. Every man shall sit under his own vine and fig tree. One shall not build and another inhabit; one shall not plant and another eat, but every man shall enjoy the fruits of his own labor.

This is the time that a few have been waiting for for a long time. It will come in due season. We must continue to wait until it does come. Jesus told the disciples that when there ware wars and earthquakes in divers places, they were to lift up their heads and rejoice, knowing that their redemption draweth nigh. There was never so much war on the earth at one time before as there is at the present time, so it must surely bespeak the time of the end being near. The people of the world are going on as though they had never heard of any such thing as Jesus coming again, or as if Christ had made no promises in connection with his coming. That day shall come upon them like a thief in the night. "When they shall say, peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them." We who know the truth must walk in the narrow way.

Waiting and longing for that "good time to come," J. E. Hogarth.

No matter who or what, all people of all lands realize that undue care and anxious worry are harmful and should be dispensed with; and at times of congratulation wish us smiles, peace, hope, cheer, happiness, and joy—any one of which will chase away the "blues," maim sadness, and kill worry.

The art of friendship is the finest of all arts. To show tact and forbearance, to st ready to give, and to refrain from giving u the need and the opportunity arise, to be pat and forgiving, but to have a high ideal of friend's possibilities, to be ready for all com adventures of joy and suffering, to exercise self-restraint that never intrudes, and warmth of affection that never forgets—these some of the qualities which make for the pern ence of friendship.—Sel.

It does not cost anything to give a wor thanks, but to the receiver its value is al counting.

THE MULTITUDINOUS SON OF MAN GLORIFIED

Sermon Notes by the Editor on the Apocalypse

"And in the midst of the seven candlesticks one like unto the Son of Man, clothed with a garment down to the foot, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle. His head and his hair were white like wool, as white as snow; and his eyes were as a flame of fire" (Rev. 1:13, 14).

1. "Son": an emanation from Adam (Ex. 4:22; Comprehensive of a Multitude

1. "Son:" an emanation from Adam (Ex. 4:22; Dan. 7:13,14,22,23).
2. "A Son of Man," Greek (vss. 13,14; 14:14; Dan. 7:13; 10:4,5,6,16,18; Gen. 2:14; 3:24).

II. Clothed to the Feet

1. Clothed entirely. Nakedness and sin are equivalent terms (Gen. 3:7,10; Ex. 32:21,25; Rev. 16:15; Psa. 32:1,2; Gal. 3:27; Rev. 19:8,14).
2. Mortality and immortality are indicated by nudity and clothing (Zech. 3:3-10; Isa. 61:3; 2 Cor. 5:2-4).

III. The Golden Girdle (Zone).

1. The girdle is entirely "golden," because gold represents faith perfected by trial, and the "Son of Man" in the state of immortality (vs. 13; Ex. 28:2-6; Rom. 8:3; 2 Cor. 5:21; Heb. 2:14; Col. 2:17; 1 Pet. 2:25; 1:7; 2 Pet. 1:1; Psa. 45).

IV. Head and Hair Like Wool

1. Like snow (white) to represent righteousness; like wool to connect the Head and all members of his body to "the Lamb of God" (vs. 14; 1 Cor. 11:3; Eph. 5:23,27; Isa. 1:16; John 1:29).

V. His Eyes Like a Flame of Fire

1. Word for "eye" in the Hebrew signifies "fountain." Not "a flame of love," like sentimentalists are prone to interpret, but "a flame of fire" —wrathful activity. The "fiery eye" always speaks of wrath (vs. 7; Dan. 7; Psa. 106:18; Isa. 10:34; 18:6; Luke 12:4,5; Isa. 51:12,13).

MEANING OF THE WORD "PERISH"

Editor Restitution:

What is the import of the word "perish" in Acts 8:20? "Thy money perish with thee."

In considering a subject we must differentiate between the absolute and the relative. Perish in the absolute sense means passing out of existence, but in our text it evidently means the lack of power to purchase the thing desired. The money would remain and still have value for other purposes. Simon also would continue in life, but would finaly perish, that is pass out of existence if he did not repent and turn from his estimate of how the gift of God could be obtained. Peter's exhortation to repent of his wickedness, and pray for forgiveness, shows still opportunity to repent.

Simon's conversion was not from the heart. Seeing the wonders, and recognizing them as genuine, unlike his own sorcery, believed Philip's preaching, and in his enthusiasm, with the others, "joined the church." When he saw that through the imposing of the Apostle's hand the power to work miracles was given, he desired like power that he might use it for his own social and financial gain. Observation convinces that many "join the church" in these latter days for the same reason.

S. T. Blessing.

COMMUNICATIONS

"They shall make known unto you all things which are done here" (Col. 4:9).

Dear Brother Huggins, Brethren, Readers of The Restitution.

My attention was drawn to the first two editorials in the issue of 14th inst. We are very thankful for the sentiment expressed in the first, as well as in private letter from the Editor. We wish to assure the brethren that there are at least some of us who are praying that God will provide a "way of escape"; if not, he will give us grace to stand faithful and true to him whose servants we are.

I notice something in the second item that makes one feel sad, for it looks as though there are some who are willing, under compulsion, to help along this great murderous game. I realize that we are individually responsible to our Master for our own acts, but I would like to ask each member of the body of Christ: should Christ come while we are engaged in assisting the governments of this world in the great slaughter, would we be aceptable with him? If it is a crime against our fellow man and a sin in God's sight to slay our brothes, how much less a sin and crime is it to do something that will help the other fellow to do it?

Will it relieve us of responsibility, because our government says we must? If we obey man rather than God, whose servants are we? "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon." He will hold to the one and despise the other. He that seeks to save his life shall lose it. What does this mean? Is it not that if we seek to save ourselves the torture of punishment for disobedience to the powers that be, and even save our lives, perhaps we will lose the life to come.

"And whosoever loses his life for my sake and the gospel's shall find it." What does this mean? Is it not, If we are willing to lay down our life, if need be, in order to be true to Christ, we will do it rather than forfeit our hope of the life to come. Is not the time here when we are being sifted as wheat? Let us each one fight the good fight of faith, and lay hold on eternal life. Yes, pray for us, brethren, and for all the household of God. From your brother striving to prove faithful until the coming of the Lord.

J. E. Lent.

Dear Brother Huggins:

The wrier began a week's meeting at Lawrenceville, Ohio, closing Nov. 6th. The attendance was not as good as we had expected, but was some better at the close than it was at the beginning. The trouble seems to be no pastor—no one who can give his time and attention to the work. As a result the members became scattered, like sheep without a shepherd. Brother David Beck has shown himself a faithful worker, but he does not have the time to devote to pastoral work, as he is employed in the shop.

On Tuesday evening, after church, Nov. 6th we went home with Brother E. C. Pearson; and on the next evening we began a special meeting. Sister Peter Overholser went over with us and took in part of the meting.

The attendance and interest were very good. One couple came about seventeen miles, and were there for every service. The weather was ideal and the roads were in good condition.

On Thursday Nov. 15th at 2 P. M. we went to the water, near Brother and Sister R. S. Brewer's and after hearing a good confession, we baptized Brother and Sister John Gerard into the all-saving name of Christ. In baptizing Brother and Sister Gerard we are sure that two workers have come into the Lord's vineyard.

On Saturday afternoon, Nov. 17th we met at Brother and Sister George Antonides, and heard a good confession from their son, L. W. Antonides, after which we buried him with Christ in baptism. We have reason to believe he will become a worker who will one day hear the "well done." Brother and Sister Antonides have lived to see both their children enter the race for eternal life. We rejoice with them.

Sunday evening, Nov. 18th, the meeting came to a close, and next day we left for home, which place we reached Tuesday evening and found all well.

Before leaving Ohio the sisters of Lawrenceville and Brush Creek bought a nice dress for Sister Anderson, and she wishes to thank them and to assure them that the gift is very much appreciated. She says she would like to put it on and walk into Brush Creek or Lawrenceville church.

Your brother, J. H. Anderson.

Dear Readers of The Restitution:

You cannot guess how sad I have felt to know that so many of you were turning over the pages of our paper week after week to see if "Auntie Wince" had any message for them, and not a thing would be there of all the loving, solemn thoughts that were in my heart. I can bear it no longer, I must say something. If I cannot go on with the larger work at present, I can at least do some smaller thing. I can comfort your hearts; I can bid you be patient; I can exhort you to be faithful.

Time is slipping so rapidly from our grasp, we dare not be idle, God's work must be done. He has commissioned us to do it. We may say, "I cannot," but no excuse will answer. Better that the corn rot in the field than that a soul be lost. "He that loveth father or mother, wife or children, more than me, is not worthy of me." We must go through our Gethsemanes with Jesus and press on. We are called to suffer. Jesus was. It is in his steps that we must walk.

This is a time of bitter parting and of tears. Only sons must be laid on the altar, Sister Boice must give up her boy, her only child; Mrs. Pond must let hers go—no exemption will be granted, though the young life had been set apart for the ministry, and the invadil father is in sore need of his boy; Sister Byers weeps with her sister over a departing husband. When will it end and how? When will the time come when there will be no more tears and when men shall learn war no more? It nears! it nears!

The living word tells us so. The signs of the coming of our Lord are here. "Fear not, little flock." You have heard from Jesus himself that it is the Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom. He will not give it to the kaiser of Germany.

"Work with your might while the day lasts." "The night cometh when no man can work." What a time of love that will be! Blessed indeed will then be "the man whose transgression is forgiven, and whose sin is covered."

I will go on with my article on "The Living Word," whenever I have the strength and time, should the dear Lord see fit to grant me these. If not, what I have already written must suffice. To "do the next thing," seems to be my part in the work. Watch and be sober and be instant in prayer; and may God keep you hidden 'neath the shadow of his wings.

Auntie Wince.

Dear Brother Huggins:

Please send me the booklet, "Bible Lessons on First Principles." I want my husband and children to learn the gospel in all its beauty and purity, and feel that it will help them. I will enclose stamps for booklet and postage.

The Restitution is surely a great comfort to me in my lonliness and weakness. I am fairly starved for one of your good sermons, but the weekly visits of the good paper is a great comfort and inspiration. Every one is so full of encouragement and comfort. I would be lonely indeed without it. I hope yourself and family are well, and all the dear ones of the dear church.

Sincerely your sister in Christ,

Daisy Mason Guest.

It is not charity to give away something for which you no longer have any use.

braries of Tracts for the Local Berean Societies

ng a member of the National Berean So- Executive Board, I was requested, by our ent, to attend a Board Meeting in Chicago on April 21st. If unable to attend, to write to her any ideas that I thought would be well for the Board to discuss.

Unable to attend, I outlined briefly, for the Board's consideration, the two following plans: 1st. Libraries of Tracts for Local Bereans; 2nd. Sermons for the Isolated.

The Board considered the ideas and requested me to elaborate them in the form of a paper to be read at the National Conference where action, if any, will be taken.

In considering the need of these libraries, we have to understand the conditions of the Local Societies. The condition that inspired this idea was the lack of an able, permanent leader which compelled us to resort to the practice of having each member take the leson in turn. Since we are not all natural or even well trained for leadership or teaching, it is necessary for us, if possible, to furnish a means by which each temporary leader can prepare himself to present the lesson he has chosen to give the meeting.

Some may say, Why not let him use his Bible? I say to every one that attempts to give a lesson, by all means use your Bible as much as possible. But we must not lose sight of the fact that this lack of training in the use of the Bible is the very thing that makes a help to the untrained a necessity.

If my plan will work I believe we can do a great deal to help the local lessons along by supplying the societies with these libraries. Considering the circumstances of the temporary leader we see the need of a quick means of preparation, and this means can be supplied with tracts from the library, supplemented with a Bible and a good concordance or other reference books.

One of these libraries makes available a rich source of information to the searcher, as each tract deals thoroughly with the subject under discussion, usually by a writer who is well qualified to dicuss the subject. I think we all can see the advantage such a tract would be to the person preparing a lesson on the subject.

Again, we all in discussing our hope with strangers to the truth, come to the point where we need a clear and concise presentation of some particular point. The advantage of this availability of a tract on that point at that time is evident.

How are we going to make available these libraries to the local societies? This work, in my opinion, belongs to the National Berean Society. As our Lord prepared his disciples for their work of teaching in the beginning, the National Berean Society could not undertake a move more noble than supplying a valuable means of preparation to those who are and will be our teachers.

It will be necessary to place this work in the hands of a committee with power to collect and arrange the tracts in suitable form. In order to save time and correspondence and otherwise facilitate the work, I think it would be advisable to have all the members of this committee from one town or city. This would enable them to meet with little expense to carry on the work.

This work will consist mainly in making arrangements with authors and publishers to insure a sufficient supply, distributing and being constantly on the lookout for new tracts.

One of two or both methods can be followed making up a complete library of present available tracts of known merits to be offered to the local societies at a given price to be determined by their cost, as a beginning, with new tracts to be added as they are available, or catalogue all available tracts with the price of each, a copy of the catalogue to be sent to each Local Society or interested individual; then they can make the choice.

I leave the decision with the Conference or Board as to what officers or committees are needed to put the plan into effect. The Conference will know more about the available finances.

I will only suggest a few possible sources of financing the plan:

1st.—Each Society set aside a certain per cent of their income from local dues.

2nd.—The National Board to use any funds at its disposal or to divert from other uses to this if into effect and each local has its library, there are being used otherwise.

3rd.—By free will subscription similar to the Helping Fund.

It will be necessary, if the plan is adopted, to find the best means of making known to the locals, the availability of these libraries; their purpose and how to get them. Finally if the plan is put into effect and each local has its library, there are certain things that must not be done by the members themselves, if the library is to answer the purpose for which it was formed:

1st.—It must be used. It is not to take the place of the Bible, but it is to be used in connection with it in the preparation of a lesson. If a member is to lead, and for instance has for the subject of his lesson, Faith, Baptism, Love, or Hope, he can go to the library and get the tract dealing with the subject he is to discuss. Having it in most cases will help him to give a clear presentation of the subject, with the most important references, which is valuable aid to the untrained.

2nd.—In using the tracts, we must avoid the danger of using the tracts as authority rather than the Scriptures, upon which the author has based and built up the discussion of the subject treated upon.—R. E. Z.

God's Mercy

H. W. Faber

There's a fulness in God's mercy,
Like the fulness of the sea;
There's a kindness in his justice
Which is more than liberty.
He is calling "come to me";
Lord, I'll gladly haste to thee.

For the love of God is broader
Than the measure of man's mind;
And the heart of the Eternal
Is most wonderfully kind.

Pining souls! come nearer Jesus;
Come, but come not doubting thus,
Come with faith that trusts more freely
His great tenderness for us.

If our love were but more simple
We would take him at his word;
And our lives then would be sunshine
In the sweetness of our Lord.

Today we will have another little lesson. We have selected as a subject

God's Mercy

We suppose all the older readers will know the meaning of "mercy"; but for the sake of our very young friends we will state that "mercy" signifies to treat an offender or an enemy with less severity than he deserves. In God's dealing with us he not only shows mercy, but he is merciful because he loves us. Under these circumstances do you not think we can show mercy to our fellows, thus reflecting the love of God, to his praise and honor.

As a basis for our lesson let us read the eighty-sixth Psalm, taking the fifteenth verse as a special memory verse; in answer to which will repeat the third verse. You will read it for me, won't you?

In the second verse of this Psalm you will notice the word "holy," in this case meaning "one whom thou hast favored." In verse thirteen appears the word "hell" meaning "grave." Kindly make these correction in your reading.

A Dispute

Tom and Joe quarreled,
I've heard people tell,
About a queer animal
Hid in a shell.
"I tell you, it walks, sir!"
Said Tommy to Joe;
"It swims"! cried Joe loudly,
I've seen, and I know!"
"It walks"!—"No, it swims"!—
And the boys grew quite wrath,
But the turtle peeped out,
Saying, "I can do both!"

Our Weekly Puzzle

In what part of the Scripture can we find the following passage? Who wrote it, and to whom was it written? What are the promises referred to?

"Having therefore these promises, dearly beloved, let us cleanse ourselves from all filthiness of the flesh and spirit, perfecting holiness in the fear of God."

BIBLE LESSONS ON FIRST PRINCIPLES

The Editor of "The Restitution" is now preparing for publication a series of Bible lessons which are designed to explain every essential feature of gospel truth. Three lessons of the series have just been published entitled respectively, "Introduction," "The Word of God in Threefold Aspect," and "The Gospel of the Kingdom the Only True Gospel." Valuable for conducting Bible studies and classes and for giving Berean lessons, as well as for individual study. Written primarily to teach the elemental principles of the gospel to candidates preparatory to baptism. Three cents for one copy; twenty-five cents the dozen.

DENYING THE FAITH

A sermon which is both doctrinal and practical. 20 pages; one copy 5 cents; 40 cents per dozen.

"THE SMOKE OF THEIR TORMENT ASCENDETH UP FOREVER"

A sermon of doctrinal and prophetic value. A profound subject made simple. 12 pages. One copy 3 cents; 12 copies 25 cents.

THE DEATH OF CHRIST

A doctrinal discourse setting forth logically and scripturally the meaning of death and its relation to the gospel of life. 3 cents each; 25 cents per dozen.

PARADISE LOST; PARADISE REGAINED

A sermon in which every text in the Bible where paradise occurs, either in the English or original tongue, is quoted and explained. 5 cents each; 12 for 40 cents.

THE BIBLE: ITS PRINCIPLES AND TEXTS

As indicated by its title, this book is divided into three sections: the first consists of a disquisition on "The Bible"; the second simplifies its "Principles" in formulated propositions; and the third expounds in a homiletic manner particular "Texts." As an Editor the Author has untied many knotty questions submitted to him by readers; more than a hundred and fifteen are considered in this volume. One copy $1.10; two copies $2.00.

HAPPY DAY

We're marching to Emmanuel's land,
The home that's on before;
Full soon we'll reach that peaceful shrine,
And wander never more.

The fields are full of ripened grain
And laden vines, a luscious store;
No earthquake there shall devastate,
Nor prowling robber reach your door.

Sweet scent of blossoms fill the air,
And gorgeous flowers in constant bloom
Enchant the enraptured mariner;
His hope is big at last for home.

All there one happy family—
No discord then shall come;
Jesus himself shall reign in love,
In that longed-for happy home.

Sweet songsters there in groves of green,
Henceforth shall trill their lays;
While man redeemed from sin and death,
Shall sing his Maker's praise.

O happy day! soon may it dawn,
And sin no more hold sway;
When righteousness is ushered in
'Twill be a glorious day.

BIBLE LESSONS ON FIRST PRINCIPLES

Lesson IV

BY ROBERT G. HUGGINS *
Pastor of the Church of God, 10623 Lee Ave., Cleveland, O

"THE THINGS CONCERNING THE KINGDOM OF GOD"

I. What the Kingdom of God is

The kingdom of God will be a divine political dominion established upon the earth (Dan. 2:44; 7:13,14; Rev. 11:15; Isa. 32:1; 11:9,01; Hag. 2:22; Psa. 2:8,9).

II. When the Kingdom of God will be Set up

At the close of the times of the Gentiles God will send Christ in person to the earth to "set up" the kingdom of God (Acts 3:20,21; Psa. 102:13,16,21; 2 Tim. 4:1; Luke 19:12-16; Acts 1:9,11; Dan. 7:13-27; Matt. 25:31.34).

III. Where the Kingdom of God will be Located

The kingdom of God will be established on earth in the land bequeathed to Abraham for an everlasting inheritance. It will be the kingdom of Israel restored (Micah 4:6-8; Amos 9:11,15; Ezek. 37:21,22; Jer. 23:3,8; Gen. 13:14-17; Heb. 11:8,9; Gal. 3:16; Lev. 26:42; Micah 7:20).

IV. What Constitute "The Things Concerning the Kingdom of God"

"The things concerning the kingdom of God" are its component parts. Analytically collocated "the things" which compose the kingdom are:

(a) The King: Christ;

(b) The Associates of the King: the saints of all generations, developed and immortalized by resurrection, if dead; changed to immortality "in the twinkling of an eye," if living when Jesus comes—both constitute, with Christ their head, the collective "seed of Abraham," in whom all the families of the earth shall be blessed;

(c) The Laws: such as Christ and his associate rulers (the saints) shall make, and by which they will govern the world in justice and love;

(d) The Subjects: both Jews and Gentiles; the Jews and Israelites (the twelve tribes) being "the first dominion," and the Gentiles the second;

(e) The Capital City: "Jerusalem, the city of the Great King," and the metropolis of the whole earth; and

(f) The Territory: Palestine primarily, and "the uttermost parts of the earth" finally.

(a) Zech. 9:9; 14:9; John 19:19-22.
(b) Dan. 12:2; Luke 13:28; Rev. 11:18; 1 Thess. 4:15-17; John 5:28,29; 6:39,40; Luke 14:14; 1 Cor. 15:50-58; Matt. 25:31,34.
(c) Isa. 2:3; 42:4; Zech. 14:16-19.
(d) Isa. 11:12; Jer. 31:10; Zech. 8:7,8; Micah 4:6-8; Luke 1:31-33; Matt. 19:28; Zech 2:11.
(e) Matt. 5:34,35; Jer. 3:17; Micah 4:8; Joel 3:16,17; Isa. 24:23; Zech. 2:10,12; Psa. 48:1-8; 122:2-7; 132:11-18.
(f) Matt. 6:10; Rev. 11:15; Psa. 2; Dan. 7:27.

Synthetic Remarks on the Lesson

I. What the Kingdom of God is. A kingdom is "that over which a king bears rule; the territory or country subject to a king; the dominion of a monarch" (Webster). The kingdom of God is a government (Isa. 9:6) of the nations upon earth (Psa. 67:4). Babylon, Medo-Persia, Greece, and Rome were kingdoms (Dan. 2:39,40). They cannot be sublimated into mere spirituality, as many theologians do the kingdom of God. They were literal governments without even the semblance of spirituality. With an antithesis which none can mistake Dan. 2:44 reads: "And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed, and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." In this passage "the God of heaven sets up a kingdom" which is inimical to, and destructive of, "all these kingdoms." When "set up" it first "breaks them in pieces," and then to complete their destruction, "consumes" them until there is "no place found for them" (Dan. 2:35). "I will overthrow the throne of kingdoms, and I will destroy the strength of the kingdoms of the heathen" (Hebrew, nations, Hag. 2:22). Here is plainly predicted the entire disruption of all human governments, the violent and complete suppression of the "powers that be." "All people, nations, and languages" are subjugated by the kingdom of God (Dan. 7:13,14,18,22,27). "Out of his mouth goeth a sharp sword, that with it he should smite the nations; and he shall rule them with a rod of iron" (Rev. 19:15). "Set up" on the territory occupied by earthly governments, which are substantial kingdoms, called "the kingdoms of this world," the kingdom of God expands under the heavens into dimensions that fill "the whole earth" (Dan. 2:35). "The kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ" (Rev. 11:15). From this Scripture both the learned and unlearned reader will perceive intuitively that if "the kingdoms of this world," which are real, literal, political governments, "become the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ," the kingdom of God when established will be a literal government occupying the same territory now occupied by "the kingdoms of this world."

* Published by the Fellow Helpers' Society.

II. When the Kingdom of God will be Set up. The Lord has "a set time" to establish his kingdom (Psa. 102:13), namely, "when he appears in his glory" (vs. 16). "The times of restitution" are when "he shall send Jesus Christ" from heaven where he now is (Acts 3:20,21). Therefore the restoration of Israel's kingdom cannot take place until Christ returns (Acts 1:6). He is coming back from heaven "in like manner" as he went (vss. 9, 11). As he went visibly and personally, so he will return visibly and personally, "the Lord himself" (1 Thess. 4:16). "When the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory" (Matt. 25:31). A king without a throne is not a king de facto. Since Christ "comes in his glory" before he sits upon his throne, he cannot be an officiating king until he returns. At his first coming his citizens hated him and said, "We will not have this man to reign over us" (Luke 19:14). They banished him, and he is now an exile in heaven whither he has gone to "receive for himself a kingdom, and to return" (Luke 19:12). As Herod and his successor, and as all governors of out-lying provinces, went to Rome to receive official jurisdiction from the Emperor (see Josephus), so Christ, the Nobleman, by analogy, has gone to "the far country" of heaven to be invested with royalty, "receive for himself a kingdom, and to return" (Luke 19:11,12). "And it came to pass, that when he was returned, having received the kingdom," etc. (Luke 19:15). He did not "receive" the kingdom until he had "returned," notice. The veritable "Son of Man comes with the clouds of heaven" before there is "given to him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom" (Dan. 7:13,14). If the kingdom is "given" to him then, he did not possess it previous to his coming. "His appearing and kingdom" are joined together by God himself (2 Tim. 4:1); and "what God hath joined together, let not man put asunder" (Matt. 19:6).

III. Where the Kingdom of God will be Located. The kingdom of Israel was divinely constituted under Moses, and is declared to have been the kingdom of God (1 Chron. 28:5; 29:23; 2 Chron. 9:8; 13:8). On account of iniquity it was overthrown and scattered to the winds "until he come, whose right it is, and I will give it him" (Ezek. 21:25-27). Its temporary collapse, however, will be succeeded by its restoration through Christ (Luke 21:24; 1:33; Acts 1:6; Matt. 19:28). As the kingdom of God will be the kingdom of Israel restored (Oba. 17,20, 21; Micah 4:6-8), it will be located on the land bequeathed to Abraham and his seed. "Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven" (Matt. 6:10). Where is the kingdom of God to "come"? Where is the will of God to be done as in heaven? In the sun, or the stars? In Mars, Venus, or Jupiter? We can offer no sublimer prayer, and none more consonant with the design of the Lord's coming than this—"thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." We pray, not for our translation to the kingdom of heaven, but for the coming of the kingdom upon earth. Set up "on earth," the kingdom of God will ultimately become co-extensive with "the kingdom and the dominion, and the power over the kingdoms under the whole heaven" (Dan. 7:27, Leeser's translation).

IV. What Constitute "The Things Concerning the Kingdom of God." In the preceding lesson we demonstrated by the Scriptures that the gospel relates to the kingdom of God, and that an amplified definition of the gospel embraces "the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12). Therefore to find out what these "things" are is to find out what the gospel is; to hear, believe, confess, and obey these "things" is to hear, believe, confess, and obey the gospel. The analysis of these "things of the kingdom" is made necessary by the fact that the kingdom of God is truly and literally a kingdom, with constitution and statutes, with a personal head, and many subordinate ministries; comprehending all nations, and enduring forever. A kingdom is not an abstraction. It is not any single thing: it is an aggregation of elements or parts which go to make it up. A king is not, in himself, a kingdom; neither is a country, people, capital, nor laws, separately: all these combined are required to make a kingdom. As a kingdom is composed of a king, an aristocracy, a people, a territory, a capital, and laws, these "things of the kingdom" must be defined and understood separately and in detail before we can "receive the kingdom" with comprehension and understanding. As the reader's salvation depends upon his belief of these kingdom "things," we ardently hope that he will study the subjoined analysis of these things with the docility and simplicity of a little child; for "whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child shall in no wise enter therein" (Luke 18:17).

(a) The King: Christ. The word "Christ" comes from the Greek word Christos, which means anointed. This quotation from a scholar of eminence is worthy of mention here:

> "Christos, Christ, is the official appellation of the long promised and long expected Savior, denoting his kingly authority and mediatorial position as the 'Servant of the Lord.' Jesus was his common name during his lifetime, and he is generally so called in the Gospels, while 'the Christ' or 'Jesus Christ' is generally used in the Epistles" (Young's Concordance under "Christ").

The Bible discriminates between the words "Jesus" and "Christ," the former being used as a name and the latter as a title. Jesus is a name which means Savior (Matt. 1:21); Christ is a title, or as Young says, "an official appellation denoting kingly authority." Biblically the words "King" and "Christ" are convertible terms. "Where is he that is born King of the Jews?" in Matt. 2:2 is emended to read in the fourth verse, "Where Christ should be born." Here the words "King" and "Christ" are used as synonyms. Now if the reader asks, "What must I do to be saved?" the answer is, "Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ" (Acts 16:31). "Jesus Christ" is a name and title combined. Since, then, "Christ" is a title referring to "kingly authority," and is synonymous with "King," to "believe on the Lord Jesus Christ" is to believe that he is King as well as Savior. These two words are distinguishable and are distinguished; separable and are separated. John makes this distinction apparent when he says: "These are written, that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; and that believing, ye might have life through his name" (John 20:31). It is possible, then, to believe in Jesus and at the same time reject Christ; to believe in him as Savior and at the same time reject him as King. Grammatically the definite article "the" cannot be used before a proper name; therefore when John says "Jesus the Christ" he is using a title equivalent to "Jesus the King." As "life through his name" comes to us by "believing" this, the reader must see that here is a matter demanding his serious consideration. The fact that the book of John was "written that ye might believe that Jesus is the Christ," shows the importance of the subject. "And Paul, as his manner was, went in unto them, and three sabbath days reasoned with them out of the Scriptures, opening and alleging, that Christ must needs have suffered, and risen again from the dead; and that this Jesus whom I preach unto you is Christ" (Acts 17:2,3). Preaching that Jesus is Christ is explained as teaching "contrary to the decrees of Caesar, saying that there is another King, one Jesus" (vs. 7). Therefore when Paul preached that Jesus was Christ he taught that Jesus would be King "contrary" to Caesar—that he would be King in the literal sense in which Caesar was King. And to intimate when he would exercise this "kingly authority" he said, "He hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world in righteousness" (vs. 31). He calls this "appointed day" the "appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ" (1 Tim. 6:14). Referring to his appearing as "his times" he declares that he will "show (Caesar and all other rulers) who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords" (vs. 15). Ethereal conceptions of Jesus' kingship, while eulogized as "spiritual," are but mock-fires of the marsh "that lead to bewilder, and dazzle to blind." Why should there not be a personal manifestation and visible sovereignty of Christ on earth? Is this world, over whose birth the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy (Job 38:7): is this world to which angelic hosts have descended with embassies of heavenly love—is this world to be blotted out of being, or doomed to eternal sterility? One of the fairest productions of the Creator, is the earth to be smitten from its place among the heavenly orbs by the hand that made it? A theology which requires such a frightful issue impugns the goodness and wisdom of God, and charges him with an abortive creation. That Christ is to "judge the world in righteousness," instead of degrading, glorifies him; and is one of the most gladsome truths of revelation. Reason and the word of God mutually embrace each other in saying that here on earth where Christ suffered is the place of his triumph, and that the objects of his redeeming love should be the subjects of his regal sway. Here on earth where Christ prayed, suffered, and died; where he was denied, derided, and killed is the place for his vindication. Where he has been denied he must be confessed; where he suffered he must triumph; where he was disgraced by humiliation is where he must be glorified and exalted; where he carried the cross he must wield the sceptre—here where he wore a crown of thorns is where he shall wear a crown of gold (Psa. 21).

(b) The Associates of the King: the Saints. The reward in store for the saints in the day of Christ's glory is a participation in the "glory, honor, and power" of the kingdom in the sense of being his associates and coadjutors (as kings and priests) in the work of governing the world righteously. When Christ returns in glory and sits upon his throne (Matt. 25:31), instead of being alone he has ten thousands of saints with him (Jude 14). They "inherit the kingdom" with him (Matt. 25:34).[a] As "flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom of God," the dead are raised incorruptible, and the living are "changed in a moment" from mortality to immortality (1 Cor. 15:51,52). The saints are thus regenerated (Matt. 19:28), made like Christ (1 John 3:2), and have "glorious" bodies of immortality (Phil. 3:21). They are now "equal to the angels and cannot die any more" (Luke 20:36). Endowed with everlasting life they have no successors, thus the kingdom is never left to "other people" (Dan. 2:44). Glory, differing like the glory of the stars (1 Cor. 15:41), is now added to their salvation (2 Tim. 2:10), its "weight," order, and precedence corresponding with the degree of suffering and loss endured for Christ (2 Cor. 4:17,18). The apostolic band comes first (Matt. 19:28), next the martyr company (Rev. 20:4), then the saints of all generations who are counted worthy of that age (Luke 20:35). These are all regenerated and given authority as judges in the kingdom of God (Matt. 19:28; Luke 19:17,19). They sit with Christ in his throne as his glorified Bride, his Queen-consort enthroned with him (Rev. 3:21; 2 Tim. 2:12). They wield "power over the nations" (Rev. 2:26,27) as princes (Isa. 32:1), "take the kingdom," and possess its dominion and glory forever (Dan. 7:18,27). They execute the judgment written (Psa. 149:7-9), judge the world (1 Cor. 6:2,3), "sit down in the kingdom of God" with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob and other distinguished heroes of God in everlasting comradeship (Matt. 8:11; Luke 13:28,29), and shall reign on the earth as kings and priests (Rev. 5:10).

Dear reader, do not reason, logic and the fitness of things corroborate these declarations of the divine utterance. Heroic poetry, in its most presumptuous flights, has never conceived of such a vindication for defeated warriors as this—triumphing in a deathless and glorified body on the very field of battle where their leader was mutilated and entombed. It is certainly fitting that the place of Immanuel's sufferings should also be the place of his triumph. And it is most fitting that the saints should share the kingdom and the glory with Christ. Is it not according to logical thought and the fitness of things that those who have been partakers of his sufferings should be also partakers of his glory when it is revealed (1 Pet. 4:13); that those who have toiled in his service should enter into his rest (Heb. 4:11); that those who have fought under his banner should participate in the honors of his victory; that those who have borne the cross should be given the crown; that those who have bravely confessed him before men should be confessed of him before the holy angels—that those who have cheerfully submitted to the loss of all things for his sake and the gospel should be rewarded an hundredfold in the very world where, for his sake, they have been impoverished? O reader, is it not consistent and fitting, logical and scriptural, that the purchaser should come and claim what he has purchased, gather home his exiles, fold his scattered sheep upon Mount Zion, and fulfill his gracious promise to reward their faithfulness, and gratify their hope of eternal life? Does it not follow that here, where he redeemed them, he should dwell with them forever; that here where he has abolished the "last enemy," death they should celebrate in his presence that glorious achievement of his power; that here where they are purified by his grace and disciplined by his providence, they should enjoy his eternal communion, and rejoice in his eternal beatitude; that here, where they sleep in the dust, and awake in immortality they should be permitted to remain in glorified bodies with him who is "the resurrection and the life," amid the ineffable beauties of regenerate nature and in the delectable joys of paradise restored?

(c) The Laws. "The world to come" will be subject to Christ and his immortalized saints (Heb. 2:8). Residents of Jerusalem, the headquarters and metropolis of the kingdom, they will enact and enforce holy and just laws, and exercise lordship over the earth to the utmost bounds of the globe. These laws, wisely and divinely administered, will work an intellectual, moral, social, and religious reformation among the subject people, as witness the following testimonies:

"Many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. And he shall judge among the nations . . . . neither shall they learn war any more" (Isa. 2:3,4).

"The isles shall wait for his law" (Isa. 42:4; see also Zech. 14:16-19).

(d) The Subjects: Israelites and Gentiles. The Jews, now scattered and afflicted, will be gathered from their dispersion and re-instated in Palestine as the subjects of the kingdom. However, the subjects include Gentiles also, with this difference: "The kingdom of God" is distinct from "all people, nations, and languages" which it rules (Dan. 7:14), just as the kingdom of Great Britain is distinct from its colonies. The Jews will be the highest subjects of the kingdom, just as Englishmen are in England; the Gentiles, like her colonial possessions, will form the "dominion" and constitute dependencies of the kingdom, like the "Dominion of Canada," New Zealand, etc. Jews and Gentiles are both subjects, but the Jews are "the first dominion"—subjects in a proper and exclusive sense. These distinctions are made transparent in the following Scriptures:

"His kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him" (Dan. 7:27).

"Many nations shall be joined to the Lord in that day, and shall be my people" (Zech. 2:11).

"And thou, O tower of the flock, the strong hold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion; the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem" (Micah 4:8).

(e) The Capital: Jerusalem. As the gospel radiated from Jerusalem during this dispensation (Luke 24:47), so this city will be the center of activity in the kingdom age, being the resident city of the King and his Queen-consort. It has been selected as the capital city of the world because it is "beautiful for situation," as the following testimonies declare:

"Beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, is Mount Zion, on the sides of the north, the city of the Great King" (Psa. 48.2).

"At that time they shall call Jerusalem the throne of the Lord" (Jer. 3:17).

"Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion, for lo, I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the Lord." "And the Lord shall inherit Judah his portion in the holy land, and shall choose Jerusalem again" (Zech. 2: 10,12).

(f) The Territory: Palestine. Palestine, which God repeatedly calls "my land" (Ezek. 36:5; 38:16; Jer. 2:7; 16.18), and of which Moses says, "It is a land which the Lord thy God careth for; the eyes of the Lord thy God are always upon it, from the beginning of the year even unto the end of the year" (Deut. 11:12), will form the territory of the kingdom in a primary and exclusive sense. Finally, by subjugation and conquest, the "uttermost parts of the earth" are added to the dominion of the "King of kings, and Lord of lords." Such is the plain import of the Scriptures following:

"I will remember the land" (Lev. 26:42).

"Then will the Lord be jealous for his land, and pity his people" (Joel 2:18).

"This land that was desolate is become like the garden of Eden" (Ezek. 36:35).

"I will give thee the heathen (Hebrew, nations) for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession" (Psa. 2:8).

"He shall have dominion also from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth" (Psa. 72:8).

PREPAREDNESS

In this day and age of the world, how noticable it is to the Bible student how many words and phrases are being coined by the world in their preparation for their last great struggle, which we already find in the Scripture. These things go a long way toward building us up in our holy faith. There never was a time when the faith (belief) was so holy and sacred to the church as it is today. And there never has been a time since the days of the apostles that the importance of standing firm for the truth was greater than it is today. So many things are now occurring in the world in rapid succession, that the church has to be very careful that it is not swept off its feet. There are so many things that look all right on the surface, unless the church is very careful, it will become badly mixed with the world without realizing it.

That the church is facing the greatest crisis in its history is quite apparent. In view of this fact we cannot be too well prepared. This thorough preparedness consists of several items. First, our love for God and his truth and his people. If this reigns supreme we will let the world go and leave it entirely to its fate and think only of the church and its needs.

Now what are some of its needs? First, to be of one mind, and to speak the same things, and to walk by the same rule. The question now is: "Is the church doing this"? Or are some of the membership standing entirely aloof from the world and letting them fight their own battles and provide their own ways and means, while others are buying Liberty Bonds and are in Red Cross work, thus making a division—not speaking the same things, nor walking in the same rule.

Now if we are looking for Jesus to come soon, who are we going to leave our liberty bonds with when he calls us away? And how can we leave in the midst of a Red Cross meeting, without breaking up the meeting, or at least causing a disturbance? And it might be that Jesus would call us just when we were worked up to the highest point of enthusiasm and patriotism, and we would be very reluctant to leave the meeting. So, brethren, the only safe way is to keep clear of all these worldly things.

There should be a general preparation made for the coming of the Lord. Extra meetings should be held and the subjects talked upon that would best fit us to meet the Lord at his coming. I wonder if the church is really prepared. I am afraid not. And for this reason I am prompted to speak of some of the things that I think puts us in an unprepared state. If some of the membership have made mistakes in taking part in this world's struggle, let them not try to justify themselves, but make haste to rectify the mistake.

It seems to me, there is just one thing that ought to settle this question and put us all together. And that is when Jesus comes we will either go and leave all these things, or else remain with them and miss the rapture of the saints. Knowing that we must leave them then, would it not be safer to leave them now? And are we sure that we will be taken unless we do leave them now? I am afraid the chances are against us, for we must be "unspotted from the world." The church, as a whole, must stand as a unit upon these important matters and bring, if possible, all individual dissenters to a like spirit and belief, and thus be prepared for the coming of the Bridegroom. We cannot go carelessly along and expect to be prepared when the Lord comes. The world is full of war spirit, which makes the preaching the gospel double the work it used to be, which makes the necessity for combined effort all the greater. So let us "exhort one another to love and good works."

We must help each other along the rough way and not hesitate to speak the truth, no matter what others may think. The children of Israel were led astray because of the weakness of their leaders, like Aaron and others So the leaders now might let the flock go astray. Let them be true watchmen. "What of the night?" Are the watchmen answering this question and telling the inquirers how far "the night is spent, and that the day is at hand"? Brethren, is any price too great to pay for a home in the kingdom? If not, we should have no reluctance in giving up anything that might hinder us from entering the kingdom. And when Jesus came first and offered them the kingdom, they were not prepared to accept it. But the church must be prepared against such a fate as this.

We hope this article will prepare our readers for what is to follow. Almus Adams.

A GOOD SUGGESTION

Brother Watkins writing from Arcola, Canada, suggests for the best interests of "The Church of God of the Abrahamic Faith" throughout the world, that as a means of uniting us into a closer and more fraternal bond of Christian love and fellowship, a list of the membership may be kept in the office of "The Restitution." Thus a brother or sister moving into another state or city, may inform themselves as to the location, or place of meeting, and also the personality of the brotherhood residing there. Brother Watkins has sent sufficient money to defray the necessary expenses, for purchasing a ledger, etc.

The Editor has requested the writer to take charge of this matter. This he will gladly do providing he receives the co-operation of the brotherhood. We request therefore that every brother or sister will send us his or her name accompanied with this information:

Name in full.
Present Post Office address, Street, City.
State, Country.
Date of baptism.
Name of place.
By whom administered.

We feel that in these closing days of the present dispensation, when everything points to the near return of our dear Lord, that we should unite into one family, having one thought, the best interests of all. A directory of the brotherhood scattered throughout the world will largely accomplish this.

Yours in his service, Geo. B. Alldridge.

EDITORIAL

Recent visitors have included Brother Ashford and Sister Ethel Lehman.

Think less of yourself, your own deficiencies and sins, and more of Christ; his character, his love, and his sufficiency. Love will draw and constrain us when threatening and reproof would do us no good.

December 2nd the following were baptized as a result of parental and Sunday School teaching: George Tabor, son of Brother and Sister Tabor; Doris Meermans, daughter of Brother and Sister Meermans; and Susan Keith, oldest daughter of Brother and Sister Keith.

Almost all of our occasional depressions may be prevented, or removed by proper management. We speak from experience. God afflicts us that we may understand better that kind of suffering in others. We recall all of our past afflictions with gratitude, for they have made us able to appreciate and remove distress from others that we could not otherwise have reached.

Brother Sterling Russell, who left us a few weeks ago to engage in non-combative work in the army, has been discharged on the ground of physical debility. How true it is that God makes a "way of escape" for those who want to escape. Of all our boys who were drafted not one is held for permanent service in military business except one, Brother Miller, and he has been given carpenter's work with the assurance that he can remain in this country. "The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ears are open unto their cry" (Psa. 34:15).

COMMUNICATIONS

"They shall make known unto you all things which are done here." (Col. 4:9).

Dear Brethren and Sisters of the Abrahamic Faith:

This is an appeal for aid for a poor dear sister that has been left to the mercy of these perilous times, by a cruel husband who opposed her obedience of the gospel and the faith of Abraham. She stands for Jesus. Her husband could not force her to give up the faith. He abused her by cursing her for believing the gospel, and now has left her to starve. The sister is about 64 years of age, and has very bad health. My husband baptized her about 3½ years ago. She is still a babe, but zealous for the truth. My heart is full of sorrow for this dear sister. Her name and address is,

Mrs. Susan Shepherd,
1919, South Edith St., Chanute, Kansas.

Loving greetings to all of the household of faith. We ask an interest in your prayers, dear brethren Mr. and Mrs. L. J. Sweet,

Dear Restitution:

A short time ago I read a book entitled "The Conquering Jew," written by John Foster Fraser. The followng are a few of the more important statements he made in regard to the Jews:

"The Jew of today is what the world has made him. They have among them many of the richest men in the world, as undoubtedly they have many of the poorest. They reach the extremes in generosity and meanness. There are more men of genius among a million Jews, than among a million Gentiles, but also there are more idiots.

"If it had not been for persecution the Jews would have disappeared centuries ago. During the cruel middle ages the Jews decreased, not because they were killed off, but because they were absorbed. Italy and Spain absorbed thousands. It was following these days that both Spain and Italy rose to pre-eminence due, I am sure, to the admixture of Jewish blood. The cruelty of the middle ages intensified the sharpness and resourcefulness of the Jews.

"The Jew has tremendous will power and his tenacity is unflinching. It may be news, but investigation proves the truth that the astounding rise of the United States is largely due to the Jews. American methods really mean Jewish methods. They have four per cent more ability than the average Englishman, and two per cent more than the average Scotchman. Equally distinguished with Europeans as architects, artists, antiquarians, in natural science, political economy, science, and sculpture. They have superiority in the drama, medicine, commerce, (chiefly finance) metaphysics, music, poetry, philosophy, and chess playing."

Such a people once possessed of the Holy Land, with climatic conditions that are favorable, would soon cause the land to flow with milk and honey; therefore a territory to be desired, by the nations of the earth

J. C. Thompson.

Dear Restitution:

Dear Brother Huggins: I am in receipt of yours of Nov. 1st returning the Wilson Fund. I am very sorry Brother Wilson's circumstances are such that he can not take up the ministry. I should have been very glad to have assisted him in his effort to spread the true gospel, but since he cannot, I would be glad to assist any other young brother that will take up the cause and preach the gospel in these last days, for I believe we have but a few years at the outside to preach the gospel before the Master comes. It makes one sad to look on the world, both the religious and unreligious, and see them rushing on to eternity without even knowing there is a Savior to come.

Brother Huggins, there is a church matter about which I would like a little information. Does the church have any record of its members, that is, as a whole. I know where there is an organization of a small church. But we realize that that is not sufficient, for necessity is the mother of invention. There are brethren in isolated places where there are not enough to form an organization and they cannot unite with other denominations. They are left out from a worldly standpoint. That would not make any difference perhaps, but it does at the present time when we are asked by the military authorities to what church we belong. When we say the church of God, they say they do not know of that church; and if we referred them to you, you would not have our name and could not tell if we belong to the church or not. That is our fix, and I have no doubt there are others in the same fix.

Now The Restitution has been the official organ of the church ever since I was a lad. My father took it while he was alive and since then I have kept it in my home. You have my name on your subscription list, but there are others of my family that do not appear there, but they have been baptized into the name and faith, and should be on some record. Now to overcome that difficulty I propose you get a record book, then advertise in The Restitution for any and all of the brethren and sisters to send in their names and have them recorded in the book. That would give all a chance to have their names on the church record, even if they were isolated. Now I am sending back the Wilson Fund to buy a record book to be kept in The Restitution office for that purpose. If this meets the approval of others, buy a record book, and if there is any more left put it into the Help Fund.

Your brother in Christ, E. C. Watkins,

Brother Alldridge's Reply

To this letter Brother Alldridge sent the following reply:

Mr. E. C. Watkins, My dear Brother:

Your kind, thoughtful, and suggestive letter to "The Restitution" under date of Nov. 13th, 1917, is before me. Brother Huggins, the Editor, requested me to take this matter in hand. This I have consented to do. I intend to write an article to The Restitution setting forth your suggestions, requesting the brethren to respond.

I hope we shall be able to compile an intelligent and complete roster of the membership of the church of God, wherever a class or little company of the Abrahamic Faith may meet in the name of the Lord Jesus.

Trusting that you are well and enjoying the blessings resulting from possessing the spirit of the truth, I remain,

Faithfully your in his everlasting love,
Geo. B. Alldridge.

WHAT THE BIBLE TEACHES ABOUT RUSSIA

By James M. Gray

I.

At the beginning of the 38th chapter of Ezekiel, the prophet is told to set his face "toward Gog of the land of Magog, the chief prince of Rosh, Mesheck and Tubal, and prophesy against him." There is no dispute among philologists and archeologists that "Gog" and "Magog" here stand for a powerful Scythian dynasty of Ezekiel's time. Besides this, we have in "Gog" the first syllable of the word "Caucasus," the name of the mountain range crossing the peninsular of Russia, which divides the Caspian from the Black Sea.

In "Rosh" also we have the first syllable of "Russia," while "Mesheck" and "Tubal" are the original forms of "Moscow" and Tobolsk," which were immemorially in possession of that nation. A reliable ancient map placed by the side of a reliable modern one will identify the territories.

But it is a prophecy of divine anger against her and the nations which are allied with her. These are named as "Persia, Ethiopia and Libya . . . . .; Gomer and all his hordes; the house of Togarmah in the uttermost parts of the north, and all his hordes. . . . Be thou prepared, yea, prepare thyself, thou and all thy companies that are assembled unto thee, and be thou a guard unto them."

"Persia" we identify; "Ethiopia" is thought to mean the present Abyssinia; "Libya" a part of Egypt; "Gomer" has for its latest analogue "Crimea," and "Togarmah" some would identify with Armenia and others with "Turkestan."

Germany is not mentioned in this list, indeed, except as she may be included in the name of some of the countries whose boundries are not clearly defined. But what the Bible omits in this case the Russian annals to which we refer later may be said to include.

II.

But what of the time when this shall be fulfilled ? As verses 1-7 indicate the nation, so verses 8-12 indicate the time.

It will be "after many days" and "in the latter years," a Hebrew idiom pointing to the close of the present dispensation. But whether or no this is the case, it must be a period still future, for the reason that the military combination referred to in verses 5-7 has not yet appeared in history. Russia with Persia, Egypt and the other nations in her train represents a mobilization of armies which the world has yet to witness.

But, furthermore, it will be the time when Israel shall be gathered again in her own land, and when she shall be dwelling in comparative quietness and safety (see verses 8, 11, 12).

And now what of the results ? What shall be the consequence of this invasion of Palestine on the part of Russia ? Read verses 18 to 23 of chapter 38, and 1 to 24 of chapter 39.

God's fury shall come up into his nostrils, and he will not only slay them with the sword but with pestilence, and the forces of nature, such as rain and hailstones, and fire and brimstone, like unto Sodom and Gomorrah.

Two items give a very vivid picture of the terribleness of this slaughter. One is that Israel will be seven months burying the dead, and the other that the wooden portions of their accoutrements of war will frunish fire kindlings for seven years.

Prior to the present war, statements of this character would have been considered luridly extravagant; but in the past three years we have become so accustomed to gigantic devastation that they fail to surprise us.

III.

There are certain inferences to be gathered from the above, both of a political and religious nature. The people of God have often been able to read history generations and centuries in advance, and it seems probable that they may do so here. Of course, dogmatic assertions are out of place, but if our interpretation of Ezekiel be correct, then the present alliance of Russia with the Western nations is not likely to be permanent, for they are of the original Roman Empire, to which she never belonged. And for this reason it is more likely that one of these days the relationship of Russia and Germany shall become close, for Germany, like Russia was never of the Roman Empire, except as to that part of her territory west of the Rhine.

In this connection the reader will be interested in a few paragraphs from the last will and testament of Peter the Great, the noted monarch of Russia, and which has always been regarded as one of the most famous documents of modern history. We quote them from the London Times:

> (1) "The Russian nation must be constantly on a war footing, to keep the soldiers warlike and in good condition. . . . By these means peace is made subservient to war and war to peace in the interest of the aggrandizement and increasing prosperity of Russia.
> (3) "No opportunity must be lost of taking part in the affairs and disputes of Europe, especially in those of Germany, which from its vicinity is one of the most direct interest to us. . . .
> (8) "We must keep steadily extending our frontiers—northward along the Baltic, and southward along the shores of the Black Sea.
> (10) "Moreover, we must take pains to establish and maintain an intimate union with Austria, apparently countenancing her schemes for future aggrandizement in Germany, and all the while secretly arousing the jealousy of the minor states against her. By this way we must bring it to pass that one or the other party shall seek aid from Russia, and thus we shall exercise a sort of protectorate over the country, which will pave the way for future supremacy.
> (12) "We must collect around our house, as round a centre, all the detached sections of Greeks which are scattered abroad in Hungary, Turkey, and South Poland. We must make them look to us for support, and then, by establishing beforehand a sort of ecclesiastical supremacy we shall pave the way for universal sovereignty."

That Russia under the Czars has carried out this policy pretty successfully, all students of history are able to testify; and though it is now experiencing a check, yet there is small guarantee that it will never become operative again.

In other words, we are not to expect a permanent peace as the result of the present embroilment of the nations. The president of Chicago University said some time ago that certain of the nations entertain piratical policies and intentions, and are willing deliberately to apply them to the weaker peoples. He spoke truly of the past and the present, and there are reasons to feel that he also prophesied of the future; for nations are but aggregations of men, and men are unchangeable in their nature, except by the power of God through the operation of faith in Christ Jesus.

But is there no hope ? Yes, thank God, but it is found in him and in him only. When the prophet asked, "Watchman, what of the night ?" the watchman said, "The morning cometh, and also the night." The night first but the morning afterward.

To the true believer, the morning comes when Jesus comes to gather his own unto himself. The judgments to follow will be purifying judgments, until at lengh the nations of the earth shall learn righteousness, and "the kingdom of the world is become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever" (Rev. 11:15). —A Clipping sent by Brother W. C. Heacock.

Lesson XX

Prayer

Memory Text

"But the end of all things is at hand, be ye therefore sober and watch unto prayer" (1 Pet. 4:7).

1. "Watch and pray that ye enter not into temptation; the spirit is willing but the flesh is weak" (Matt. 26:41).
2. "But I say unto you, Love your enemies, bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you and persecute you" (Matt. 5:44).

3. "And he spake a parable unto them to this end that men ought always to pray and not to faint" (Luke 18:1).
4. "And it came to pass that as he was praying in a certain place, when he ceased, one of his disciples said unto him, Lord, teach us to pray as John also taught his disciples" (Luke 11:1).

5. "And he said unto them, when ye pray say, Our Father which art in heaven," etc. (Luke 11:2).
6. "All things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive" (Matt. 21:22).

7. "Peter therefore was kept in prison but prayer was made without ceasing of the church unto God for him" (Acts 12:5).
8. "For the eyes of the Lord are over the righteous and his ears are open unto his prayers" (1 Pet. 3:12).
9. "I pray for them; I pray not for the world, but for them which thou hast given me; for they are thine" (John 17:9).
10. "I pray not that thou shouldest take them out of the world, but that thou shouldest keep them from the evil" (John 17:15).
11. "Neither pray I for these alone; but for them also which shall believe on me through their word" (John 17:20).

Practical Truth

Prayer is a petition, a communion with God. Child talking to parent, an opening of the heart to our Heavenly Father. No person can keep near the heart of God, within the great parent vine, be kept pure and unspotted without a continual, prayerful devotion, a desire to be ever ready to enter into conversation with the dear God and Father of us all. There has no other way been shown us to do his will but to ask to be guided by his Holy Spirit. Whether it conflicts with our own selfish thoughts or not we must do his commands; self must not be taken into consideration but the will of God. We must believe in prayer, believe God will hear and answer our requests if asked aright, for he has promised this to his children; and he never fails in his promises.

Notes on the Lesson

1. Watch.—Always be on guard. Pray.—For help lest ye be led astray by the tempter. The Spirit is Willing.—Our real intentions are to do right. Flesh is weak.—Our fleshly lusts and appetites are so strong that they render us almost helpless, hence the necessity of imploring Divine help.
2. Love Your Enemies.—Love all mankind and have charity for your enemies; remember the weakness of mortal man. Pray for them.— ask for Divine help in bringing about a reconciliation and labor to this end.
3. Always to Pray.—Pray at all times and under all circumstances; never become discouraged. Continue to trust in God and hope for his mercy.
4. Lord, Teach Us to Pray.—1. To whom shall we pray ? 2. What things to pray for. 3. Appropriate language to use in prayer.
5. Say "Our Father."—Address the King upon his throne (Psa. 11:4; Isa. 66:1).
6. All Things.—All things that the Father has promised to give in answer to prayer. To pray to be received up to heaven at death, much as we might covet such a position, it would be in vain to ask it; for notice what John tells us (John 3:13; then see 1 Cor. 14:15; Jas. 4:3; Matt. 6:9-13).
7. Without Ceasing.—The church continued praying for his protection and deliverance. The Church.—Christ's followers.
8. Ears Are Open.—The Lord is always ready to hear and answer the prayers of his children when they ask sincerely and intelligently. See Acts 12:5-11.
9. I pray For Them.—For his disciples; those that had left their all to follow him. Those who had been with him in his trials; and now he was anxious they should see his glory, be with him then to witness it; and his prayer was answered. Thou Hast Given Me.—Those that had believed in him through his preaching.
10. Take Them Out of the World.—Not to remove them out of the world, but give them strength to withstand the trials that might come to them in the world.
11. For These Alone.—The Savior prayed not for those who were then his disciples but for those also who would afterward believe on him through their teaching.

Suggestive Topics and Questions

1. What is Prayer?—Define prayer. (A petition—a supplication. Pray—to ask with earnestness; to supplicate.—Webster.)

2. Objects of Prayer.—Are we taught to pray for the forgiveness of sins (Matt. 6:12; 1 John 1:9)? Will God forgive sin unless we comply with the conditions of pardon? What is said about prayer in temptation (Matt. 26:41)? Is it right to pray for knowledge (Jas. 1:5)? Do you think we should pray for health (Jas. 5:13)? Do you believe in prayer-cure (Jas. 5:15)? How are we to pray for our enemies (Matt. 5:44)? Have we the privilege of praying for such things as we need?

3. A Part of Worship.—Why did Peter and John go into the temple at the hour of prayer (Acts 3:1)? Was it the custom of the early Christians to meet for prayer (Acts 16:13)? Read Acts 1:14, and tell if in your opinion this was a prayer meeting? Why should we pray for our rulers? Why is this pleasing in the sight of God (1 Tim. 2:1-3).

4. Long and Short Prayers.—What is the general character of the prayers recorded in the Bible? Are they long or short? Are long prayers commended (Matt. 6:7)? What caution is given by Solomon in regard to prayer (Eccl. 5:2).?

5. Does God Answer Prayer.—Read paragraph 7 and tell us if it is applicable to this age and at this time. Read some Bible examples of answer to prayer (1 Kings 17:21,22; James 5:17,18; Acts 12:5-9; 10:31). Are such prayers answered now? If our prayers are not answered what de we lack (Matt. 21:22)? Is faith a condition of receiving an answer? How long should we pray (4)? Whom did Christ address in the prayer he taught the disciples (5)? Did he tell them to think the prayer or to say it (5; also Luke 11:2)? How many petitions are there in this prayer? Can we think a prayer as well as say it? Do you believe that your prayers are answered? Can you give any instances of personal experiences?

6. When, Where and Under What Circumstances Should We Pray?—At all times (1 Thess. 5:17,18). Have an hour of prayer (Acts 3:1. Have a place of prayer (Acts 16:13; 19:46). Pray in secret (Matt. 6:6). Pray for those who are preaching (2 Thess. 3:1; Col. 4:2,3; Eph. 6:18,19). Pray everywhere (1 Tim. 2:8). Pray for all men (1 Tim. 2:1).

INDIANA STATE CONFERENCE

Important Notice to All Members

According to the new constitution it is the duty of the State Treasurer to solicit contributions from isolated members; also to send notices to each Church Treasurer to solicit funds from their congregation to carry on the conference work of the state. We have the promise of competent help from other states to conduct evangelistic work, beginning soon after January 1st.

There will be urgent need of funds to meet these expenses. If each isolated and individual church member will do their part, there will be no trouble to raise the amount required.

Isolated members can send direct to State Treasurer; individual church members can pay into their local Treasurer, who will forward to the State Treasurer. Please attend to this matter before January 1st.

Memory Verses: Micah 6:8; Titus 2:13,14

Golden Text: Hebrews 4:7,8

There is one contributor to "The Restitution" who has lived many years yet always is young. Her articles are read with equal interest by male and female; old, young, and middle aged. To youth her name spells Hope; to those of mature years she is a Benediction; to us she always appears to be one who though ambitious was cautious, exercised perseverance with discretion and was self-reliant without conceit, using all her talents to the upbuilding of her fellows, through faith in Christ the Lord, to the glory of God the Father.

To this true child of the King we respectfully dedicate this page; and remember every article thereon, including Golden Text and puzzle, was either written or selected by Sister S. Roxana Wince, to all lovingly known as

"In the Beginning God"

Begin the day with God
He is thy sun and day;
He is the radiance of thy dawn,
To him address thy lay.

Take thy first meal with God,
He is thy heavenly food;
Feed with and on him, he with thee
Will feast in brotherhood.

Thy first transaction be
With God himself above;
So shall thy business prosper well,
And all the day be love.

I passed a stagnant marsh that lay
Beneath a reeking scum of green;
A loathsome puddle by the way—
No sorrier sight was ever seen.
I said how lost to all things pure
And clean and white those foul depths be;
Next day from out that pond obscure
Two queenly lilies laughed at me.

I passed a hovel round whose door
The signs of poverty were strewn;
I saw the grimed and littered floor—
The walls from logs of tree trunks hewn;
I said the gates of life are shut
To those within that wretched pen;
But lo! from out that very hut,
Comes one to rule the world of men.

BIBLE LESSONS ON FIRST PRINCIPLES

The Editor of "The Restitution" is now preparing for publication a series of Bible lessons which are designed to explain every essential feature of gospel truth. Three lessons of the series have just been published entitled respectively, "Introduction," "The Word of God in Threefold Aspect," and "The Gospel of the Kingdom the Only True Gospel." Valuable for conducting Bible studies and classes and for giving Berean lessons, as well as for individual study. Written primarily to teach the elemental principles of the gospel to candidates preparatory to baptism. Three cents for one copy; twenty-five cents the dozen.

DENYING THE FAITH

A sermon which is both doctrinal and practical. 20 pages; one copy 5 cents; 40 cents per dozen.

"THE SMOKE OF THEIR TORMENT ASCENDETH UP FOREVER"

A sermon of doctrinal and prophetic value. A profound subject made simple. 12 pages. One copy 3 cents; 12 copies 25 cents.

THE DEATH OF CHRIST

A doctrinal discourse setting forth logically and scripturally the meaning of death and its relation to the gospel of life. 3 cents each; 25 cents per dozen.

PARADISE LOST; PARADISE REGAINED

A sermon in which every text in the Bible where paradise occurs, either in the English or original tongue, is quoted and explained. 5 cents each; 12 for 40 cents.

THE BIBLE: ITS PRINCIPLES AND TEXTS

As indicated by its title, this book is divided into three sections: the first consists of a disquisition on "The Bible"; the second simplifies its "Principles" in formulated propositions; and the third expounds in a homiletic manner particular "Texts." As an Editor the Author has untied many knotty questions submitted to him by readers; more than a hundred and fifteen are considered in this volumn. One copy $1.10; two copies $2.00.

CHRISTMAS TIME

"And suddenly there was with the angels a multitude of the heavenly host, praising God, and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men" (Luke 2:13,14).

"Blessed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord; peace in heaven, and glory in the highest" (Luke 19.38).

O happy hearts of love and light,
  Sweet Christmas time has come again;
Awake and watch the stars of night,
  And hear hope's anthem sweet refrain.

Perchance the golden song of old,
  May sweep the harp-strings of the sky,
And some glad vision of hope be told,
  To show the angels yet are nigh.

Soon Gabriel's mighty trump will sound,
  And rend the silent vanquished tomb;
And Christ the Nobleman will come,
  And death receive his final doom.

Then risen saints with angels join,
  To escort our welcome Monarch home;
And we with joy without alloy,
  Will shout "Amen, the Lord has come."

SEASON'S GREETINGS

The Season and the Spirit of Christmas

The season of Christmas is here. With it let us practice the spirit of Christmas. We who believe know that Christ went everywhere doing good, preaching the gospel of glad tidings to the poor. When the disciples of John came to Jesus and asked, "Art thou he—the Christ—that should come, or do we look for another?" the answer was, "Go and show John again those things which ye do hear and see; the blind receive their sight, and the lame walk, the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear, the dead are raised up, and the poor have the gospel preached unto them." By this we notice that Christ—the founder of Christianity and whose birth we celebrate in Christmas—spent his life in the service of his fellows, and if we are to have a real Merry, Happy and Joyful Christmas we will follow the example of our Lord. We, too, will do good wherever we can; we, too, will devote our energies, our talents, our lives in the service of our fellows. This is the spirit of Christmas. Let us practice it thus insuring to ourselves

A MERRY CHRISTMAS and a
HAPPY AND JOYFUL NEW YEAR

PLATFORM ECHOES

THE VISION OF GOD

A Sermon by Robt. G. Huggins, Delivered in Cleveland, Ohio, Oct. 21, 1917 *

"Then went up Moses and Aaron, Nadab and Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel; and they saw the God of Israel; and under his feet as it were a paved work of sapphire stone, and as it were the body of heaven in clearness. And upon the nobles of the children of Israel he laid not his hand: also they saw God and did eat and drink" (Exo. 24:9-11).

God had just delivered to Moses the decalogue, the reading and perusal of which reveals God in judicial aspect. Immediately following is given the remarkable revelation by vision recorded in our text.

Remarkable Developments Accompany Visions of God and His Glory

Our senses are the inlets to our minds, hence God seems always to be governed by this principle, viz., that remarkable outward appearances accompany all developments of himself. When the Son of God bowed his head in death and cried, "It is finished," there took place the throb of an earthquake, the rending of graves, and even the blotting out of the sun. This wonderful decalogue was given amid scenes that were designed never to be forgotten. As the cloud rested on Sinai, God's pavilion, the thunder began to speak from its depths, and the fierce lightning traversed its bosom, gleaming and flashing through every part of it. Moses led the trembling Israelites forth to the foot of the mountain. Suddenly the uproar ceased, the thunder hushed their voices, the last echoes of the trumpet died away, and all was still. From that silent cloud came a voice more fearful than they all—the voice of Jehovah calling Moses up into the mount. The great law-giver of Israel parted from his people, and with solemn steps was seen scaling the rocks and climbing the heights; till at last the cloud received him in its bosom.

*Reported for "The Restitution" by Brother George B. Alldridge.

The moral law was given, as also the civil code, which men have so learnedly tried to trace to the social compact. The first act of the mighty drama was ended, and Moses was ordered to bring up Aaron, Nadab, Abihu, and seventy of the elders to worship in the mountain where God showed himself in his glory to them. Shortly before this the awe-stricken multitude stood at the base of Sinai or lay there prostrate: now they are to enjoy a vision of God free from all emblems of severity. "And upon the nobles of the children of Israel he laid not his hand: also they saw God and did eat and drink."

God Cannot be Seen by the Bodily Eye
Neither can a Vision of His Glory
Be Revealed Face to Face

Moses prayed that he might see God's glory, but God told him no man could see his face and live. Nevertheless God permitted him to see his back parts as he passed by (Ex. 33:17-23). Read also John 1:18; I Tim. 6:16; Job 26:9; Dan. 10:19; Psa. 110:1,2; Isa. 60:13; Hab. 3:4.

God only reveals to us as much of his glory as we are able to bear. He reveals and he also conceals himself. We cannot see the sun in all its glory, for it is too brilliant. Jesus reveals God to us in that we see God now through him who is sitting at his right hand. What a vision of God as the multitude viewed it. As it were a paved work of sapphire stone at God's feet, the body of the heaven in clearness, clear as a diamond. Apparently a serene and pure radiance began to play around the montain, quivering like a bright light with its own intensity. Brighter and brighter it grew till the eye turned away dazzled by the sight. Brighter still it gleamed till it seemed a glowing furnace, shooting forth living fire on every side. Habakkuk in his prayer saw something of this: "His glory covered the heavens, and the earth was full of his praise, and brighness was as the light: he had horns coming out of his hands, and there was the hiding of his power." First we see God in Christ in the one thousand years and then a gradual bursting of his glory until at the end of the thousand years we shall see God face to face and, seeing his glory yet live; and like the nobles in the type, eat and drink in the kingdom; "That ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and set on thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel" (Luke 22:30). The greatest glory that can come to man is to reign as a king, and like the Israelites at the mountain's base associated with this vision of God, this kingdom and glories are the commonest things, eating and drinking.

Today Many Eat and Drink Without Seeing God

In Daniel 4:30, Nebuchadnezzar declares, "Is not this great Babylon that I have built for the house of my kingdom, by the might of my power, and the honor of my majesty?" Men today, through their mighty and learned scientists, are boasting of their power to make themselves. They deify themselves, they worship those who made them, viz., themselves.

Men bow at the shrine of worldly wisdom. Darwin's "Origin of Species by Natural Selection," and "The Descent of Man," are accepted by the mighty minds, while God and his word are rejected. Asa Gray's wonderful knowledge of botany reveals the beauty of nature's workings, but the God behind it is hidden. John Tyndall tells us of the formation and history of glaciers, but Job was asked by God: "Hast thou entered into the treasures of the snow? or hast thou seen the treasures of the hail, which I have reserved against the time of trouble, against the day of battle and war?" (Job 38:22,23). Huxley, the famous biologist, treating on the development of life, fails to understand Gen. 2:7 or to honor God, the fountain of life. La Place, mathematician and astronomer, cannot answer God who asks, "Canst thou bind the sweet influences of Pleiades, or loose the bands of Orion?" (Job 38:31). David Hume, philosopher and historian, sees not God in the affairs of men and nations or the beginning of sin (Gen. 3:1-19).

Lord Kelvin, noted physicist, understood the secrets of nature and her laws, but seems silent regarding the mighty being who created them. Louis Agassiz in his wonderful studies on ichthyology reveals to us the interesting life and habits of fish. But "canst thou draw out levethian with an hook? or his tongue with a cord which thou lettest down? Canst thou put an hook into his nose? or bore his jaw through with a thorn"? (Job 41:1).

Robert Kock, famous German bacteriologist, with all of his wonderful knowledge, is unable to see God in anything and that the blood of Jesus Christ cleanses us from all sin.

John Lubbock, archaeologist, tells us of the "Beauties of Nature" and the "Pleasures of Life"; but how many men see God after reading them. Sir Isaac Newton, student of alchemy, who wrote on the prophecies of Daniel and the history of creation, sharing with Liebont the honor of discovering the differential calculus is worshipped today, but the God he saw is despised.

So we could go on to the world's greatest writers and matters pertaining to science and religion, covering a wide range of science, philosophy, socialology, but none reveal to us God as we see him revealed in his word. They all reveal the machinery, but cannot reveal the mechanician; we see in their writing the laws in operation but no law maker; we see the effect, but to see God we must understand and know the cause.

Some See God But Cannot Eat or Drink

Where there is a sense of guilt there is a subduing, a fitting for service (Ex. 3:16; Isa. 6:5; Luke 5:8). In proportion to our knowledge of unworthiness and the holiness of God we exclaim with the prophet Isaiah: "Woe is me! for I am undone: because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips; for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts"; or with Peter: "Depart from me: for I am a sinful man, O Lord." As we become conscious of sin it tends to isolate us from God. Probably this accounts for so many at time absenting themselves from obeying the command not to forsake the assembling of ourselves together. But as in the type the people who were afraid and shuddered at the presence of God, after entering into covenant relationship with him, ate and drank in his presence (John 6:44; 1 John 4:17,18).

Some See God and Eat and Drink

It is this knowledge that God is our Father, revealed to us by his Son, that begets in us confidence and faith in him and his precious promises whereby we are made partakers of his divine nature. "Without faith it is impossible to please God." Hence, as we see God, and repose in him we confidently sit down at his table which he has prepared for us in the presence of our enemies. As we gather around the Lord's table this morning and partake of this bread and drink this wine, God will come to us like a Father and will lap us in the mantle of his love (Gen. 16:3; Heb. 4:13; Col. 3:23,24). In this spirit whatsoever we do, will be done heartily, as to the Lord, and not unto men, knowing that of the Lord ye shall receive the reward of the inheritance; for ye serve the Lord Christ. In everything we shall see God—in the minor as well as the greater things of life, realizing that to know God as revealed in his word is to see him with the eyes of our understanding, and if faithful unto death, we shall see him face to face and bask forever in the sunshine of his love.

SUNDRY THOUGHTS ABOUT CHRIST

Dear Brother Huggins:

I have been requested to write an article on the pre-existence of Christ and explain Mark 12: 1-9; John 17:5, and 1 Cor. 10:1-4. There are three views as to the nature of Christ.

First, the popular view that he pre-existed as the second person of the trinity. This view is held by the Roman Catholic Church and the majority of Protestant churches.

The second view is that he was the son of Joseph. This idea is held by the unbelieving Jews, infidels, and a few others who take parts of the Bible and reject the rest.

The last view is that he was the only begotton Son of God, begotten by the Holy Spirit as recorded in the New Testament. In 2 Cor. 6:14-18 we are forbidden to yoke up with unbelievers. Now, if we believe in the pre-existence of Christ, with whom are we yoked? With those who hold the immortal soulism. These two theories stand or fall together. Then again, if we hold that he was the son of Joseph, we yoke up with the unbelieving Jews, infidels, etc. But if we believe he was the Son of God we are in fellowship with God, Christ and the apostles (Psa. 2:7; Matt. 3:17; John 10:36; 20:31). Where in the Bible is there any blessing promised to anyone for believing in either the pre-existence of Christ or that he was the son of Joseph? In Matt. 16:15 we find that Peter was blessed for believing that Christ was God's Son. In Matt. 13:54-58 we learn that Christ could not do any mighty works in his own country because of their unbelief—yet they believed he was the son of Joseph. We profess to be members of the Church of God, and in Matt. 16:15-18 we find that the foundation upon which this church rests is: "Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God"; and in 1 Cor. 3:11 Paul declares that other foundations can no man lay. In Gal. 4:4 we read: "But when the fulness of time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law." Now, did this Son exist before he was made, before the woman was made? In Luke 1:26-38 we find the words of the angel to Mary stating that she should have a son, and that her son should be the Son of the Highest, and God should give unto him the throne of his father David, and that he should save his people from their sins. In verse 35 the angel uses these words, "Therefore that holy thing born of thee," showing that God's Son is Mary 's son. Now to prove the pre-existence of Christ one of two things must be done, we must prove that this son existed before his mother, or prove this son is not the real Christ. Every promise in the Bible centres in Mary's son, God's Son. The son cannot be as old as the Father, therefore if Christ is God's Son he did not pre-exist as a person.

What does God the Father say on this subject? "Thou art my Son; this day have I begotton thee" (Psa. 2:7). "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased" (Matt. 3:17; 17:5). What does Christ, the Son, say? "I am the Son of God" (John 10:36). "My Father is greater than I" (John 14: 28). And what do the apostles say? See John 20:31; Matt. 15:16-20. Many more such references could be given, but they are not necessary.

Now for John 17:5: "And now, O Father, glorify thou me with thine own self with the glory which I had with thee before the world was." Some claim that Christ as a person had been with the Father through all past time, sharing the Father's glory, and that he laid aside this glory when he came to the earth, and then he endured the cross to get it back. Well, let us go to the law and testimony and see. Turn to John 7:39 and read these words: "For the Holy Spirit was not yet given: because Jesus was not yet glorified." No, Jesus had never had that glory in his own possession; it had been with God. God offers to share this glory with Jesus if Jesus endures the cross, so he can save his people from their sins (Heb. 12:2). With these references in mind look again at John 17:5 and you will see that the glory was with God, and that Christ possessed it in the same sense that we now possess Christ or eternal life (1 John 5:11,12).

In Rev. 13:8 we read that Christ was a Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. In the same sense that he was a lamb slain from the foundation of the world he had the glory; that is, in the mind and purpose of God. In the same sense Paul declares that Levi paid tithes to Melchisedec, although the paying was done by Abraham about 400 years before the tribe of Levi was chosen as the priestly tribe (Heb. 7:1-10). When you understand how Christ was slain from the foundation of the world, and how Levi paid tithes to Melchesidec, you can understand all those verses which seem to teach that Christ was with God in the beginning.

1 Cor. 10:1-4 may be understood in the same sense that we understand John 6:53 and Mark 14: 22-24; that is, as representing Christ. In Mark 12:1-9 the man that planted a vineyard represented God, and the son, of course, represented Christ. To understand this parable all that is necessary is to understand that Christ was God's Son from birth, but that he was not sent to the men of the vineyard until his baptism which took place when he was thirty years of age.

THE WAR AND THE CHURCH

We see many statements, and hear many opinions on the attitude the church should assume in time of war.

Some believe we should stand aloof from war or any other state responsibility; others believe that we should refrain only from war and accept other state duties; still others, that our following of the Master would keep us only from the part of war that would cause us to kill, but that our duty lies along the line of ambulance and hospital work, even though those duties would take us near or even down to death.

In looking over the attitude of these different classes we should think clearly, along charitable and definite lines, using as our final guide Bible examples and precepts.

Of one thing there is no doubt. If we accept the favors and protection of the government of a country we owe a measure of service to that country. If we ask such a government to guarantee our church charters (if we have any), or our land titles, or our rights in every way as citizens, we surely owe some service in return for the favor.

But some will say we are not even citizens, therefore owe no service. Some even claim it wrong to work for the state. I have in mind a case where one was criticized for reporting the state of the weather each morning to the Weather Bureau.

Now for examples. Joseph was Secretary of the Treasury of the Pagan empire of Egypt, and at the same time took on his hands the food control of the empire during times of stress, due to war; for Egyptian history seems to show that the drouth in Egypt was caused by the warring enemies of the people with whom Joseph lived interfering with the irrigation waters of the Nile. Joseph was the Herbert Hoover of Egypt, and the favorite and close advisor of the emperor.

Then look at Daniel. President of the provence of Babylon, and right hand man of four emperors of his time, but all the time he loved and favored of God. Much of the time the country was at war, and part of the time at war with his own people.

But some will say that was the old dispensation. Paul did not hesitate to claim the rights due him as a Roman citizen, and boasted that he was free born. Numerous cases can be cited of the conversion of officers of the Roman government, soldiers, prison wardens and others, withfinding a single instance of one being told to quit the service he was in.

Come down now to our own time. Among all the objectors, we do not hear of any who would hesitate to have their son or daughters teach public school. They even spend money to train them for the work. Yet that is state work, and one of the requirements is that patriotism shall be the key note.

Our sons train for doctors and our daughters for nurses, for the getting of gain, or for the helping of the afflicted, yet when the nation calls for doctors and nurses, and other elements of the medical department of the army, the church is supposed by some to stand aloof.

The "Good Samaritan" was the ideal of service set forth by the Master. To him there was no question of to whom the service was to be rendered, no question of how he was wounded, but only that help was needed. The Samaritan waited not for the call, but seized the opportunity. He was not a drafted man but a volunteer. How different with the others who in passing, crossed to the other side of the way, drawing their robes closer lest they be defiled!

The Master said, "He that is without a sword, let him sell his garment and buy one." But we are not asked to use the sword.

A generous government founded on the principles of personal liberty, and freedom of thought, opens the way to service in the non-combatant branches of the army, which we may enter without any prejudice, and with no slight on our peronal bravery, as the hospital and ambulance corps offers a fine chance of facing death in many forms, and of offering a quality of service helpful alike to the nation, the sick and wounded, and the one who serves.

Our nation has not entered the war for the conquest or the acquisition of territory, or for the lust of power or glory, but in the protection of the lives and virtue of women and children and the liberty of our own and other peoples.

The confidence and love of a centurion of the Roman army, brought forth the praise of our Master in the saying, "I have not found so great faith, no, not in Israel." A centurion again at the death of Jesus was one of the few who acknowledged the Christ, saying, "Surely this was a righteous man." A centurion once again is shown to us whose prayers and alms came up before God and were heard, yes and answered, and he was to send for Peter, who would tell him what he ought to do. Peter baptized him and his household, but we are not told that he reprimanded him as a soldier, and no doubt he (the centurion) was loved and accepted for his faith and service.

We are told to stay out of the service so that people may know we are the Church of God. "By their fruits ye shall know them"—not their appearance. Thistles may be handsome plants and bear fine flowers, but you cannot pick figs from them. So churchmen may put up a fine appearance, but it is service in the way of righteous acts, which are to form the white robes of the saints. "Blessed is the man who passing through the valley of Baca (tears) findeth in it springs." And where could the valley of tears be more surely found than back of the lines in war-stricken Europe? Or who needs the springs of the water of God more than the millions of boys who are there, or are going? And who so able to render the right kind of service as a clean, young man trained in the ways of God, and enlisted in the hospital service of his country?

We look for and pray for the time when war shall cease to the ends of the earth, but it has not yet arrived.

J. E. Adamson.

TO THE BEREANS OF NEBRASKA

Greetings:

Brother Zeller, the president of the Nebraska Berean Society, suggested that a tract library be established in each local Berean Society. This suggestion has been adopted by the National Berean Society, and it now falls to us to work out the details of it. As secretary of the State Tract Society, I am writing you the plan as I have worked it out. This I hope will be adopted and worked out in our state.

The plan is this: Let each local congregation whether they have a Berean Society or not, start a tract library. This is done by selecting someone as librarian. Then let their librarian send me his name immediately, and in return I will send them a full library of tracts free of charge. The librarian must have a book in which to keep a record of the tracts loaned. In this way the librarian will know at all times, where the tracts are and the date that they should be returned. I wish to adopt the rule that no tract should be kept from the local library longer than two weeks. In order to make this understood I will say that when anyone selects tracts from the library, the librarian will write their name in his book, also the names of the tracts taken from the library, and the date they are taken. The person drawing these tracts should be instructed that they are to return them within two weeks after they are drawn out of the library. This would make a perfect working system if each one would follow the rule.

As God instructs us to do things "decently and in order" we should not hesitate to follow his instructions, and if we do, just think what a nice working system we will have. This can only be done by each individual carrying out their part of the system. Let me illustrate: Suppose I owe someone one hundred dollars, and am expecting to pay that with money owed me by another. Now if he fail to pay me, then I must fail to meet my obligations. So now if you draw tracts from the library and fail to return them promptly, someone else may be waiting for these tracts that you have, and the whole system is thrown out of working order.

Now will not each one pledge themselves to work strictly by the rule as nearly as possible? Let us resolve that we will not put the system out of operation by neglect of duty. This library plan is for local work. These tracts are not to be given away.

If you have friends whom you think would be instructed in certain subjects, have your local librarian send me their names and addresses with a list of the tracts which they desire, and I will send them free of charge. Do not hesitate to send for any number of tracts; these tracts are on hand at all times. Let each librarian keep my name and address in their book. Instead of individuals ordering these tracts let the librarian order the tracts for them, and the indiuidual might pay their librarian postage for writing for them. We adopt this rule because it would be almost impossible for every member to have my address.

Now let each local congregation get busy. Select your librarian and send me the names, so we can get our libraries in circulation as soon as possible.

I wish to thank the brotherhood for their liberal response to my appeal made a short time ago. Sister Pickering informs me that she has had responses from a number of other states beside Nebraska, and we now have a nice little working fund. The more you respond the more we can do, so do not forget Sister Lulu Pickering's address, which is Freedom, Nebraska. Occasionally send her your mite.

This is the Lord's work and as such we must not neglect it. If ever there was a time that we needed to study and get the truth before the world, it is now. This we can do the most effectively by combined effort. To do this I have some plans I may present later.

Hoping for an early response, I am your sister in the work,
Ethel Hargleroad,
Stratton, Nebraska.

EDITORIAL

Idleness hath no advocate, but many friends.

Knowledge is a treasure, but practice is the way to it.

Copy is received now faster than we have room to publish it. Writers must have patience if their contributions are tardy in appearing.

We are sorry to report that a letter from Brother J. H. Anderson states that Sister Anderson is in poor health.

Brother Adams sends three new subscribers, for which he has our thanks, and adds that he spent Thanksgiving with the church at Holbrook. Brother Adams labors continually and successfully for the truth, as all our readers know from his monthly reports in The Restitution.

"The Things Concerning the Kingdom of God," lesson IV of the series called "Bible Lessons on First Principles," is now ready to mail. It was published in The Restitution last week, so the reader knows before he orders it the nature and value of the booklet. Send for a dozen or so to express Christmas generosity. Keep them on hand at all times to give to relatives, friends, and neighbors whom you would like to interest and instruct in the gospel of the kingdom of God.

EXTREMES

A Kind Exhortation About Our Duty in War

Mankind is prone to extremes. Even after we know the truth , and after it has modified our human passions considerably, it is not easy to maintain perfect balance. Instances of extremes have been in evidence from the becinning of the present war. Symptoms of this disease have been visible in the writings of contributors to The Restitution. One writer has gone the length of trying to justify the inhumanity, the slaughter, and the murder of war. This spirit is so far removed from the Master whom we serve as to be beyond the thought of a disciple of Jesus. Consequently this article died and was buried without one word of editorial exposure.

In this issue appears a contribution on the war from Brothe Adamson, of California. We wish to commend this article to the attention of the reader, not because we endorse all the positions advocated by the writer; but because he rebukes unseemly extremes. The extreme which seeks to justify and vindicate war is so unchristian, and is so plainly a violation of the kindly way God tells us to treat our enemies, that but few brethren can be caught by the plea. The absurdity of the claim is so transparent it may be reckoned as hamrless because of its obvious absurdity. But some of our brethren are pleading for the truth but in such extreme ways as to injure rather than help it.

For instance: They ignore human governments entirely. They will not ask for nor accept an exemption from military duty from the government Refusing to make use of the "way of escape" after God has provided it, they then add disobedience to disobedience: when they are drafted they refuse to obey. They refuse to the government any allegiance or consideration whatever. They defy the law in fact. This course we think is unscriptural, and is sure to bring reproach upon the truth. "Render unto Caesar the things that are Caesar's" (Matt. 22:21). Caesar, then, does have some claim upon us. We must be subject to magistrates (Titus 3:1). We must obey ordinances of men, from the king down to governers (1 Pet. 2: 13,14). To defy the draft law is to fly into the face of these solemn injunctions. Unconsciously some are laying the foundation of anarchy and mobocracy by advocating such extreme views.

But you say: "We ought to obey God rather than men." Therefore you defy the government. But you defy your government prematurely. There has not yet been brought to our attention a single instance where the government has made a consciencious objector serve in the military ranks. Were the government to go to this extreme we would have to go to the extreme of resisting its demands. It offers you exemption, and you decline to accept it; then you get into trouble because you will not obey the law.

"But," you say, "they want me to do non-combative service, and I refuse to do that, or anything else. To do non-combative service is to be an accomplice in the war." Then what, pray, can you do? If you raise wheat, soon as you sell it, the bread feeds soldiers in France; if you sell a horse, he is shipped to some military camp; and so on ad infinitum. When you sell anything it is no longer yours; and you are not responsible for the use to which it is put. Let us think soberly, act wisely, and avoid extremes.

COMMUNICATIONS

"They shall make known unto you all things which are done here" (Col. 4:9).

Editor Restitution and Readers:

The subject of war and its different phases are ever before us. Constant reminders are brought to us day by day. Some of our young men have been given exemption from combative service which I believe is all the Board is empowered to grant. Some I understand have appealed to a higher tribunal.

We pray for God's grace to sustain us that we may all keep ourselves unspotted from the world. And now comes along a letter from Brother Adams telling us if we incorporate we thus incur worldly spots. This is something new to us, we confess. Our little congregation used to meet every first day for worship in a rented hall. Then the time came when we decided to build a house of worship, and in order to do this we had to legally organize and appoint trustees in order to hold the property. Now while it is true we can sue and be sued, I do not see the necessity of fighting and being fought. The corporation stands in the same capacity as an individual.

The writer speaks about the danger of jumping at conclusions, and it seems to me he has put his foot in his own trap, but I await a further study of the matter. Has any one else anything to offer on the subject? Your brother in the hope of eternal life, J. E. Lent.

Dear Restitution:

Brother Donaldson's story in a late Restitution, of the ungrateful person saved from drowning, who sued her rescuer for damage, calls to mind the following story:

From the swift flowing waters of a river, whose banks were steep and high, came the cries for help of a man in peril of his life. A passer, by using a long pole, saved his life; but unfortunately in doing so injured the rescued man's eye. He, like Brother Donaldson's "she," instituted suit for damages.

The judge who was that day to pronounce in this claim, was walking to his court room, his eyes on the ground, in deep thought and great perplexity. Cold law called for one verdict, natural gratitude for a very different one.

While so engaged his ears caught the names of the plaintiff and defendant in the case he was trying, pronounced near the roadside.

Looking up he saw a crowd of boys gathered about one boy seated on a box having two others standing before him one of these having an eye bandaged. It was plainly a court scene—a mock trial of the one he was so worried over. Imagine his interest when he perceived that the proceedings had come to the point where the youthful judge was to give his verdict.

"My sentence is," he announced "that the plaintiff be thrown back into the stream where he was rescued and, if he can save himself without help, the defendant must pay the damages asked; but if he drown there will be nothing to pay."

This judgment, worthy of a Solomon, caused the listening judge to smile, and was employed by him in the actual case with the result that the one eyed man dropped his suit.

J. J. Nagel.

Dear Brother Huggins, Editor:

Enclosed you will find a letter written to me by one of our noble young Bereans. I wrote him asking him to write a piece on the draft theme for publication in our Berean Column, and this letter is what he sent in reply.

I am sending it to you to do with as you deem best. It seems good to me, and is a noble lesson of consecration of self, and wholly trusting in God. May it be a lasting inspiration to many.

Your sister in Christ, Mrs. May Moore.

The Brother's Letter to Sister Moore

Dear Sister in Christ:

You refer to the draft theme in you letter. To tell you the truth, I forget all about my draft trouble, unless someone or something recalls it to me. I have taken my stand, and whatever happens I consider the matter settled. I do not know what the Father in heaven intends to do with me, what he proposes to accomplish through me, or what affliction it might be his will that I shall suffer; but I have said with all my heart, "Thy will be done." You know he has said, "I will give you peace." He has done that for me, and I worry not at all. My chief concern is with myself, in trying to live in all good conscience toward God. So my prayer to him is something like this:

Our heavenly Father, I thank thee for thy mercy, love, and truth. Thou hast said a strong nation is as nothing to thee. Oh, how great is thy mercy, how wonderful thy love, to notice me —just one of the millions upon millions of thy creatures in the world. If a strong nation is as nothing to thee, what canst thou see in me; that thou shouldst heap such bountiful gifts of thy mercy and love upon me, who am not worthy of thy notice. I can say with thy servants of old, "surely thy ways are past finding out." I thank thee for thy glorious truth, for thy bountiful provision for my needs, "for all that I have thou hast given me," for the health and strength that I enjoy and for thy rich blessings in all things.

So heavenly Father, I come to thee, since thou hast stooped to notice me, praying that thou wilt forgive me my wickedness and all sin and unrighteousness that I have committed this day or in the past, because of my weakness. Blot them out from before thee; remember them no more, for except thou forgive me I am lost. I pray that thou wilt give me strength to overcome my weakness and to resist the wiles and temptations that come into my life from day to day. Purify my mind and heart and strengthen me to do thy will in all things. Help me to be worthy to stand before the righteous judge in that day. Help me to be all thou wouldst have me be. Help me to be a fruitful and profitable servant unto thee, and not a shame and abomination in thy sight. Grant me, heavenly Father, ability to present thy truth to others that they may know thy will also, and will believe and accept thy dear Son as their Savior, that his bride may soon be completed; that he will come soon and set up his glorious kingdom. Guide and direct my way in all truth. Lead me in the narrow way and finally in thy kingdom accept of me, is my prayer.

You may think from the above prayer that I pray all for myself and for myself first. The latter is true. I do not feel qualified to pray for others till I have gotten my self right with God first. I feel that after I have thanked him for his gracious goodness to me, asked him to forgive me after confessing my faults and admitting my dependence upon him, that he will hear my prayer for others. So I continue my prayer thus:

Heavenly Father, be with all the brethren and sisters throughout the whole world. Forgive them their misgivings, guide and direct them in righteousness and truth, supply their needs in all things, as thou knowest their needs, for thou knowest their needs better tha I. Thou knowest all things. Grant, Father, that we will all be of one mind in the truth, and finally in thy coming kingdom save us. Guide and direct the rulers and those in authority to the end that thy people may live in peace and quiet with all men. In the name of thy dear Son our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. Amen.

Your brother in the one faith,

Russell Zeller.

"A man climbing a hill, though he has to look to his feet when in the slippery places and all his energies are expended in hauling himself upward by every projection and crag, will do all the better if he lifts his eye often to the summit that gleams above him. So we, in our upward course, shall make the best progress when we consciously and honestly try to look beyond the things seen and temporal, even while we are working in the midst of them, and to keep clear before us the summit to which our faith tends."—Alexander Maclaren.

THE FELLOW HELPERS' SOCIETY

"Moses' hands were heavy; and they took a stone and put it under him, and he sat thereon; and Aaron and Hur stayed up his hands, the one on the one side and the other on the other side; and his hands were steady until the going down of the sun. And Joshua discomfited Amalek and his people with the edge of the sword" (Ex. 17:12,13).

Moses, as leader, felt the burden of his people drag on his shoulders. One stood by this mighty man and watched him judge those Israelites from the morning till the evening. This is the counsel that was given before that guest departed: "The thing that thou doest is not good. Thou wilt surely wear away, both thou and this people that is with thee; for this thing is too heavy for thee; thou art not able to perform it thyself alone. Thou shalt provide able men . . . . . so shall it be easier for thyself and they shall bear the burden with thee" (Ex. 18:17,18,22). It was not suggested that Moses have help to become slack in his own work; far from it. But to him thus was given more time for the weightier matters, those bigger problems for which he was peculiarly fitted.

Just about two years ago an auxiliary society of the Church of God at Cleveland was formed under the guidance of our Brother Huggins who framed up the governing rules. It was a call particularily to the senior church-members as a means by which their usefulness and diligence in the Lord's work could be consciously carried out. Eleven charter members gladly signed their names to the following.

Basis of The Fellow Helpers

Any senior member of the Church of God may become a member of the Fellow Helpers (Ezra 5:2; Acts 18:27 Rom. 16:2; 1 Cor. 12:28; 16:16; 2 Cor. 1:11,24; 8:23; Col. 4:10,11; 3 John 8), which is an auxiliary society of the Church of God, by enrolling his name hereon, which constitutes an agreement on the signer's part that he will submit himself (or herself) to "every one that helpeth with us and laboreth" (1 Cor. 16:16) in doing the threefold work now indicated, to wit:

1. To read, study and search the Scripture (Isa. 34:16; John 5:39; Acts 17:11);
2. To teach the world the gospel at every opportunity (Phil. 2:15,16); and
3. To help the church in spiritualizing the carnal and making strong the weak in the faith (Rom. 14:1; Acts 20:35; Rom. 15:1; Thess. 6:14; Heb. 5:3; 11:34; Rev. 3:2).

A Chairman shall be elected annually, whose duty shall be to give out notices of all meetings, open, preside during, and close all meetings of the Fellow Helpers.

A Secretary shall be elected annually, whose duty shall be to keep a list of all members of Fellow Helpers, arrange leaders for meetings alphabetically, assign workers, etc.

Neither Chairman nor Secretary can be elected for two years in succession.

All meetings for Bible study shall be opened by the Chairman at 8 P. M. and closed at 9 P. M. promptly.

The best part of it all was ours when we were given the name, "Fellow Helpers." Were there not fellow helpers who shared the joys and sorrows of Paul and the apostles? Read 3 John 1-8. Our numbers have grown; and there are now about twenty-five members who actively and enthusiastically take part in this work. Our meetings are held every third Friday evening. The business session is decidedly short and the Bible lesson one in which all freely join. In accordance with the Scriptures we are preparing ourselves to present the truth in a world where willing listeners are few and far between, by being wise, yet gentle; uncompromising, yet meek in our presentations.

With the authority that many years of service has brought, we are instructed in an organized method of teaching the first principles of the truth to friends not familiar with God's doctrines. Many interesting experiences have been shared in making friends of these strangers, and in ringing door bells with the idea and hope that a social call would result in one more addition to God's household. It is one of the aims of this society to so present the truth to interested pupils that they realize the error of their position; and what a blessing it is when they express their satisfaction in the simplicity of the word.

For the benefit of the Fellow Helpers and the Church of God who desire to teach the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, Brother Huggins has planned, in brief, a series of ten lessons, four of which have been amplified and published. Were you to ask us how a systematic study for ten weeks is rewarded, we should say that sixteen people have been added to the church since June, and are still growing in knowledge. The Fellow Helpers have been personally interested in these new members from the time their names were first suggested; and gladly responded when their assistance was needed.

In order to extend our usefulness we decided to obtain funds for the publishing of material in the form of tracts and Bible lessons. In six meetings the voluntary offerings amounted to thirty dollars, which has been used in the publication of lessons numbers III and IV of "Bible Lessons on First Principles"; and a tract entitled, "The Smoke of Their Torment," a splendid discussion of "everlasting" fire delivered one Sunday evening to the Cleveland brethren and friends. These have been printed in The Restitution. Have we stopped to realize how far reaching this statement is? Suppose there are fifteen hundred subscribers to that paper, and suppose further that two people read one subscription: the approximate number of readers mounts up to two thousand! One thousand copies each have been made of these lessons, and also the tract, so that the numbers of people within the reach of these Bible truths are about three thousand five hundred.

This sketch of our newly formed society has been made with the thought that it might aid others who are working in the various churches of God. Now to "every one that helpeth with us and laboreth" we want to say with Paul, "The grace of our Lord Jesus Christ be with you."

FRET NOT

By S. Roxana Wince

"Fret not because of evildoers." They are in the world, and only God's strong hand can purge them out. They will prosper for a time, and will bring their wicked devices to pass, but not for long. They have their portion only in this life. Nothing of all their riches, their vast estates, can be held beyond the grave, all must be given up.

"Be not envious against the workers of iniquity." There is no cause, even now, in this fearful harvest of the ages. They are being "cut down like the grass and are withering as the green herb." Never before has there been such pouring out of the vials of wrath, such reaping of "the clusters of the vine of the earth," such treading of God's great winepress, until "blood flows for the space of a thousand two hundred furlongs."

"Fret not." "Rest in the Lord and wait patiently for him," "The wicked have drawn out the sword and have bent their bow to cast down the poor and needy and to slay such as be of upright conversation." In a word, to eliminate God and his people from the world, but "their sword shall enter into their own heart and their bows shall be broken."

But "the salvation of the righteous is of the Lord; he is their strength in the time of trouble. And the Lord shall keep them and deliver them: he shall deliver them from the wicked and save them because they trust in him." "For the righteous shall inherit the land and dwell therein forever." The dominion of the earth will never fall into the hands of the Kaiser of Germany; fret not. God is at the helm. The end of this war will turn out for his glory. For "the transgressors shall be destroyed together; the end of the wicked shall be cut off." The Lord "will not lie unto David; his seed wil be established forever, and his throne be built up to all generations."

Either say nothing of the absent, or speak like a friend.

Riches serve a wise man, but govern a fool.

Mrs. Emma E. Perrine

Mrs. Emma Elizabeth Perrine, aged 53, died at the Deaconess hospital Nov. 26. She was the wife of E. W. Perrine. They were married 34 years, residing the last four years on a farm near Chelan. Her husband and four children, Leroy W., Mrs. Francis Smith, Florence Ethel and Millard Walter, survive. She was taken to the hospital for an operation, but contracted pneumonia, which caused her death. Three brothers reside in North Dakota and Iowa. The funeral will be held tomorrow at 2 o'clock in the chapel of the undertaking establishment of Hall and Templeton. Brother Schell officiating. She was baptized in the faith of the gospel by Elder D. T. Halstead in 1885 at Andover, S. Dakota; thereby becoming a member of the church of God, and she ever after remained a consistent member thereof. Beloved by all with whom she came in contact, because of her helpfulness in sickness and works of charity, she was followed to her last resting place by her many friends and loved ones in hope of a glorious resurrection when Jesus comes.

Christmas in the Heart

The earth has grown old with its burden of care,
But at Christmas it always is young.
The fire of contentment burns lustrous and fair,
And goodwill and happiness fill all the air,
When the song of Christmas is sung.

My position has come to this: Am I living near my Savior ? Then I am as happy as the day is long and as light hearted as a child. It may be I have plenty of annoyances, but they do not trouble me when his presence is with me. Am I down cast and worried ? Then I am away from God.—Mackenzie.

Charles Dickens' Resolution

"I will honor Christmas in my heart, and try to keep it all the year; I will live in the past, the present and the future. The spirits of all three shall strive within me. I will not shut out the lessons that they teach."

The Spirit of Christmas

Oh, Savior, whom this holy morn
Gave to our world below;
To mortal want and labor born,
And more than mortal woe.

Incarnate word! by every grief,
By each temptation tried,
Who lived to yield our ill's relief,
And to redeem us, died.

If gaily clothed and proudly fed,
In dangerous wealth we dwell;
Remind us of thy manger bed
And lowly cottage cell,

If pressed by poverty severe
In envious want we pine,
Oh, may thy spirit whisper near,
How poor a lot was thine!

Though fickle fortune's various scene
From sin preserve us free!
Like us thou hast a mourner been—
May we rejoice with thee.—Heber.

What We Celebrate

In refusing to observe days, times, or seasons, we obey the dictates of the Scriptures; we obey the commands of God. Under the old dispensation such observance was proper, but Jesus, having fulfilled the law, we are no longer under it. Today we live under grace, the love of God as portrayed in the person of his Son. The Son who was obedient in all things, perfect in all things; he was holy, just, and good; and it is through our faith in Jesus as being the Christ the Son of God that we have hope of the life everlasting—not through our works, sacrifice or observance of days.

In celebrating Christmas we do not celebrate a day, but an event: the birth of our Savior, Jesus our Lord, the date of whose birth is not known—the year even being in doubt. Among those who have given this matter the most study it generally is thought that Jesus was born in February, 4 B. C., although there are enough claims to cover every month of the year. And at different periods of the world's history different dates have been set apart and celebrated, the present date, Dec. 25, having been agreed upon as a sort of compromise about the middle of the fourth century; but although the date is in doubt, the fact is not. We know that Jesus was born; that he was born according to divine plan and by divine power, that during his life he was tempted in all things, yet without sin; and that on account of sin not having lodgment in him he became our sacrifice; for we read that if we are in him then is he to us "wisdom and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption." While we would rejoice to know the exact date of our Savior's birth, the thought that it is not known causes no concern. We praise the ever living God that we have been made acquainted with the fact that Jesus lives; that he is our advocate, our friend; and this fact we celebrate every day of the year, not on Dec. 25th only. Every day, yes, but at this season we give it a little special significance, but only because when the world thinks, the heart of the world is softened, and perhaps we can make a deeper impression.

Success

A writer in a recent article in one of our young people's papers says, quoting from Mr. George Cushing: "Because it is the first requisite of business success, moral training is the most valuable of all training."

It may seem hard sometimes to you young people, so full of life and gaiety, to be held down closely to Bible lessons, to family prayer, to church going and to Sunday School; but it is the making of you, as steel is toughened in the fire. For as truly as you live "the fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." You may have the finest education in other lines that can possibly be secured, but if you lack moral training, the stern discipline that gives to your character an integrity that cannot be shaken, an honesty that cannot be moved away from the Rock foundation of God-given law, your education will leave you irresponsible, undependable, unfit for business, without continuity, without stamnia and, lacking these you will lose in the game, because it is out of the question for selfishness, dishonesty, and lying to win.

Repeat the text, "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom."

The stealers of 1917 will not be trusted in 1918. Those who measure short now will not sell by and by. When we are cheated once we do not go back. How foolish to say we cannot be honest and prosper in business! It is just the other way: we cannot prosper in business and not be honest.

Nor can we live only to be amused; to see, to eat, to dance, and hope to be successful when the real business of life begins. The great men of the world are not made that way. Moses was not brought up in a dance hall, nor was Paul educated in a picture show.

So don't run away from religious teaching; don't slip the trace chains. Abide the discipline, seek the true wisdom, make friends with God; set your feet in the footsteps of Jesus. It is the only sure road to peace and prosperity here; the only road to the endless life that is to come.

Spanish Proverbs

Against God's wrath no house is strong.

To a hungry man no bread is bad.

Nothing is strong against death.

A good man finds his native soil in every country.

The tongue touches the tooth that aches.

To mad words lend deaf ears.

He preaches well who lives well.

A good heart conquers ill fortune.

Correct one who is in fault, and he will immediately hate you.

Buy what you do not want, and you will sell what you cannot spare.

THE BEGINNING OF SORROWS

Prophetic and Expository

Many times we hear or see the words of Matt. 24:6,7 quoted as referring to the present times. The speaker there is the Son of Man, the Christ. He says: "And ye shall hear of wars and rumors of wars: see that ye be not troubled: for all must come to pass, but the end is not yet. For nation shall rise against nation, and kingdom against kingdom: and there shall be famines, and pestilences, and earthquakes, in divers places. All these are the beginning of sorrows."

In the context we find that Jesus had been warning the people and his disciples against the example of the scribes and pharisees, openly condemning their corruption and hypocrisy, calling them "serpents and vipers." To these bitter denunciations he adds that "All the righteous blood shed upon earth, from the blood of righteous Abel unto the blood of Zacharius, shall come upon this generation." This sentence is a key to the whole 24th chapter. The judgment impending upon that generation was in accord with the declaration of Exodus 20:5. "Visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children"—when they follow the father's example. At the same time he is witholding his judgment of the guilty until they have passed a point where mercy and long-suffering would be good for them, being beyond hope of reformation or repentance (Gen. 15:15,16).

God had, by his Son, shown "that generation" the greatest, the most wonderful manifestation of his love and his power in miracles and signs, but as a people they refused to receive him as the Son and heir. Even God's great love could afford nothing more and, the time of his mercy being past, he allows his judgments to fall, as long predicted by the prophets (Deut. 6:13-15; 11:17). "Behold, your house (temple) is left unto you desolate"—yes, deserted by God who could not dwell in a temple, which the people had both dishonored and profaned. Jesus quoted the Scripture words to them, saying, "My house is a house of prayer, and ye have made it a den of thieves" (Matt. 21:13). "And when he was come into the temple the chief priests and the elders of the people came unto him as he was teaching, and said: By what authority doest thou these things and who gave the this authority?" (Matt. 21:14). John records that "he came unto his own (his people), and his own received him not." Luke repeats Jesus' parable of the Nobleman about to depart and go into "a far country" to receive for himself a kingdom. Before he went to the "far country" from whence he will come in kingly power and glory, he told the Jews that they should see him no more until they shall say, "Blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord"—that name by which he had been doing his miracles and signs.

Jesus departs from the temple, as seen by verse 1 of Matt. 24, and the disciples call his attention to its beauty and adornments as well as its strength and solidity. It looked to be permanent, but he tells them that not one stone shall remain standing upon another. Read the prophecy of this same thing found in 1 Kings 9:7-9.

The wonder and astonishment of the disciples must have been great, for they sieze the first opportunity to enquire into the matter. They say: "Tell us when shall these things be, and what the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world" (age or dispensation).

Here are several things combined in one question: first, the time when these things of which he had been speaking—wars, pestilences, famines, earthquakes, persecutions, and imprisonments—and (many times overlooked in the study of this chapter) the "gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come." What end? Why manifestly "the end" about which they had asked, the end of that age or dispensation. Jesus had declared that the generation then living was to suffer the penalties of all the sins of their fathers, who slew the martyrs; and now he tells his disciples that they will be among the martyrs of all generation

But these things were not all that they wanted to know. These were but "the beginning of sorrows" for the people and nation. In verses 4 to 14 inclusive, Jesus tells of things which should come to pass. There were false christs, or pretenders who would seize the popular view of a Messiah and try to establish himself as a Jewish king—exactly suiting the popular desire to throw off the Roman yoke. Yes, and wars and rumors, political disturbances, "but the end is not yet," as he tells them in the 6th verse, that is not immediate. Like a summer thunder-storm, the approach of the great national crisis could be felt and its rumbling thunders heard a long time before it should break upon them in all its fury. "Then" (in those troubled times) shall they deliver you up to be afflicted, and shall kill you." These things took time to accomplish, and so the nation filled up the measure of their sin of unbelief and wickedness. All these things were visited "upon that generation," and the 14th verse brings us down to the time when, owing to the flight of disciples of the first generation of Christians, the gospel was preached to "every nation." The persecuted church of Jerusalem and all Judea were scattered to all parts of the known world, and so carried the glad tidings of the kingdom with them. Paul tells the Roman brethren that "their sound went into all the earth, and their words unto the ends of the world." Read Romans 10:17, 18; Col. 1:6,23 and see how far this, which Jesus had commissioned his disciples to do, had actually been done in Paul's and Peter's life time, within twenty years in fact, of the crucifixion of Christ.

Now, when this had been accomplished, Jesus had added, "Then cometh the end." The end of the age came after the things he had predicted were accomplished, and in the way he said it would. Daniel, a prophet of God, had foretold the same events (Dan. 9:27), and Jesus refers to him in Luke 21:20,21, giving additional facts, as of armies encompassing Jerusalem. Luke here tells us that "the times of the Gentiles" is about to begin, which means the same as the ending of "Jewish times." In fact, "Gentiles" had been increasing in power with God just in the same proportion as all Israel had been diminished and, tribe by tribe, departed out of the land of their fathers. Now upon the remaining tribes, Judah and little Benjamin, came the final crisis for the rejection of God's own Son, and the gospel offers of reconciliation. And so the Jewish age ends amid scenes of great tribulation such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no, nor ever shall be. These are the words of him who wept over Jerusalem and for the woes which he knew were coming upon her. He accuses her thus: "Thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them that are sent unto thee"—as they did Stephen and Paul. So their beautiful temple was to be completely obliterated from the earth, not one stone left upon another, and the city trodden down of the Gentiles until the end of Gentile times.

So great is the tribulation which falls upon Jerusalem that none would have been left alive "except the Lord had shortened those days." And this he does "for the elect's sake." The chosen and faithful witnesses were so few as to be likened to Lot and his family in Sodom, but were held in loving remembrance and warned to flee before Jerusalem was "compassed with armies."

But these were not deceived as to the events, having the warning of Jesus that these things did not portend his immediate return. They might have been excused if they had embraced the popular view that if the existing Roman government fell the Messiah's dominion, and Jewish power and glory as a nation would at once follow. But he told them not to believe such reports. How were they to know who to believe then? If reports came that he was here or there in the desert or "secret chamber," what then? The 27th verse puts all such questions at rest. His coming would be so manifested that it could not be doubted. It would be like the "lighning." It would be like brightness in the darkness of thick clouds. It would be sudden, like the flash in the heavens. The rushing winds of political storms and the thunderous rumbling of crumbling dynasties and governments would show his presence and mark his return. And from east to west, over the whole habitable world the grand intelligence would be flashed. The Lord's power to communicate with the distant parts will not be less than that of man and his wireless telegraph.

Read Luke 17:24-37, for he tells the same events that Matthew records, and in some particulars other details are added. He refers more clearly to the last days of Gentile times "when the Son of Man is revealed." He warns all to be ready for that time. Whether on the house top, taking their ease, or in the fields at labor, they were to "be ready." Ordinary cares, and even duties, not to be excuses. Two may be in one bed and one taken and the other left; or two grinding with the hand-mill, and the same occur. If these things referred to the time when the Roman armies compassed the city and the city and temple fell, there seems to be difficulty about understanding. But if it refers to the future and lightning-like coming, when the living shall be changed in the twinkling of an eye (1 Thess. 4:17), and caught away to meet the Lord in the air, we find everything clear.

The eagles do not have to shown where a body lies. With sharp eyes and an unerring instinct they start for that place. As they soar high above the earth and one of them discovers a body or carcase, he starts immediately for it, and all the other birds of his kind for miles around instantly note the direction and manner of his flight and they know what he is after, and start for the same place. So they flock from east and west, north and south, to the point of common interest and attraction. In this manner Jesus explains to them the gathering of his saints together at his coming. They would understand the comparison much more readily than we, for large birds of the vulture and eagle type were more common, and their ways were familiarly known and understood.

So he tells them by a familiar illustration that those "taken" will be gathered at the point of common interest—coming with an unerring guiding sense, like the instinct implanted in the birds by the Creator, which never fails (Job. 39:29). This is the time, yet future, which the Psalmist speaks of: "He shall call to the heavens from above, and to the earth, that he may judge his people. Gather my saints unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice" (Psa. 50:4,5). "And they shall come from the east and west, and north and south, and shall sit down with Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob in the kingdom."

Shall we say that verse 29 belongs to the generation living at the destruction of Jerusalem and the co-incident tribulations, or does it apply to the last generation of Gentile times now upon us? Many believe that the latter time is referred to, and that these references to "sun" and "moon" being darkened and "stars" falling, are literal. Such will point to certain eclipes and "star showers" during the past seventy-five or hundred years as verifying the view. We find similar language used in the threatenings of judgments which befell great Babylon in Isaiah 13:9,10; 24:20-23. And again in Ezek 32:7-10 we find almost identical language used towards Egypt. Do we think of these as having had literal fulfilments? If so, history would have so recorded them, but as they were plainly intended in a figurative or metaphoric sense, and as the passage in Matthew 24 makes good sense and may be reasonably understood in that same way, we ought to so take it. So understood, the context sheds light upon the meaning and suggests the interpretation.

Sun and moon are figures representing imperial power and ecclesiastical authority, as they were personified and headed up in Roman emperors and Jewish high priests. Both were "eclipsed" and their glory dimmed. Their Prince and officers were fittingly compared to "stars," and these all "fell" from their exalted positions in the political "heavens." History will repeat itself.

But in the "new heaven" and the "new earth" there will be other stars whose brightness shall never be dimmed. (Dan. 12:3). Verse 30 is a clear reference to the prophecy of Daniel (chap 7:13, 14). We have seen in the sudden downfall of the Russian Imperial government with what astounding swiftnes the Lord's work may be accomplished in overthrowing the existing forms of government. Who knows what will transpire next? Will it be the sounding of that trumpet call as recorded in verse 31? "Gather my saints unto me," as in Psa. 50:5? Probably Dan. 7:18 is due to happen next.

MONK'S AMAZING PROPHECY ABOUT THE CLOSE OF THE WAR

Dear Editor and Brother in Christ:

I herewith enclose article, "Monk's Amazing Prophecy of War: Predicts Peace Before Christmas." This article was taken from a paper called "The Great Divide," published in Denver, Colorado. Will you please read it and comment on it through The Restitution. Others as well as myself would like your opinion on the article. Yours of the one faith, Mrs. Mary E. Leroy.

London, England.—While razing the old Monastery of the Holy Ghost in Wismar, Mecklenberg, two months ago, an old Bible was found which contained a remarkable prophecy regarding the present world war. It was written in 1701 by one of the monks on parchment that is now yellow and seared with age. It is now on exhibition in a glass case in the city hall of Wismar. So much publicity has been given to the prophecy in the papers of Germany that thousands have flocked to Wismar to see it.

The prophecy not only gives the cause of the war, but also indicates the countries engaged. Up to the present it has been amazingly accurate. It does not exactly state that Germany will be victorious, but indicates how long the war will last, when the decisive battle will be fought, and where and when peace will come, and adds that Germany will continue to exist as a power for many years. A translation of the writing on the parchment is as follows:

"Lord, have mercy on thy people despite the fact that they are turning more and more away from thee; that they are destroying thy monasteries and cloisters and forgetting thee. A time will come in Europe when these people will feel the weight of thy hand, when malignity and hatred will rule. It will be at a time when the papal seat will be vacant, and the conflagration will come is the result of the murder of a prince. Seven nations will rise against the eagle with one head and the eagle with two heads.

"The birds will defend themselves furiously and viciously with their talons, and their wings will protect their peoples. A prince from their very midst, a sovereign who mounts his horse from the wrong side, will be encompassed by a wall of enemies. His slogan will be 'Onward with God.' The Almighty God will lead him from victory to victory, and many will meet their death.

Autos and Aeros Foretold

"There will be wagons without horses and fiery dragons will fly through the air dropping fire and sulphur and destroying cities and villages. The people will turn to God. This terrible war will last three years and five months. The time will come when food can neither be sold nor bought and bread will be carefully distributed. The seas will be tinged with blood and men will lie in wait under the waves for their prey."

Here follows a reference to America, which was in those times often referred to as the "country of the seven stars:"

"The people of the seven stars will attack the ring of steel and suddenly fall upon the bearded nation in the rear and rend it in twain. The whole of the lower Rhine will tremble, but nevertheless will endure to the end.

"The land in the west will be one vast desolation and the land in the ocean will, with its king, be crushed and suffer all the pangs of hunger. The land of the bearded people will still endure for a long time to come, and following the world will be united in one great brotherhood.

Peace by Christmas

"The victors will carry a cross and between four small cities and four steeples of equal height the decisive battle will be fought. Between two linden trees the victor will fall upon his knees before his army, lift his hands to heaven and thank God; following this all ungodliness will disappear; the indecent dances that prevailed before the war will be seen no more, and God will reign in church, state, and family.

"The war will commence when the grain is ripening and will reach its height when the cherries bloom for the third time. Peace will be consummated by the prince in time for the Christmas mass."

All German newspapers have commented on this amazing prophecy.

"It is remarkable," says one paper, "how accurately this monk has predicted events as they have thus far occurred. We sincerely hope that the longed-for peace will come, as he says, in order that we may all breathe freely again.

Editor's Reply

The so-called "prophecy" is a Catholic production, and is one of the many schemes the papacy is working to advertise itself. Catholics never lose an opportunity to play to the galleries. They love publicity, and if they cannot get into the press any other way they will start some tale about a monk, or shin bone, or something. Do not take newspapers, where they dabble in religion, seriously. We must look to Jerusalem for prophecy, not Wismar; to God, not Catholic monks.

Fuzzy Summer "Snowstorm."

The peculiar phenomenon of a "snowstorm" raging while a brilliant summer sun shone, was witnessed at Hood River, Ore., recently. Instead of snowflakes falling, however, the air was filled with millions of particles of white fuzz that forms on the blossoms of cottonwood trees that grow in large groves along the Columbia River lowlands. The fluffy down filled storerooms and offices and adhering to the nap of clothes gave the wearer the appearance of having been in a snowstorm.

If virtue is its own reward, why advertise it.

OUT OF CHRIST

"A person that does not believe that eternal life is bestowed upon the righteous at the judgment seat, is out of Christ." These words were used by a speaker I heard give a lecture not long since. The speaker said he was sure of his position, because he had read the Bible through and intimated that he had a superior knowledge of the Scriptures. We will grant that he has a superior knowledge of the Scriptures, but in this instance we are sure that he is wrong.

In Mark 16:15,16 it reads, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." Therefore it is necessary to believe the gospel, or good news of the kingdom and be baptized in order to be in Christ. In Eph. 2:12, we read: "At that time ye were without Christ, being aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world." Nothing said here about not believing in eternal life obtained at the judgment seat and therefore out of Christ.

A number of years ago many of the brethren changed their views in regard to when the saints would receive eternal life, and perhaps the speaker referred to was one of them. They decided that eternal life would be bestowed at the judgment seat, instead of when they emerge from the grave. When did these brethren get into Christ? When they believed in the covenants of promise and the gospel of the kingdom of God and were baptized, or when they changed their minds in regard to the time when eternal life would be bestowed ? Having been believers in the gospel of the kingdom, they got into Christ when they were baptized; and because a brother could not see that eternal life was bestowed at the judgment seat, did not get him out of Christ then, nor does it now.

In Acts 2:38,41 we read: "Then Peter said unto them, Repent and be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins; and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Spirit." "Then they that gladly received his word were baptized; and the same day there were added unto them about three thousand souls." There could have been no examination to find out how much or how little the candidates knew in regard to the details of the resurrection, but were at once accepted into fellowship, as we learn in the 42 verse.

When Philip baptized the Eunuch there is no record of an examination as to how much the Eunuch knew of the gospel. Likewise with the Phillipian failor. We can only conclude that it is not necessary to understand the entire plan of the ages in order to be in Christ.

After baptism we are to grow in knowledge, and if it was necessary to know it all at baptism, there would be no possibility of growth. No doubt during the apostolic period instruction and advise were given to candidates before baptism, and became more lengthy in time; but it is apparent that the apostles and their assistants advised the candidates more in regard to abstaining from the lusts of the flesh, and to keeping unspotted from the world than going into details of what are called "doctrinal subjects."

Christ walks in the midst of the churches now, or rather knows what is going on among them, and blesses or condemns according to the manner in which the ecclesias are conducted. It is no more of a miracle now than formerly to convert people to the truth. If the ecclesias would get into the apostolic practice of fellowship, it would be a great move in the right direction, and Christ's blessing would undoubtedly follow.

THE COMING KING

By Dr. Bernstein

"It shall be my purpose tonight to carry you back 25 hundred years into the past and show you the wonderful way in which the hand of God has written the history of this world in advance, for indeed prophecy is but history in advance, and history is prophecy fulfilled," said Dr. O. O. Bernstein as he opened his second lecture at Philharmony Hall last night. He continued: "This great image which stands before you tonight will serve to illustrate the meaning of the symbols used in the second chapter of Daniel which were interpreted to the heathen king as Babylon, Medo-Persia, Grecia, and Rome, the four universal empires of the world from 606 before Christ and extending to 480 A. D. The strange mixture of iron and clay in the toes of this image very accurately describe the characteristics of the divided state of the Roman Empire from the year 476 to the present hour.

Some of the Dreams

"Every student of history knows that there has been repeated attempts since the fall of the old Roman Empire to amalgamate the nations of Europe and of the whole world into one great universal empire. Notable among those who have had this fond dream are Charlemagne, Charles V., Louis XIV., and Napoleon Bonaparte, but all have failed; and if Kaiser Wilhelm today entertains any such idea, it will prove only a dream, for the God of heaven has declared 'they shall mingle themselves with the seed of men, but they shall not cleave one to another.'

"It is plain, however, from the word of God," said Mr. Bernstein, "that the nations which form the ten divisions of the Roman Empire would still exist down to the end of this world's history, for, declared the greatest premier of which we have any record, Daniel the prophet, 'In the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed.'

Babylon Once Ruled

"While it is interesting to know from the standpoint of a historian, that Babylon had at one time ruled the world and was succeeded by the Medes and the Persians, who were overthrown by the Grecians, and that the iron hand of Rome held universal sway, but of infinitely more importance is the knowledge that the God of heaven shall, with his own hand, set up a universal kingdom which shall last for ever. This will be the fifth and the last universal kingdom of the world."

In closing this most interesting lecture, Dr. Bernstein made an earnest appeal to his large audience who were held spell-bound throughout, to prepare for citizenship in God's everlasting kingdom.—E. F. Randolph.

THE MULTITUDENIOUS SON OF MAN GLORIFIED

No. 2

Sermon Notes by the Editor on the Apocalypse

And his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; and his voice as the sound of many waters. And he had in his right hand seven stars; and out of his mouth went a twoedged sword: and his countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength (Rev. 1:15,16).

I. His Brass Feet

1. Import of feet: to tread upon and destroy (Rev. 14:19,20; Psa. 18:32-39; Mal. 4).
2. As the "feet" of the "Son of Man" the saints will execute judgment (Psa. 58:11; 75:10; 76:12; 149:6-10).
3. Meaning of brass in symbol: the saints (Ex. 17:15; Numb. 31:22; 16:37; Ex. 29:12; Hab. 3:3-6; 1 Cor. 9:13; 10:18; Heb. 13:10,12).

II. They Glow as if They Burned in a Furnace

1. The furnace in which they glow: "the wilderness of the people" (Ezek. 20:33-38; Mal. 3:2; Jer. 30:7; Mal. 4:1; Mi. 4:13; Ezek. 1:7; Mi. 5:8; Zech. 12:6; Rev. 2:26,27).

III. His Voice Sounds Like Many Waters

1. The voice of a great multitude (Rev. 17:15; Dan. 10:6; Ezek. 1:24; Rev. 7:9; Isa. 18:3; 27:12,13; Zech. 9: 14,15).

IV. The Twoedged Sword of His Mouth

1. Symbolic "mouth" bespeaks the decree of war from the Commander-in Chief; the "twoedged sword" the two effects—conversion or destruction (Gen. 45:21; Numb. 3:16; Heb. 4:12; 2 Thess. 2:8; Hos. 6:5; Rev. 2:12,16; 19:11-16).

V. His Whole Aspect as the Sun

1. By "his countenance" John means the whole aspect of the "Son of Man" which he has just described in detail.
2. The divine glory of this multitudenious "Man" is first hidden; "as the sun shineth in his strength," the finale (Heb. 3:4; Zech. 14:6,7; 2 Pet. 1:16; Isa. 24:23; Col. 3:4; 1 John 3:2; Rev. 3:21; Matt. 13:13 43; Psa. 19:5, Judges 5:31).

The trouble about a bare-faced fib is that it frequently circulates until it becomes a bald-header lie.

Working With Him

Dear Bereans:

In addressing you, I am going to use the Scripture found in 2 Cor. 6:1-10. The first verse reads: "We then as workers together with him, beseech you also that ye receive not the grace of God in vain."

I hope we all realize that we are banded together for work. There are so many ways for work it seems to me we should all keep busy. We are all fitted for some special work. Some can expound, some can exhort, some can sing, some have a peculiar gift ministering to the needs of others. The time would almost fail to tell of the many talents and places and opportunities to use them.

It is not a question of talent: it is a question of using what we have. Let each of us ask ourselves if we are working our talents, not to the limit but at all. We must remember Jesus is going to reckon with us some day not far in the future, and I wonder how our records will stand. Let us vow that we are going to consecrate our lives and our talents to the service of the Master. Let each of us urge those that have the talent for making money to use it for the best advantage, and create a fund that will help to put every talent to work. Our Evangelists need help in many different ways. The question is what can we do for them. This would be a good subject for discussion.

In order for us to make our work efficient we must have a system whereby everyone can work. We must also remember that our text says, "we are workers together with him." Jesus is our co-worker, and if we work, how can we fail ? The only way would be to "lay down on the job," as it were. We cannot always wait for someone to plan work for us; we must think out something for ourselves; and when thought out put it into execution. Every worker must have an incentive, and ours is two-fold to save ourseles and others. Should there be anything too high for us to surmount to accomplish this end.

In the second verse Paul says: "For he saith, I have heard thee in a time accepted, and in a day of salvation have I succored thee. Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation." If God has accepted us we should be anxious to have others hear, and as the time seems short, it should spur us to the greater activities and cause us to hasten this message to others.

"Giving no offense in anything, that the ministry be not blamed." Our conduct should be such that it will help instead of retard the work of the ministry. In fact, we are all ministers in a way, and our work has to be approved; and how can this be done ? Let Paul tell, "In much patience." Now if we lack patience we are not approving ourselves. Let us learn then to be patient. Next, "In affliction, in necessities, in distresses, in imprisonments, in tumults, in labors, in watch-long-suffering, by kindness, by the Holy Spirit, by love unfeigned, by the word of truth, by the power of God, by the armor of righteousness on the right hand and on the left, by honor and dishonor, by evil report and good report: as deceivers, and yto true, as unknown, and yet well known; as dying, and behold, we live; as chastened, and not killed; as sorrowful, yet always rejoicing; as poor, yet making many rich; as having nothing, and yet possessing all thoings."

Enough of the above falls to the lot of every individual life to prove their steadfastness in the faith. It would make my article too long to comment on all the items in the above Scripture, so let the reader make his own application. Now let us work together as never before, and may we be able at the end of the year to report a greater work and better results than ever before.

Your sister in the work, Ethel Hargleroad.

What of Our Sacrifice ?

The principle involved in making of sacrifices, although manifest in various ways, seems to be of great importance in the working out of the plans and purposes of God as revealed in the Scriptures. It is our lot to live in a day when enormous sacrifices are being made, both by the individual and the powers or kingdoms of the world. We cannot question the zeal of some, at least, who are coming forth with their offerings, but when the searchlight of truth is turned on, we discover it is not a zeal according to the apostle Paul's standard of knowledge (Rom 10:2,3). It is important for us to know that any sacrifice made at random without giving heed to the revealed will of God, will avail us nothing, however zealous and sincere our efforts may be. This is a fundamental truth the world cannot understand, but those called according to the purpoe of God shall understand.

Let us turn to Bible history for examples of sacrifice. In the first place, Adam and Eve sought to make a covering for themselves of fig leaves, but God made a sacrifice of animal life to provide skins as a covering for them, pointing to the blood-sacrifice to be made four thousand years future, when God was to give his only begotten Son to put an end to the offering of blood-sacrifices for the covering of sin. Abel's offering pointed to the same Lamb to be offered as a final sacrifice. Cain may have been as earnest and sincere as any one could be, but his sacrifice shows he was not working in harmony with God's plans. Abraham's willingness to sacrifice his son Isaac, shows he understood and believed God.

God wisely designed that man should know what sin and its consequences are through experience that he might flee from it and rejoice in righteousness. In Noah's day man refused to do this, and his wickedness was so great that God repented that he made him. Only Noah found grace in the eyes of the Lord. We can imagine the sacrifice and faith of Noah in working one hundred and twenty years building an ark, typical of Christ, the great ark of safety in the consummation of God's plans. Like Abraham, Noah's belief and obedience were accounted to him for righteousness. Today the standard of righteousness is hollow formalism of ethics, and mere teachings of sociology, which leave the craving of the soul for God unsatisfied.

Looking further, we find that Ham did not seek to cover the nakedness of his father, and was cursed of God. Shem and Japheth sought to cover the temporary sin of their father, recognizing that God would eventually offer a sin covering name in mercy and love. Shem, the progenitor of the Jews, was blessed of God. Japheth, of the Gentiles, was to be enlarged and dwell in the tents of Shem. Cornelius was the first Gentile to dwell in the tents of Shem by believing the gospel, thereby becoming the seed of Abraham through Christ. In the restitution age nations who refuse to dwell in the tents of Shem shall be dastroyed.

What then, of our sacrifice in these closing days of the Gentile dispensation ? First, we must understand the plan and purpose of God in creating man and the earth. Through his angels and holy men of God were these plans given to man as recorded in the Bible, a book that God has preserved and made accessible to the poorest of the land. The truth, though, is hidden to those who do not seek it in humility and a pure heart. Mere intellectuality and wisdom of this world are often barriers to an understanding of God's truths. They must be approached in a child-like confidence and trust. Let us choose wisely in our sacrifices in these last days of great world upheavals. Listen to what Paul wrote to the Corinthian brethren: "But I say that the things which the Gentiles sacrifice, they sacrifice to devils, and not to God" (1 Cor. 10:20). "To love the Lord is more than sacrifice" (Mark 12:33). "The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit; a broken and contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise" (Psa. 51:17). "Hath the Lord as great delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices as in obeying the voice of the Lord ? Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams" (1 Sam. 15:22).

J. E. Hammond.

Love Not the World

"Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him. For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world" (John 2:15,16).

Dear Bereans:

I have wondered how we have applied the above Scripture to ourselves. Have we consecrated our lives fully and freely to God ? Is there still some of the world retained in our hearts ? If so, the love of the Father is not in us, and so we are not as devoted as we should be, and our prospects for an entrance into the kingdom of God is not as prospective as it ought to be.

In contradistinction to the above Scripture, Jesus says "love the brethren." Now when we examine our hearts which one of the two do we find that predominates ?

Our every effort should be to conquer self and lose our love for the world and learn to love God, his truth, and his people. We can only do this by devoting our time to study and some kind of noble work. something that will keep us in mind, that we are working for God. This we can do in many ways.

But let us note first what John designates as the things of the world.

First, "The lust of the flesh." Of course John here means the desires that inhere in us as natural, worldly people. We can look back over our lives and see what our tendencies were when we were in the world, and then note whether those things are still with us. Our fleshly nature was lusting after worldly pleasures of different kinds and degrees. But now we should have lost all of that, and our greatest pleasure should be in mingling with those of like precious faith.

Second, "The lust of the eyes." The lust of the eyes was one thing that caused old mother Eve to fall. Yes, there are so many beautiful things, or we think they are, that we would like to see, unless we are very careful we will be drawn away. Things that look beautiful are very often deceptive. The things that are really beautiful to us are the things that are full of good.

Third, "The pride of life." Of the three items mentioned as belonging to the world this last one I suppose holds the greatest power over us young people. It is not only the pride that commonly belongs to the world, such as dress and love of finery. But our pride can be hurt in many ways. It is very often hard to be turned down by our former companions and to be looked upon as belonging to a small people; and the only way that we can overcome this is to learn that our companions in the truth are the very best quality and we are proud of them, so it ceases to hurt to be shunned by the unworthy. Now as we have lost our worldly desires let us look in every direction for something to do. The demand for laborers is so great that none of us need to be unemployed. All we need is the zeal and a strong desire to do something, and we will surely find something to do somewhere in God's vineyard.

I think I have learned for one a valuable lesson, and one I hope that will remain with me, and I cannot tell you of this lesson without being personal. I have gone through two or three meetings conductd by Brother Adams who led me from the darkness of orthodoxy to the glorious light of the truth.

First, I noted the earnestness he put in the work. That taught me that I must be in earnest in whatever I do to be effective. Again, I noticed the many duties that fell on him outside of preaching the word, and saw where we could all help lighten those burdens by doing our bit. And it created in me the desire to do something myself. I noticed again with all the labor he had to perform how wrong it was for us to have him coax us to do something. So I determined to lose my desire for the world and do something for the Master without having someone already over burdened with work to coax me to do what I ought to know was my duty to do. And again I thought how much added sorrow it must bring to these overworked proclaimers of the gospel to see us lax in our duties.

Then, dear young people, let us not forget this, but get together as often as possible and study and prepare ourselves for some special duty and help to hold up the hands of our brothers who are proclaiming the gospel to an unappreciative people, who, in these last days, are filled with the war spirit. If there ever was a time when our love for the world should be lost, it is now.

The spirit of the world is antagonistic to ours and of course runs counter. So if my little talk to you should result in causing one to decide to devote and consecrate his life to the work of the Master, I will think my efforts are not in vain. I wonder how many of us would be willing to pledge ourselves to make a sacrifice of the pleasures of the world and devote the rest of our time to the work in one way and another.

I for one am willing to make this sacrifice and to give my talent, whatever it may be, to the work. This can only be done by combined effort, and the same spirit must be in all; if not, our work can not be effective. I believe I am in the spirit of what I am writing, though young in faith and young in years. I am trusting it will meet with kindred spirits everywhere, and that we may soon see the love of the world eliminated from the church, and a general awakening to our duty made manifest.

Your sister in the one faith,

Maude Hargleroad.

PRE-ADAMITE ANGELS

Some five years ago I heard for the first time about pre-adamite men. The Bible Institute of Los Angeles sends out its preachers advocating this doctrine. They, too, find their principle argument for this teaching in the word "replenish," from "re," again, and "plene," full, in the God given injunction to Adam and Eve, "Replenish the earth."

But do words having this prefix always retain the original "again" signification ? I believe not. Let me mention some exceptions:

Five years ago the Nagel family removed to California from Iowa. We had never moved there before and so could not move there again. Milton writes of satan, "His words replete with guile," that is full, not full again of guile. How many resolutions do we resolve never resolved before. So of record, resound, etc.

May not "replenish" in Gen. 1:28 be so employed, agreeing with the definition given in dictionaries, in addition to the first, "to fill again," which is "to cause to abound." Might not a strong light be thrown upon this text if some Hebrew scholar would look up the original in which there probably is no troublesome prefix.

Brother Knapp surely makes a remarkably able argument showing that the dead since Adam's day are not the angels of our Bible. However, his conclusion drawn from this, introduced by the question, "Then where did the angels come from, and where did God create them ?" is, it seems to me, by no means so evident. His conclusion is that God must have used the pre-adamites to supply these angels. Surely this would only be true if God could create angels nowhere except on our earth, and who thinks of so limiting the Omnipotent ?

In concluding his interesting theme he exclaims, "What a glorious honor it will be to judge holy angels ?" Does he not lay himself open to the charge, not "of taking away from the words of this book," but to the one equally reprehensible of adding to them ? The Scriptures do indeed affirm, as he quotes, that the saints are to judge angels, but where do they say they shall judge holy angels ? His own article tells of another kind of angels—not holy. Is it not more likely the saints will judge, not God's holy angels, but rather the unholy, when the saints shall reign with Christ ?

J. J. Nagel.

SONG BOOK—NEW EDITION

Dear Restitution:

Our proposed new edition of the song book, which was announced in last week's paper, has brought gratifying results. One brother writes: "Just read The Restitution containing your proposal for a new song book. Put me down for one hundred dollars, or more if needed." This promptness and liberality shows the right kind of zeal. Another brother says, "Put me down for fifty." So you see a few earnest brethren like these will soon get out the new edition. Remember we are only asking for a loan, and when the books are sold, or as fast as they are sold, we will return the money.

This evening's paper tells of the fall of Jerusalem. The end can not be far away. Whatever we do we must do quickly. Are we working and watching as we should ? These certainly are interesting times, and I wonder if the church is fully awake and have a full understanding of what it means to her. Let no chance in doing good in church work go by. We hope to hear from enough of the brethren about the song book so we can begin work right away.. Your brother in the work,

Almus Adams.

OBITUARY

Margaret Orr

Margaret Orr, daughter of Alvin and Sallie McLeland, was born April 17, 1841, in Henry County, Indiana. She came to Clinton County with her parents when but four years old. Here she came to womanhood and was united in marriage to Nathan Orr September 19, 1858, and they became the parents of seven children, five sons and two daughters, two of the sons dying in infancy. This family were among the pioneers of the county and did their full share of the arduous work of converting the wilderness into a land of civilization filled with comfortable homes, free schools, and churches for the worship of God.

This worthy couple obeyed the gospel call two years after their marriage, and were baptized by Elder Hugh Barnhill, and have been active members of the Hillisburg Church God from its organization. They have been faithful, substantial supporters of the Lord's cause in giving of their time and means, the hospitality of their home, and their heart's love to the work of the church.

Sister Orr, faithful unto death, fell asleep in Jesus, at her home in Scircleville, Indiana, December 5, 1917, aged 76 years, 7 months, and 18 days. She leaves her aged companion, three sons, Austin, Lorenzo, and Clinton, and two daughters, Mrs. Etta Hatch, of Chicago, and Mrs. Ella Skinner, of Indianapolis. Also two brothers, one sister, ten grand-children, two great grand-children, and many other relatives.

Sister Orr was a student of the Bible, and knowing its teachings, sought to make her life a living example and model of the great principles of truth she had learned from its sacred pages. She saw in the events of our day the fulfilment of prophecy, and was looking with anxious expectancy for the coming of the Lord.

Funeral services were held at the home in Scirclevile, at 10 o'clock A. M. Friday, December 7, 1917. The house was filled with sympathetic friends and neighbors. We spoke words of comfort from 1 Thess. 4:13. Burial was made in St. Paul's cemetery near the old homestead in the country. Here th family took the last longing look at the loved one, and said goodby till Jesus comes.

BAPTIST GIVES UP BAPTISM

New York, Dec. 5.—Leading Baptists of New York city for the most part seemed willing yesterday to subscribe wholly or in part to the statement of John D. Rockefeller Jr., made at a Baptist mission dinner in the Hotel Majestic last night, that immersion ought not to be a requisite for membership in that church.

While a few were unwilling to recede from the position of the American Baptist Church with regard to baptism, all were in favor of Mr. Rockefeller's plea for greater unity among Protestant denominations.

Rev. Charles A. Eaton of the Madison Avenue Baptist Church and formerly of Cleveland, said he was fully in accord with Mr. Rockefeller's general proposition.—Plain Dealer.

Golden Text: Gal. 6:9,10

"If any provide not for his own, and especially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel" (1 Tim. 5:8).

The Result of Cheerfulness

Smile Awhile

And while you smile, another smiles,
And soon there's miles and miles of smiles—
And life's worth while because you smile.

Friends

"If you have one friend," said a philosopher, "think yourself happy. A man may have a thousand intimate acquaintances, and not a friend among them." And again he advises: "When once you profess yourself a friend, endeavor to be always such. He can never have any true friends, that will be often changing them."

Do You Know That

Being healthy is the first duty of a citizen?

Disease is the greatest foe to human progress?

It's the unsound body that deteriorates quickest?

Fly destruction is its own reward?

A walk in the open is worth two in the house?

Personal hygiene is the first requisite for community health?

A small mosquito is a dangerous thing?

Religious faith is intensified by means of public worship?

To know God ought to be a daily experience of his children?

A truism to be remembered: An age of doubt is uniformly followed by an age of faith?

A superficial procedure: To question the goodness of God on account of the world war.

A message from Ralph Waldo Emerson: "God is here and the quick soul feels his presence."

An Offer of Help

The other afternoon while walking along Broadway, New York, we noticed a crowd of people surrounding an automobile in which a man stood speaking. As we drew nearer we could hear what the man was saying: he was showing the difference between sin and righteousness, and he was inviting his hearers to turn from the one and to accept the other. The speaker likened man to an apple tree bearing bitter fruit that was of little or no value to any one. He said the tree could be trimmed; it could be pruned; the earth abouts its roots could be softened and fertilizer applied - all of which would improve the health also the general appearance of the tree; but the fruit would still be as bitter as ever. What the tree needed was to graft branches of a perfect tree into it.

So with man. We could cleanse him; we could clothe him; we could preach morality to him; and if he responded to the treatment he would be morally and physically benefitted; he also would look better; but like the apple to us, so he is to God: he still would have the bitter taste The only way man really can be improved is to have Christ grafted in. Man only can be saved from sin by allowing Jesus Christ to dwell within him; to accept his teaching; to follow in his footsteps; to believe his promises, and obey his commands.

When the meeting ended the helpers distributed cards, of which the following is a copy:

Do You Need A Friend?

The lack of impartial, friendly advice may stand between you and success. We are willing to be your friend, without any cost to you. Is your problem one of the following? Mark it, and either hand the card to us at close of meeting, or mail it to us, and we will arrange a private interview for you.

Health———— Marriage————
Habits———— Home———— Relation to God————
I will come (date)————
Name————
Address————

The talk and the card appealed to me; and I wondered if there were any readers of "The Restitution" in need of such a friend. If so, I imagine that Brother Huggins or any other of those brothers or sisters whose names appear at the head of the editorial page would only be too pleased to serve I know that I would. So if you have anything on your mind and feel that I can help you, let me know, and the matter will be given precedence over every other. God bless you.

Our Friend, Dr. William Brady

You have read regarding Dr. William Brady before, and from time to time you are going to read more from him, also concerning him. He is a real man; a doctor with a wonderful knowledge of the human frame. He bears such a reputation in the medical world that most of his time is taken up in instructing other doctors in the science of their profession. He also loves girls and boys: he loves them so deeply and so devoutly, that when he gives advice he speaks—or writes—with a direct plainess that all will understand just what he means. Read his answer to this 17 year old boy regarding the use of tobacco; and if you are a user of tobacco, or if you are thinking about becoming a user, ponder well and count the cost. Can you afford to be below par—that means you will not be up to the standard in real manhood—physically, mentally, and morally. You can not afford the sacrifice, SO QUIT.

Boy Who Needs a Spanking

Will cigarette smoking cause pimples on the face? I am 17 years old and weigh only 105 pounds. How can I increase my weight to about 130 normal?—J. W. J.

Answer.—If pimples are the worst result you are to suffer from cigarettes call youself lucky. What you need is a sound thrashing. You will remain below weight and below par every other way, physically, mentally, and morally, unless you quit the tobacco habit right now.

In the issue of Nov. 20th, Brother Huggins printed part of a private letter and commented thereon. I did not want it published, but now am glad it was, for we have received some gratifying responses. We are not looking for praise; we do not expect thanks: we merely want to know if the page as now conducted is of benefit to youth. I am a busy man six days each week, leaving my home for business at 7:30 A. M. and not returning till 7 P. M., and then often so weary of body and mind I hardly can eat dinner. The page often is written in time I steal from sleep; still it is a labor of love and a heart beat is in every word. We thank those who have written, and as soon as time permits will personally acknowledge all letters.

Our Weekly Puzzle

"Godliness with contentment is great gain" for we brought nothing into this world, and it is certain we can carry nothing out, and having food and raiment let us therewith be content."

Who wrote the above, who was it written to, and where can we find a record of it?

Answer next issue.

Answer to puzzle in last issue: Christmas.

The Restitution

A PAPER REPRESENTING THE CHURCH OF GOD, AND DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF "THE THINGS CONCERNING THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND THE NAME OF JESUS CHRIST" (ACTS 8:12)

VOLUME 70 CLEVELAND, O, JANUARY 1, 1918 NUMBER 1

JERUSALEM IS FREE

As years roll on God's word unfolds;
Man's madness brings to pass
The mighty prophecies of old,
As clear as shining glass.

O Jerusalem, the golden,
The city of our God,
And the battle ground of ages,
So long by heathen trod.

The Turk is chased from out its gates,
The God of heaven is there;
The King of kings at his right hand
Will soon himself declare

That righteousness will fill the earth
As waters fill the sea;
He will take his kingdom then
And give life and liberty.

Gathering nations then will come—
They come from every clime—
To Jerusalem the golden,
And worship at that shrine.

No longer then will mad men rule;
But mankind will be free
To live the grandest, noblest lives,
To all eternity.

A. Wallace Mason.

JERUSALEM: PAST, PRESENT, AND FUTURE

Jerusalem, the Holy City, has been captured from the Turks by the British operating in Palestine. Announcement to this effect was made in Parliament on the afternoon of Dec. 10th, 1917, based on official advices from Gen. Sir E. H. H. Allenby, commander-in-chief of British forces operating on Palestine front. The daily papers carried large head-lines the following day notifying the people of the victory.

Just what effect this news had on the majority of readers we do not know, but we do know that to those who are looking and waiting for the kingdom of God, it was of very great interest. An event has transpired for which we have been looking. We do not say that we expected things to happen exactly as they have, but that, eventually Britain would control in Palestine, we were sure. We based our conclusion on deductions from the writings of the prophets who spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit.

If Britain can hold the land covenanted to the fathers we, I believe, can look for a speedy return of the people without a land to the land without a people. The Jews have been active, more or less, since Dr. Theodore Herzel unfurled the Jewish flag at the first Zionist Congress convened at Basle in 1897, and declared, "after two thousand years of persecution, suffering, and disbursment, today we have become a nation." This people have already succeeded in obtaining promises from the allies that they will favor their restoration at the peace conference.

The fig tree is budding rapidly. The Lord told us when we see this coming to pass to lift up our heads, for our redemption draweth nigh. We should do our utmost that we may be among the approved.

Jerusalem is said to be the oldest inhabited city in the world, and has been captured at least thirty-four times. I copy the following conquests of Jerusalem, with a few other principal dates in her history:

1580 B. C.—Taken by Thotmes III, King of Egypt.
1440 B. C.—Captured from Amorites by the tribe of Benjamin.
1048 B. C.—Captured from Jebusites by King David.
972 B. C.—Shisak of Egypt sacked it.
820 B. C.—Sacked by Johoash, sovereign of northern kingdom of Israel.
586 B. C.—Captured and destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar of Babylon and inhabitants carried into slavery.
537 B. C.—Rebuilt under Zerubbabel.
350 B. C.—Seized by Persians.
320 B. C.—Seized by Ptolemy, one of Alexander's generals.
203 B. C.—Taken from Egypt by Antiochus, King of Syria.
199 B. C.—Retaken by Scopas, general of Ptolemy King of Egypt.
170 B. C.—Plundered by Antiochus, King of Syria.
186 B. C.—Captured and partly destroyed by a Syrian army.
165 B. C.—Captured by the Jewish leader, Judas Maccabeus, and temple worship restored.
163 B. C.—Seized by Antiochus V. of Syria.
134 B. C. Besieged but not taken by Antiochus VII. of Syria.
66 B. C.—Captured by Pompey of Rome.
40 B. C.—Plundered by Parthians.
37 B. C.—Captured and inhabitants slaughtered by Herod the Great.
29 A. D.—Jesus of Nazareth crucified.
70 A. D.—Captured and burned by Titus, and more than 600,000 slain.
614 A. D.—Taken by Chosroes of Persia.

628 A. D.—Taken by Heraclius, emperor of Constantinople.

637 A. D.—Occupied by Omar, Sultan of the Arabs.

969 A. D.—Captured by Muizz el Din, Sultan of Egypt.

1077 A. D.—Captured by Turks.

1098 A. D.—Captured by Crusaders under Godfrey of Bouillon and 70,000 Arabs put to the sword.

1177 A. D.—Captured by Saladin, Saracen leader.

1229 A. D.—Acquired by Frederick II, emperor of Germany, a crusader.

1239 A. D.—Seized by the Emir of Kerak.

1243 A. D.—Recaptured by Frederick II.

1244 A. D.—Captured by the Tartars.

1247 A. D.—Captured by the Egyptians.

1260 A. D.—Recaptured by the Tartars.

1517 A. D.—Captured by the Ottoman Turks.

1917 A. D.—Captured by the British.

Thus we see what a story history Jerusalem has had; but we think sorrowing is near a close: the Gentile times are nearly ended. Then the city beautiful for situation, will become the city of the great King from heaven whose right it is. In the mean time, we should pray for the peace of Jerusalem, for they shall prosper that love her.

W.C. Heacock.

GOD'S COVENANT WITH ABRAHAM

At various times God has made covenants with various members of the human family, but there is one covenant upon which is based a sure hope of our salvation: we may say "the sure hope"; for there is no other hope revealed.

It is the covenant made with Abram, a descendant from Shem, the eldest son of Noah. It is recorded first in Gen. 12:1-3. God promised him

First, that he should be the founder of a great nation;

Second, that he, (God) would bless him and make his name great;

Third, that he, (Abram) should be a blessing to all families of the earth. Then when Abram reached the land which God told him he would show him, he added another item to the covenant: he said he would give the land of Canaan to his seed (verse 7).

In Gen. 13:15,16 he repeats this promise, and adds a promise to greatly multiply this seed, which should inherit the land.

In Gen. 17:2-8 God again covenants with Abram. He changes his name to Abraham and says that he will make him, notice, not only the founder of a great nation, as in Gen. 12:2, but the father of many nations, and that kings should come out of him. Again he promises the land of Canaan to him and his seed for an everlasting possession.

The same covenant is repeated to Abraham in Gen. 22:16-18, and in accordance with Gen. 17:7, where God says he will establish this covenant with his seed after him in their generations, we find God making the same covenant with Isaac, Abraham's son (Gen. 26: 3,4), and with Jacob, Abraham's grandson (Gen. 28:13,14).

Briefly, then, God's covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob is

First, "I will make of thee a great nation." This was fulfilled in the Israelitish nation. In Gen. 46:3 God told Jacob to go down into Egypt for food when there was a famine in his own land, and that there he would make of him a great nation, which promise was fulfilled (Ex. 1:6-9; Deut. 26:5). The Israelitish people stand today a living testimony to its fulfilment.

Second, that he would bless Abraham and make his name great, and that he would make Abraham and his seed a blessing to all families of the earth.

Third, that this seed through whom the blessing of nations should take place, should be multiplied exceedingly and inherit the land of Canaan, jointly with him, for an everlasting possession.

Fourth, that Abraham should be the father, founder, of many nations, and the ancestor of kings.

The last three items of the covenant have not been fulfilled completely, but are in process of being fulfilled. The seed promised to Abraham, through whom the nations were to be blessed, has been born. "Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, And to seeds as of many, but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ," says Paul in Gal. 4:16. The multiplying of that seed is now being accomplished. Paul in the latter part of the chapter says, "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ, have put on Christ . . . . and if ye be Christ's then are ye Abraham's seed and heirs according to the promise." Heirs according to what promise? The promise made to Abraham that he should be blessed and his name made great; that he should receive the land of Canaan for an everlasting possession, and be a blessing to all nations.

So, then, true followers of Jesus are co-heirs with Abraham and his Seed, Jesus, of these same promises. That is, they are to be blest as Abraham was blest— their names are to be made great, they are to own the land of Canaan with Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and the Seed, Jesus, and become a means of blessing all families of the earth. As Paul says in Gal. 4:9, "So then they which be of faith are blest with faithful Abraham." They are blest on a level with and in same manner as Abraham was blest.

Paul explains the blessing which Abraham received to be "justification by faith," accounted righteous because he believed the promises God made to him (Rom. 4:3,9), and proved his faith by offering up Isaac, who represented to him the only and one possible means of having the promise that he should have a seed which should bless all nations, fulfilled; but because of his faith he accounted God able to raise him again from the dead from whence he had received him in a figure (Heb. 11:17-19).

Being accounted righteous by God insures being made righteous in very fact. Being made righteous of course, results in eternal life; for it is sin that puts an end to life. "The wages of sin is death" (Rom. 6:23). Having eternal life makes possible eternal possession of the land of Canaan and the fulfilment of the promise of blessing all nations. Thus we see how the blessing of Abraham by God makes possible the blessing all nations through him and his seed.

Paul outlines the blessing which true followers of Jesus receive with faithful Abraham as follows in Rom. 8:28-31. We know that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are called according to his purpose. For whom he did foreknow he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first born among many brethren. Moreover, whom he did predestinate, them he also called; and whom he called, them he also justified (accounted righteous by faith); and whom he justified them he also glorified" (made righteous in very fact by the resurrection). Thus we see that the true followers of Jesus, the multiplication of Abraham's seed, the body of the seed of which Jesus is the head, are blest just as Abraham was blest, and they are blest with the same end in view, that they, with Abraham and his Seed, might be a blessing to all families of the earth.

Paul calls them the "called according to his purpose," We find in Rev. 20:6, that the purpose for which he has called them is that they might be kings and priests with Christ over the earth. Thus is fulfilled that part of God's covenant to Abraraham was promised to be the father. [illegible]- And these kings and priests become the nucleus around which develope "many nations" of which Abreham was promised to be the father. Many nations made up, not of a new race of people, quite distinct from the present human race, but many nations composed of "all families of the earth" who have been regenerated, raised to the spiritual plane through the blessing brought on them through Abraham nad his Seed, Christ and his body, the church. How many of us who lay such strong, loud claim to being of the seed of Abraham and heirs according to the promise through baptism into Christ, really know the covenant, the promises made to Abraham which his seed is to inherit with him. If we do not know them we can not inherit them, for coming into possesson of these promises is conditioned upon faith in them, and we can not have faith in them unless we know them. If we would be blest with faithful Abraham, that is, accounted and made righteous, blest so that we can receive an eternal inheritance in the land of Canaan (the vantage ground after which all nations long because of the power and prestige it insures), and become a blessing to all nations; then our faith in God must spring from the same source as was the basis of Abraham's faith. These promises are the only basis of perfect, unshakable faith in God, for they dispel all the doubts that the God of the universe is a God of love. Outside these promises these doubts are bound to come when we think of all the misery and suffering caused by one sin of one man.

Do we, who claim to be striving with Paul after the prize of the high calling in Christ Jesus, know what that high calling is ? Do we know our vocation and are we walking worthy of it (Eph. 4) ? Are we still "aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, and without God in the world" (Eph. 2:12) through ignorance of these promises contained in the Abrahamic covenant, which reveals the God of Israel to be the God and only hope of all nations, all families of the earth ?

SYMPATHY

Writen to Comfort a Sister in Trouble For the Gospel's Sake

To see a person in tears always affects me. The record of the greatest, noblest, and most sympathetic man that ever lived is, "Jesus wept" (John 11:35).

In that wonderful twelfth chapter of Romans Paul exhorts us to weep with them that weep, and to be of the same mind one toward another. Jesus himself sought sympathy. David speaking of him said: "Reproach hath broken my heart, and I am full of heaviness, and I looked for some to take pity, but there was none: and for comfort, but I found none" (Psa. 69:20). God is full of love, pity, and tenderness. Listen: "Who humbleth himself to behold the things that are in heaven and in the earth! He raiseth up the poor out of the dust, and lifteth the needy out of the dunghill" (Psa. 113:6,7). Yet this same mighty one "Beholds the nations as a drop of a bucket, and counts them as the small dust of the balance: . . . All nations before him are as nothing: and they are counted to him less than nothing, and vanity" (Isa. 40:15,17). "He telleth the number of the stars: he calleth them all by their names" (Psa. 147:4). "Lift up your eyes on high, and behold who hath created these things, that bringeth out their host by number; he calleth them all by names by the greatness of his might, for that he is strong in power; not one faileth" (Isa. 40:20).

Beloved, how often it could be said of us: "Thou sittest and speakest against thy brother: thou slanderest thine own mother's son. These things hast thou done, and I kept silence: thou thoughtest that I was altogether such an one as thyself" (Psa. 50: 20,21). But when we meet in the Lord's house "we have thoughts of thy lovingkindness, O God" (Psa. 48:9), And then some precious mother's voice is heard even though her heart overflows in tears, as she testified to the goodness of God and his faithfulness in leading the child of her love and life in the ways of eternal life. Like a flash Isa. 49:15 repeats itself in our mind: "Can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb ? yes, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee." Then as a thrill of love and devotion goes through our being we recall Psa. 103:13, 14: "Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear him. For he knoweth our frame; he remembereth that we are dust." Yes, we think God is like ourselves, occupied with the great crisis now pending—the fall of empires, the arena of politics. Beloved, get this thought; let it sink deep into your heart: These things are small in his sight compared to the agonizing cry and trouble of some poor, perplexed afflicted mother's heart. In God's sight the afflicted heart, the sorrowful spirit, is of the greatest importance. The anxieties of a mother have weight in the divine balance. God's interest in the fate of nations, involving human destinies, centers only in proportion as they may effect the eternal destiny and obedience of his little ones. "But whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth or the sea" (Matt. 18:6).

Beloved, my mind is limited; it is not capable of deep thought or reasoning; yet in its simplicity it does not seek to go beyond God's teaching—that which is written. What God gives I take; what he is pleased to withhold, I do not seek to enquire the reason. All difficulties, all mysteries, all impossibilities, all disappointments—God is well able to dispose of them without any interference of mine. Jesus has commanded me to open my heart and to stretch out my hands: it is enough for me to do as Jesus tells me. "If you shall ask anything in my name I will do it" (John 11:14). The apostles implored from God the recovery of a friend; when they were in prison, they asked to get out of it: when they were persecuted and beaten, they cried to him for help; and yet they were well aware that affliction awaited them, that theirs and our sorrows enter into the divine plan; but manifesting the spirit of submission yet persevering at the same time, they prayed to God to deliver them, and God did deliver.

Dear brethren, the Bible to my heart is a thing of life. When I am happy it intensifies my joy and happiness; when I am unhappy, teased by cares and often misunderstandings, sometimes my faith in man is shaken, but never in God. When I feel famished for the truth, the living God, then how the word of God comforts me! It is as pure as rock crystal, more radiant than the sun; and beloved, as I pour over human failures and victories, I take courage, for it is human. It opens the heaven of heavens, and brings God down to illuminate the most obscure of the humblest, and often the poorest, lives. It issues from the heart of God, and it makes itself a home in my heart, such as it is. It conveys the thoughts of God, and speaks to me mouth to mouth. I come to it sad and discouraged: I have been repulsed, the best have hurt me by their touch; sometimes my brethren are too severe; they expect too much; sometimes I am left without strength to sink in languor. Not so the Bible; it has savor that refreshes me, gentleness that soothes my sorrows; it rekindles the little faith about to die; it is an earnest of God's faithfulness, a witness of his love and sympathy for me. Through it I know that Jesus wept; it assures me that I am his, and that he is mine. "He brought me to the banqueting house, and his banner over me was love." (Cant. 2:4). This blessed book is the voice, the very voice of my heavenly Father. No other has ever spoken to me as it has done.

Brother Tomlinson, in his words of exhortation this morning, "wait upon the Lord." recalled to my mind the lesson I learned in New York City when out of employment over twenty years ago. I was weary and discouraged. I visited a book stall. I picked up a book that cost only a few cents. I glanced through its pages. My eyes became fixed upon a few paragraphs that filled me with courage and hope again. These words have often inspired me since: "We do not know how to wait. We are like children who stamp at the least delay. Our wills have in the ardor of our exactions all that they want in earnestness and persistency. As soon as he is kept in suspense, the child loses all zest for his toy. It is by his slowness in answering us that God would transform our wishes into purposes. Patient expectation is a sign of spiritual viality. He who knows not how to wait, is not worthy to obtain. If on the contrary, we do not meet with God at the first few steps we take towards him, all is over; there is no God. If revelation opposes some obscurities; if we imagine that we have discovered in it some contradictions; if hard work and steeping the soil with the sweat of our brow in order to find the gold be needed, we pronounce that there is no gold to be found The Bible has nothing to give us; it is but one lie more, a final deception. Because Jesus who has, it may be, called us all our lives long unheeded, does not hasten to us the very first moment that our lips have tried to stammer out his name; because he strengthens, by letting it grow up in silence, the need we begin to feel of him—Jesus abandons us, he closes his ears, our cries are vain! And yet we know very well how to wait for the success of our enterprises here below. Let some man in power hold our future in suspense: we are patient; we persevere; dumb, if need be, but decided, come what may, never to relax our hold. It is this tenacity that God requires from us. The happiness he has to bestow is well worth it."

Beloved, we will then mutually pray for and encourage one another, for hope and faith to support us in joy and sorrow, for spiritual energy to carry us through in our struggles. Then in the kingdom Jesus will recognize us and say: "These are brethren who came up through much tribulation. They fought the good fight and loyally witnessed for me."

George B. Alldridge.

"Gentleness and cheerfulness, these come before all morality; they are the perfect duties; if your morals make you dreary, depend upon it they are wrong. I do not say 'give them up,' for they may be all you have; but conceal them like a vice, lest they should spoil the lives of better and simpler people."—R.L.S.

LIFE AND DEATH

Death Through Disobedience; Life Through Obedience

"But of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it, for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die" (Gen. 2:17).

"Wherefore, as by one man sin (disobedience) entered into the world, and death by (or on account of) sin (disobedience), and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned" (Rom. 5: 12).

Now let us go back to creation. God created man a free moral agent; that is, with a nature which enabled him to have the right of choice between obedience and disobedience. Man disobeyed with the result that the death penalty hangs over all, "for that all have sinned." When did the penalty come into effect? "In the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die."

The penalty hung over man's head from the very moment of disobedience, and death would have ended all for mankind had there not been a way of escape provided. Because of the disobedience of the first man the penalty for disobedience, (death) hangs over all—the wrath of God abides on "the children of disobedience," so through the obedience of the one man the reward of righteousness was manifested to the world; and as many as are obedient, will escape the sentence of disobedience, and have a "hope both sure and steadfast anchored within the vail"—the Father's positive proof of the reward for all those who are obedient.

Now let us go to Rom. 6, beginning with verse 5: "For if we have been planted together in the likeness of his death, certainly we shall be also in that of his resurrection; knowing this that our old man was crucified with him (in the watery grave); so that the body of sin (on which the penalty rests) may be rendered powerless: for he who died has been justified from sin. And if we died (this symbolic death) with Christ, we believe that we shall also live with him: knowing that Christ having been raised from the dead, dies no more; death no longer lords it over him (as it did during his mortal life). For the death which he died, he died by sin once, but the life which he lives, he lives by God. Thus also do you account yourselves dead by (or on account of) sin, but living by God in the annointed Jesus" (Diaglott).

"Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal body—but present yourselves to God as if alive from the dead" (as indeed you are: having been thus freed from the death penalty by the symbolic death.

And now begins the real life: "For sin shall not lord it over you, for you are not under law but under favor." O the unfathomable depths of God's great love! "For as the heaven is high above the earth, so great is his mercy toward them that revere him."

We do not understand that our part is done when we become emancipated from sin (verse 22) through obedience in baptism; but that we must now begin our walk of obedience by following our perfect pattern and example. "Not every one that sayeth unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven: but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." The nearer we keep to the pathway, the more able we will be to fulfill Paul's injunction: "As to all things exhibiting thyself a pattern of good works, uncorruptedness in the teaching, seriousness, sound speech not to be condemned, so that he who is of the opposition may be ashamed, having nothing evil to say concerning us" (verse 23). "For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." Submitted in the love of the truth.

We wish to call the attention of our readers to the fact that the 69th volume of The Restitution was completed in our last issue. This is the first complete volume we have published from our linotype machine, and it will be noticed that the pages have been numbered consecutively instead of from 1 to 12 each week, thereby giving us an opportunity of making a comprehensive index, which will be ready for the 1917 volume about the third week in January.

All requiring a copy of this will please notify us with postage one cent not later than January 15th. We will then print the number required, and forward as requested.

EDITORIAL

We wish our readers a prosperous and happy New Year.

Sister Swain asks for an explanation of Paul's words, "Be instant in season, and out of season" (2 Tim. 4:2).

All letters intended for the Editor should be addressed to him personally, as he has nothing to do with the mail addressed to The Restitution Publishing Company.

During Christmas we have enjoyed the company of Sister Myrna Lang and Brother Robert Pate Jr., both of whom are attending school in other states; and Brother and Sister Ernest Blyth, of Columbus, Ohio.

Sister Huggins and the Editor wish to thank all the brethren, sisters, and friends who have remembered them during the holiday season by beautiful cards of greeting and otherwise.

From Brother George Alldridge, of Auckland, N. Z., we have received a copy of "The Second Advent,' an attractive little booklet of thirty-six pages containing three sermons on the Coming of Christ in relation to (1) The Jew; (2) The Gentile; and (3) The church of God. The subjects are briefly but thoughtfully and scripturally presented. We hope this little messenger of truth will have a large circulation for the truth's sake. For four pence it may be ordered from Chas. F. Garratt, Aratonga Ave., One-tree Hill, Auckland, N. Z.

Dating Dec. 18, 1917, Brother Adams writes: "I have just returned from a two month's campaign in Colorado and Western Nebraska with pretty good success. Just think of the things which have happened since we last met. Time is hurrying along. We must be busy. We have over $300 pledged on the new edition of our song bock."

Brother and Sister Randolph write: "We have been corresponding with a Sabbatarian who wants us to give chapter and verse which says Christ was a law giver. We would like for you to take up the question and answer through The Restitution."

The commandments of God through Moses belonged to the old covenant; but the commandments of God through Christ and his apostles belong to the new covenant. Christ and his apostles were both law givers, as any one with an open mind can see by reading the following Scriptures: John 14:15,21; 15:10; 1 John 4:23,24; Gal. 6:2; 1 Thess.4:2; 1 Cor. 14:37).

"The Destructive and Constructive Work Attending the Establishment of the Kingdom of God," Lesson V. of the series entitled "Bible Lessons on First Principles," is now written and will be printed soon. It deals with the great subjects of destruction and restitution, explaining what will be destroyed and what will be restored at the coming of Christ. The theories of world-burning and Russellism are both exposed, and the golden mean is clearly and scripturally indicated. We anticipate a sensation will probably follow the publication of this lesson, both in the church and in the world; but this does not deter us from telling the truth as it is. We believe it will send Berean-hearted people to the word of God to see what the truth is We have spent many anxious hours of study, work, and prayer in writing this lesson; and now we pray God's blessings may attend it as it goes forth to the church of God and the world. You may order this lesson now. Three cents per copy; twenty-five cents per dozen.

A LETTER TO THE CHURCH AT KENNARD, NEBRASKA

Dear Brother Huggins:

Enclosed you will find an article written by Brother Adams to the church at Kennard, Nebraska. It was so helpful to us, some suggested sending it to The Restitution, as it might help others also. Brother Adams is home again from the West, and expects to be with us Friday evening.

Your sister in the faith,

Laura Bates.

Following is Brother Adams' letter

To The Brethren

I fully realize by my daily experience that the church is not entering, but has already entered, into the great crisis of its history, and she is being tried to the utmost limit. The greatest effort possible must be put forth to save her from being swept off her feet.

From the day I taught you the truth till now, I have had you on my heart, and have spent many hours in meditation and sleepless nights when we were being persecuted, and wondered how many would stand firmly through it all. The time will come when you will see that the position that I have taken was right and for the best. You can recall that I have told you all the time that Russia would lay down. I even told you that when she was doing the greatest part of the fighting; and today that stands out as a living monument to the truth of my prediction, which shows I interpreted the prophecies correctly: and you will yet see that other things I have told you will come true. Now the question is: are we going to stand loyal to the truth and stand by each other in this crisis, or will we weaken ourselves by becoming divided by taking part in worldly things? I have never yet changed my mind that we cannot in any way take part in this great conflict and meet with God's approbation; and those who do will surely be left. My heart aches when I hear of a brother or a sister becoming disloyal and becoming attached to these worldly things. We must remember in order to be accepted we must have a clean record. Brethren, I want to ask you a question: Is there any sacrifice too great to make for a home in the kingdom? If there is any doubt as to whether it is right, we should take the safe side and remove all doubts. "Let the heathen rage and the people imagine vain things"; and that is just what they will do, as the prophet says, but this raving should have no effect upon us. Jesus told us that offences should come, also told us that he was telling us before hand so that when they came, we would not be offended. Why not remember these things? These are just the things he said would come; and we should rejoice that we know that they have come as predicted. Our manner of life should be such that it would prove to the world that we believe that the kingdom is nigh at hand.

Daniel says in Dan. 12:1: "And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great prince which standeth for the children of thy people: and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time; and at that time thy people shall be delivered, everyone that shall be found written in the book." Let us read this verse again and again. We know that this terribe time of trouble is here, and the only way we can expect to be delivered is to have no part in the trouble, and be found written in the book. If our names are written on cards and books belonging to the world, they are not written on the boook of God; for "we cannot serve two masters." So listen to verse three of this same chapter: "And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever."

The angel is telling Daniel of a great time of trouble and makes it plain that the wise shall have no part in it, If we are to shine as stars, we must bring the people of the world to the right way and not let them win us to the wrong way.

That we are in a great time of trial is proven by our everyday experience, but the sad part of it all is brought out in Daniel 11:35 where he says, "And some of them of understanding shall fall to try them, and to purge and to make them white, even to the time of the end: because it is yet for a time appointed." O brethren, who are the ones that are going to fall, and who shall be the ones made white by these trials? Again in Daniel 12:10 he says, "Many shall be purified and made white, and tried; but the wicked shall do wickedly; and none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand." My dear brethren, let us notice that we are not purified without trials. Then can we not see that these trials are for a good purpose? When he says none of the wicked shall understand where are we to be classed if we are joined with them? O brethren, at this moment I feel like weeping for fear of what may happen to you and cause you to be among the wrong number. Will you listen to me as your brother when I exhort you to be faithful? Do not think that I say anything to hurt your feelings, but it is all because I fear the consequences. I now need your prayers more than all other things, and I praise God for the general loyalty of the brethren of Nebraska. Let us be faithful that we may "receive a crown of life that fadeth not away."

Your brother striving for the kingdom,

Almus Adam.s

AN ALIEN OR A CITIZEN—WHICH?

We pupose in this article to compare the relation of an alien and a citizen to a human government and apply it to the future divine government which Jehovah will set up and establish under the rulership of his son, Jesus the Christ and his saints. This divine government will occupy the whole land of Canaan, extending from the Mediterranean Sea to the Persian Gulf. This land was given to Abraham and his seed, as recorded in Gen. 15th chapter. This territory will be occupied by the twelve tribes of Israel, over which the twelve apostles will reign as kings (Matt. 19:28). This kingdom will extend its dominion until all human governments will be destroyed. It will then became a universal kingdom under the whole heavens. Then will David's prayer have its fulfilment as the Psalmist writes, "The prayers of David, the son of Jesse, are ended."

In the examination of the laws of human governments we note that they recognize two relationships, viz., an alien and a citizen. An alien is a person who leaves the land of his birth and settles in a foreign land. He is deprived of certain privileges, such as casting a vote, or holding an office, etc. The rights of citizenship can be obtained by complying with certain laws relating to the naturalization of aliens. The rights to citizenship depend upon the volition of the alien and an obedience to the forms required by the government to which he applies for citizenship. The laws of the United States admit aliens to the privileges of a natural born citizen under certain forms.

He must reside in this country two years and prove this residence before he can declare his intentions to apply for the privileges of a citizen. After five years he may apply for citizenship by taking an oath to support the constitution of the United States and obey the laws of the government. He must renounce his former citizenship, as he cannot be a citizen of two different governments. After having complied with all the forms of the law he becomes an adopted citizen of the govenrment of his choice. He is now an alien to his former government, and his adopted government is required to protect him in all his rights as a citizen. Before he is granted his full rights as a citizen he must familiarize himself with our form of government and the constitution that he may act in accordance with the requirements of his adopted government.

We have thus far learned that there are two ways by which persons may be considered citizens, viz.,

1. Being born under its laws;
2. Being adopted.

Each citizenship carries with it the right of protection wherever he may reside. We have taken some pains to compare the relation of aliens and citizens of human governments. We now wish to apply this to the future divine government, the kingdom of God. Every son of Adam is an alien to God's government through the entailment of his sin-nature which was counted to us throught the disobedience of Adam. The whole race would have continued aliens had not Jehovah have provided a means by which this condition could be changed. This changed relation can only come about through the volition of an alien and a compliance with God's will. God's purpose in the beginning was that men could be counted righteous through obedience. This is exemplified in the offering of the two sons of Adam, Cain and Abel. Both had no doubt been taught what kind of an offering to present. It required a blood offering, as the seed of the woman was to be slain. Abel's offering pointed forward to the death of his seed, so Abel was counted righteous through obedience. Cain's offering was a willful disobedience, and therefore was rejected. The righteous race is counted through Abel, Seth, Abraham, David, and his greater Son, Jesus the Christ.

After Cain's rejection he was driven from the presence of God, and he settled in the land of Nod east of Eden, and there he built a city and estabilshed a religious system from which have come the alien class. These two classes have been at variance since that time. The time we trust is not far in the future when the seed of the woman will triumph and bruise the head of the serpent's seed. When Jehovah instituted the covenant of circumcision with Abraham he required that all strangers be circumcised. When Jehovah set up a semi-divine government under the leadership of Moses and Aaron he established a citizenship in the commonwealth of Israel, or the kingdom of God. This citizenship belonged in right of a covenant to the natural seed of Abraham. All others were regarded as alien. By complying with the laws of this commonwealth an alien could become an adopted heir and entitled to all the blessings that would come through this relationship. Christ through perfect obedience became the head of a new citizenship, and through the preaching of the gospel, he called men to accept the terms or means by which all might become citizens of a divine government.

Let us now apply the alien and citizen law to the kingdom of God. Paul in writing to the Philipian church said: "Our conversation (citizenship) is in heaven (a heavenly government); from whence we also look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ." Observe, please, that there was a time when this apostle was an alien and an enemy to this government, but through obedience to the divine law he became reconciled, and therefore a citizen. This citizenship is prospective and depends on our living a blameless life. We are required to be overcomers in order to sit with Jesus in his throne. The significance of securing this citizenship is made clear in Eph. 2:12. Paul declares there was a time when the Ephesians were aliens to the commnowealth of Israel (the kingdom of God), and strangers from the covenants of promise. They sustained such a relation while Gentiles in the flesh. At that time they were without Christ, having no hope, and without God in the world. The only promise that aliens can claim is what they may enjoy in this life. They work for wages which Paul saye is death In closing this chapter Paul states the changed condithis chapter the apostle states the changed condition in the following language: "Now therefore ye are no longer strangers and foreigners (aliens), but fellow citizens with the saints, and of the household of God." This citizenship carries with it a position in the kingdom of God. "He hath made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth" (Rev. 5:10).

In conclusion, let me state briefly the things required to become a citizen of the fifth universal kingdom.

I believe the gospel which is the glad tidings of the kingdom of God. This embraces the divine thought that Jesus, the only begotten Son of God, will become king over all the earth.

2. We must repent of our former sins, and be baptized into the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. This baptism is a sign of that circumcision made without hands, and is a putting off the body of the sins of the flesh (Col. 2:11). In Rom. 6:6 Paul calls it our old man which was crucified with Christ when we submitted to a burial in the water, which was an emblem of his death, burial, and resurrection. Paul in Rom. 4th chapter states that Abraham believed God and it, his belief, was counted to him for righteousness. If righteousness is counted to those who believe God, it is evident that righteousness is not inherent in the alien. The nominal churches ignore this truth and only require of their converts a promise to live a perfect moral life, accepting that righteousness is derived from our relationship to the first Adam; whereas, he was of the dust, and because of disobedience, was returned to dust again. This nature became a part of his offspring. Under these conditions they would be of the alien class. There can be but one way to remove this sin-nature, and that is through the resurrection from among the dead. Our being counted righteous guarantees to us, if we are overcomers, the blessings of eternal life through the resurrection. This is God's plan of salvation, showing both the need and the way of aliens becoming citizens.

D. C. Robison.

Remarks

The month of November has had mingled sorrow and joy. We hired a hall in Stratton, Neb., got out bills and advertised our meeting from house to house; and although there was but one church in the town, they seemed to be satisfied with that one: only a few came and listened. However, the seed was sown and we look to God for the increase. When the people in town seemed to be so indiffrent and so full of the war spirit that they could not listen to the truth, we moved the meeting to the country to Brother Hargleroad's home. Here we succeeded in interesting several families, baptized four and set the church in order with eight members. Now at Brother Hargleroad's they are rejoicing that they have some of like faith to worship with.

At the close of our meeting here, we went to Laird, Colo., where earlier in the season I had baptized fourteen. They were anxious for a series on first principles, which we gave them. There are eight or nine ready apparently to accept the truth. We learned this more fully after closing, so I am going back to finish the work. The demand upon our time it seems never was so urgent as now. For two months we have labored night and day almost, and the Lord has given us strength for all the extra labor we have had to perform. Those that are not associated with us in the work have but little idea of the demand made upon our time and strength. This arises from the fact that our brethren are beginning to realize that what we do must be done quickly. Those that I cannot reach with my voice I am trying to reach with my pen. I can plainly see that the time is coming and may be very soon when it will be no use to preach the gospel, and when the church will have to worship in secret unless we compromise truth and cater to conditions; and I am grieved to know that this is being done in certain places. Brethren, let us be faithful no difference what the consequences may be. If ever the church needed faithful leaders since the days of Christ and the apostles, it is certainly now. So God is looking to them to hold up the banner of truth and to keep the church in line in these trying times.

SHALL NEVER DIE

The Editor recently spoke in our Oakland mission, and at the close of the service he extended the privilege for any to ask questions, and one dear bright young man of exceptional ability asked this question. "If you folks are right in saying that the saintly dead do not go to heaven at death, how do you explain John 11:25,26 ?"

Our answer was this without any hesitancy: "That question is very easily answered. I wish I never had harder questions to answer than that one. Let us quote it now just as it reads: 'I am the resurrection, and the life: he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live; and whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die.'

"I ask you as an audience, How many classes are there among believers—including both the living and the dead ?"

The audience answered, "Two classes: the living and dead saints."

"Correct you are. Now into how many classes does Paul in 1 Thess. 4:16,17 divide the saints ?"

The answer came, "Two classes: the ones sleeping and the ones awake at the second advent."

"Quite correct again. Now let us read the words of Jesus with that thought in mind. 'He that believeth . . . . though he were dead.' What class is that ?"

The answer came again, "That refers to the dead believers."

"Quite right. Now let us read on: 'Whosoever liveth and believeth shall never die.' Does this refer to the dead believer or the living believer ? Any one."

The audience saw the point, and said: "That refers to the living believer at the time that our Savior comes the second time."

"Right again. Note: Paul is included in these two verses; so Peter, John, and the saints of those days. Are they the ones that are believers, though dead, or are they among the living believers ?"

The audience answered: "They are among the dead believers."

"Right. Now supposing that the Master came now, what part of the text would describe us here who are alive— those believing though "dead," or those living and believing ?"

They answered. "The part that says, 'Whosoever liveth and believeth.' "

"Correct again. This is Paul's argument in 1 Thess. 4. The dead are raised. The living are not raised at all. They 'shall never die,' as Jesus said to Martha. But listen: in order to belong to the class that 'shall never die,' you must have two requisites: You must (1) live, and (2) believe. If you are a dead believer you do not come within the scope of the statement, 'shall never die.' You must be a living believer. You must not only believe but you must live and believe, in order to get the promise, 'shall never die.' "

The audience saw the truth, and we believe that the young man did too. Conditional immortality is a Bible doctrine, and no one is able to overthrow it. Jesus taught it in his discourses. He also endorsed Moses' teachings, and Moses taught it. So the prophets. And all the apostles taught it.—Editorial by J. J. Schaumburg in "Messiah's Advocate."

We Wish You All A Happy New Year

My Prayer

I would be kind, O Lord, in though and word and deed;
Help me that I may see another's need;
Dark is the way at times, for all, and rough the road;
May I reach out and help to bear the other's load;
If only by a smile, a word, or touch of loving sympathy,
Then shall my own path brighter, smoother be.

I would be kind, O Lord, for all around
Are hearts that ache, though lips give forth no sound;
Brave hearts, that patiently beat on from day to day,
Bearing perchance, a heavier load than mine, upon life's way;
A sister or a brother, needing all the kindness I can give,
Let my voice speak the words which give them strength to live.

I would be kind, O Lord, to everyone I meet;
But most of all to him and her, whose weary, lagging feet
Falter or fail to keep the straight and narrow way;
Whose sad eyes, full of tears, can see no hopeful ray
Shine through the darkness with which their sky's o'ercast.
Let my hand be outstretched to help, so long as life shall last.

I would be kind, O Lord, through all the coming year;
Life is so short, and those I love, are dear.
'Tis such a little while that they with me, can stay,
I would be tender, kind, and loving, every day.
Thus shall I follow in the path my Savior trod,
And bring to earth a nearer glimpse of heaven; and of God.—Edith Wait-Colson.

Our New Year Greeting

Yesterday was 1917; today is 1918. The old has passed away; the new is with us. The past is but a memory, but we—to a great extent—have the making and the shaping of the future in our own hands. What will we do with it ? If we follow the lesson taught in our memory verses—see top of page—we will so live that we will be an honor to our Creator, a credit to our Savior, and a blessing to mankind, benefitting ourselves to the extent that we will feel the full presence of the ~~salvation~~ salutation of Paul to Philemon as recorded in verse 3: "Grace to you, and peace, from God our Father and the Lord Jesus Christ." All of which we wish you.

A Word to Our Young Readers

Is that inspired manuscript which you were too bashful to mail me still tucked away in your dresser drawer ? It may be a great expression of vast benefit to your fellows. Kindly let us read it.

The wisdomful phrase "Industry is the great teacher," has urged us on so long that we have grown weary of its spur. Let us invent another one—"We learn by our mistakes."

We must not be impatient to suceed. We can not hurry our intelligence. We must take care lest in after years when courage is old, we realize the tragedy of our impatience.

A Glance Backward

The use and the abuse of time is one of the topics which more or less naturally claim our attention to any specific period, the calendar year, for instance—draws to a close. Fortunate is the man whose conscience assures him that he has squardered none of his time since the last New Year dawned upon his life, fortunate and rare. Of a commodity so intensely valuable most people are recklessly wasteful. Even those who profess to believe and to act on the belief that time is money, do not safeguard their hours at all so effectively as they do their dollars, And the worst wasters are perhaps the very persons who habitually assert that they "have no time" for this, that, or the other activity. In no other paradox does a more sterling truth underlie an apparent absurdity than in Hazlut's "The more busy we are, the more leisure we have." Lack of system and method in the ordering of one's life inevitably results in the loss of a half hour here, an hour there, a still longer period elsewhere—the losses aggregating in the course of a year not merely days but weeks of time wasted. Men who are genuinely busy can always find time to do more than is required of them; those who have all too little with which to occupy themselves will protest that they have no time to do even that little. Rational employment of the odds and ends of time that are left free in the lives of the busiest of mortals is the golden secret of effective service, ever increasing capabilities, and habitual happiness and content. On the other hand, as has been so truly said, lost wealth may be replaced by industry, lost knowledge by study, lost health by temperance or medicine; but lost time is gone forever."

New Year Bells

Oh, sweet and low on the midnight air
Ring out the New Year bells,
And a mournful sound has their cadence low,
As backward and forward they come and go,
The beautiful New Year bells.

Oh, memory clings to those beautiful bells
Ringing out in the clear starlight,
We remember the past, 'tis a broken chain,
Never on earth to be blended again,
For the loved ones have gone from our sight.

And a voice that is hushed in our memory dwells
With a love that is almost divine,
Soft and low we hear it again,
Wafted to us in the sweet refrain
Of the beautiful New Year chime.

Our Weekly Puzzle

"Let us not be weary in well doing: for in due season we shall reap, if we fail not."

Who wrote the above ? To whom was it written ? Where can it be found ?

Answer in next issue.

Answer to puzzle in last issue:
The passage was written by Paul to Timothy, and can be found in 1 Timothy 6:6-8.

DON'T FORGET THE HELPING FUND

We whose names are given below, believing it to be our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the manager of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. Those whose circumstances do not permit of the paying for the paper themselves should notify the manager, signifying their willingness to accept the paper, and it will be cheerfully sent from the proceeds of this fund.

BIBLE LESSONS ON FIRST PRINCIPLES

The Editor of "The Restitution" is now preparing for publication a series of Bible lessons which are designed to explain every essential feature of gospel truth. Three lessons of the series have just been published entitled respectively, "Introduction," "The Word of God in Threefold Aspect," and "The Gospel of the Kingdom the Only True Gospel." Valuable for conducting Bible studies and classes and for giving Berean lessons, as well as for individual study. Written primarily to teach the elemental principles of the gospel to candidates preparatory to baptism. Three cents for one copy; twenty-five cents the dozen.

DENYING THE FAITH

A sermon which is both doctrinal and practical. 20 pages; one copy 5 cents; 40 cents per dozen.

"THE SMOKE OF THEIR TORMENT ASCENDETH UP FOREVER"

A sermon of doctrinal and prophetic value. A profound subject made simple. 12 pages. One copy 3 cents; 12 copies 25 cents.

THE DEATH OF CHRIST

A doctrinal discourse setting forth logically and scripturally the meaning of death and its relation to the gospel of life. 3 cents each; 25 cents per dozen.

PARADISE LOST; PARADISE REGAINED

A sermon in which every text in the Bible where paradise occurs, either in the English or original tongue, is quoted and explained. 5 cents each; 12 for 40 cents.

THE BIBLE: ITS PRINCIPLES AND TEXTS

As indicated by its title, this book is divided into three sections; the first consists of a disquisition on "The Bible"; the second simplifies its "Principles" in formulated propositions; and the third expounds in a homiletic manner particular "Texts." As an Editor the Author has untied many knotty questions submitted to him by readers; more than a hundred and fifteen are considered in this volumn. One copy $1.10; two copies $2.00.

NEW YEAR

New Year day has come again; one more year is gone;
Time is fleeting, cannot stay, ages passing on.
No more we tread the beaten paths of 1917.
It's days are gone with flowers in bloom, and leaves of brilliant green.
And still we tread the wine-press here, in sorrow as we go.
Today we taste its joys and fears, the morrow may not know;
So if of ill, or of joy, our lot may chance to be,
Our heavenly Father's guiding hand shall shelter you and me.
Yes, hope looks up to brighter days beyond this vale of tears;
When ages come o'erspread with joy, beyond these fleeting years.
O Jesus Lord, we long for thee! thy kingdom may it come;
When all shall sing thy praises, the lame, the blind, the dumb.
Our sorrows then will all be o'er, and tears will never flow;
Death, the enemy shall die— pure joy we then shall know.
Thus may the New Year usher in the age we long to see,
When all one happy family we ever more shall be.

THE HOLY SPIRIT

"Prove All Things; Hold Fast that which is Good"

Isa. 40:7,13

These two instances were unfortunately overlooked in our last writing. As they are of special interest we cannot pass them by. Comparing verse seven with verse thirteen we find the translators of the Authorized Version have sought to make a distinction where there is none by placing a capital "S" in the thirteenth verse. This has been corrected by the revisers, and a small "s" appears in both cases. It seems probable from verse seven that Isaiah borrows his language from Psa. 103:16. That both David and Isaiah had in mind the work of the spirit of God at creation is evident from the context, for David in verse 14 has clear reference to Gen. 2:7 and 3:19; indeed, the latter reference is given in the margin of our Bibles. And Isaiah in the verse preceding the one under consideration undoubterly refers to the creation. It will therefore be readily admitted that if such is the case, the references to "spirit" in both Genesis and Isaiah must be identical.

In this connection the marginal reading in the Revised Version of Isaiah 40:13 "meted out," has much significance. That the translators of the Authorized Version were in error in assuming the personality of the "spirit" by placing a capital "S" is evident, not only from the correction made by the revisers, but verse 18 makes it abundantly clear that God himself, the Creator of heaven and earth is the one referred to, and not the "spirit" as a personality. Compare verse 28 with verses 13, 14 and see Isa. 42:5.

Isa. 42:1

The clause found in Isa, 42:1, "I have put my spirit upon him," is quoted in Matt. 12:18 as applicable to the Lord Jesus. The absurdity of putting one person upon another must be apparent to all. It seems strange also that so few are struck with the indignity of such an act. In verse 5 we have incidently given to us the nature of the "spirit" in man which is said to be given to the man, therefore it cannot be the man as so many assert.

Isa. 44:3

Notice the beautiful Hebrew parallelisms in verse three of Isaiah 44, "I will pour water upon the thirsty land (R. V. margin) and (parallal) streams upon the dry ground,"

"I will pour my spirit upon thy seed, and (parallel) my blessing upon thy offspring."

Parallelisms: "Water" and "Streams"
"Thirsty land and Dry ground"
"Spirit" and "Blessing"
"Seed" and "Offspring"
"Pour water" and "Pour my spirit"

What conclusion must be reached with regard to the personality of the spirit here? If spirit can be "poured" like water, it cannot be personal. A spirit or a person may be a blessing, but a blessing can hardly be called the equivalent of personality.

Isa. 59:19.21

The Revised Version makes very considerable alteration in the text, which will cause much disappointment to the orthodox reader. It, however, gives a marginal reading very similar to the text of the Authorized Version, but it substitutes a small "s" in place of a capital. It is most interesting to note how in this and the preceding instance in Isaiah 40 particular mention is made of the enduring word of God. We trust to take more notice of this linking of the "word of God" with the "spirit of God" when we come to study New Testament instances. It is apparently recognized even here as the weapon of defense against the adversary.

Isa. 61:1

"The spirit of the Lord God is upon me, because the Lord has anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek (or poor), he hath sent me to bind up the broken hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives and the opening of the prison to them that are bound" (Isa. 61:1). Here undoubtedly we have recorded the fulfilment of chapter 11:2, "The spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him." The former passage is cited from Isaiah by the Lord Jesus (see Luke 4:18) as applicable to himself long before the promised manifestation of the spirit spoken of in John's gospel. By comparing the New Testament passage in Luke with the passage under consideration in Isaiah, some interesting points are disclosed.

An observant critic might be tempted to remark that our particular notice of the change by the revisers from a capital to a small "s" in so many passages is of little force seeing that in Luke 4, and elsewhere they have, with evident intention, retained the capital letter. But with due respect to the revisers and the critic, whoever he may be, we maintain they are not consistent in so doing. The passge in Luke 4:18 being a quotation of Isaiah 61:1 must manifestly be subject to the same revision. Father, if the term used in Luke 4:18 is identical with that used in Luke 4:1, 14, etc., then they also are subject to the same revision as Isa. 61:1. Thus we have circumstantial evidence of the unity of the spirit, but differing in manifestaton. Though we are not now dealing with New Testament passages we cannot help remarking how much the passage in Isa. 61 brings to mind Gal. 5:22.

Isa. 63:1

"But they rebelled, and vexed his holy spirit." We can scarcely read this passage without thinking of Eph. 4:30. The Revised Version makes the similarity more marked, and gives the impression that Paul's warning message was inspired by the utterance in Isaiah. The changes the revisers have made are:

1. "Grieved" instead of vexed, which brings it more into line with the New Testament quotation.
2. "spirit" instead of "Spirit," making it in harmony with all Old Testament passages hitherto considered
3. "Himself" instead of "he." This may not be improved grammar (for the English of the Revised Version is not always of the best) but it is more emphatic and shows more clearly that it was God, and not the spirit as a separate personality, which fought against Israel.

It may be well to state here that there is no great objection to the use of a capital "H" or a capital "S" as initial letters for the phrase "The Holy Spirit," except that it has in some way become popular as a specious argument to bolster up the unscriptural doctrine of the Trinity. Out of reverence to the Creator, from whom the spirit proceeds, there is appropriateness in the use of capitals. Strange to say in this porticular verse the revisers have in the Old Testament altered the capital letter for a small one, and in the New Testament the small letter for a capital, in spite of the fact that if the New Testament instance is a quotation, is should therefore be governer by the original.

After a page of Mr. Barlow's book is used in speaking of death as a condition of existence he further says: "Soul and spirit leave the body, and this is what we call death. This is what the word means. Take the word in any relation you please, and the idea of separation clings to it" (page 86). Then when soul and spirit leave the body man is dead, and so long as they are together man lives, or is in a condition of existence, as per Mr. Barlow's definition of life. But we read of a "dead ox" (Ex. 21:35), "dead beast" (Ex. 21:34), "dead lion" (Eccl. 9:4), "dead dog" (1 Sam. 9:3), "dead flies" (Eccl. 10:1), and other dead animals too numerous to mention. In such cases is death a separation of soul and spirit from the body? If yes, then all creatures have soul and spirit; and if no, then death does not always mean separation, and Mr. Barlow's definition is not a true one. But Solomon tells us: "For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath (ruach, spirit, Hebrew); so that a man hath no pre-eminence above a beast: for all is vanity. All go into one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again" (Eccl. 3:19,20).

If man's spirit is a conscious, intelligent entity when it returns to God, so also must be the beast's and if the beast's spirit is not a conscious, intelligent entity after his death neither is man's, for the one dieth as the other and all have one spirit, or the same kind of spirit, and man, so far as spirit is concerned "hath no pre-eminence above a beast." Truly, the spirit of man returns to God who gave it; but God also taketh away the breath (Hebrew, ruach, spirit), of creeping things innumerable, and "they die, and return to the dust" (Psa. 104:25-29). As that which God takes goes back into his hands, we are assured that the spirit of the beast returns as much to God as the spirit of man; and if because the spirit of man returns to God it is a conscious, intelligent entity, then the same reason will prove a like condition for the spirit of the creeping things. The living creature of which Mr. Barlow ate after it was slain, separated, may be in heaven enjoying as much felicity as Mr. Barlow's best friend, or his tutor whom he would claim went before him.

Job declares, "My spirit is corrupt" (Job 17:1), and God's "visitation hath preserved" it. God says Job was "a perfect and upright man" (Job 1: 8; 10:12). Job's spirit was not corrupt then in the sense of being evil, and as there is only one other way it could be said to be corrupt that must be the kind of corruption Job was speaking of, and the visitation of God was its only preservation. If God ever withdrew his visitation from Job his spirit would cease to be preserved, and as it was corrupt it could not last very long, but cease to exist. Hezekiah also gives us some light on this question: "O Lord, by these things men live, and in all these things is the life of my spirit; so wilt thou recover me, and make me to live" (Isa. 38: 16). Here the life of Hezekiah's spirit depended upon the things God was bestowing upon him at the time he is telling of, and that is the mercy of God in granting him an extension of his present earthly life. Had he died as the prophet had told him he would, his spirit would have been lifeless; and if the spirit like Job's was corrupt it would soon have gone out of existence; for the definite article "the" makes the life the only condition of its existence.

Johsua says of the kings of the Canaanites, "Neither was there spirit in them any more, because of the children of Israel" (Jos. 5:1). Shall we conclude that a conscious, intelligent entity had abandoned these kings, and left their bodies to the mercy of the Israelites? If not, is the text not good proof that the spirit that leaves man is not a conscious, intelligent entity? And if it was a conscious, intelligent entity then man can be conscious without it; for those kings were living and conscious. Again, was this spirit in existence after it had departed from these kings? Who will so affirm? If it existed, what and where was it? What was it like? This text is the best kind of evidence that the spirit of man is not an entity.

"And they found an Egyptian in the field, and brought him to David, and gave him bread, and he did eat; and they made him drink water; and they gave him a piece of cake of figs, and two clusters of raisins: and when he had eaten his spirit came again to him" (1 Sam. 30:11,12). Was this spirit a conscious entity that had gone from the Egyptian, and returned after he had eaten? To affirm such would be ridiculous; and here is another proof that spirit is not a personality independant of the body, for it is spoken of as "his," the Egyptian's. He was a man, and had a spirit like all other men, and as his spirit was not a conscious entity while away from him, other men's will not be either. When the queen of Sheba looked upon the wisdom of Solomon, and his food, and table and ministers and their apparel, "there was no more spirit in her" (1 Kings 10:4, 5). It would not sound good to say that the conscious, intelligent part of her had left, for she still possessed that; and again we know positively that her spirit did not carry away her mind. Since her spirit is like that of all other women's their minds are not gone when their spirits are no longer in them.

In Isa. 19:3 we read of "the spirit of Egypt," and if spirit is always a conscious entity, Egypt would have a conscious spirit somewhere unless it is destructible, and has been destroyed. In Gen. 7:22 and Lam. 4:20 the spirit of man is said to be in his nostrils. Is there a conscious part of us in our noses? Does not consciousness originate in the brain? If not, then the organ we call brain in man is of no use, and only fills the head. Last but not least we are told, "He cutteth off the spirit of princes: he is terrible to the kings of the earth" (Psa. 76:12). In old Bible times to cut off a person meant to kill him, and here we have it clearly declared that he shall kill the spirit of princes. To kill means to take the life. The life is the condition of their existence, hence they will be put out of existence. Isaiah says of the horse, chariot, power, and army of a certain people, "They are extinct" (Isa. 43:17). Mr. Barlow says, "death is not extinction." But Isaiah here shows it to be the condition of death, if not the thing itself. Death then is not a condition of existence; but the contrary, the condition of non-existence to animate beings, and in it there is no consciousness (Psa. 6:5; 88:10-12; 115:17; 146:3,4; Eccl. 9:4-6; 10).

TRUTH VERSUS ERROR

Truth is a proposition that needs no demonstration. However in our day it is "line upon line. and precept upon precept" that is required to prove that a certain proposition is truth and not error. We desire to discuss this proposition from a scriptural standpoint. We have before us the two schools, viz: The school of the prophets, and the theological schools. The first school lets Scripture interpret Scripture; the second school depends upon flesh and blood to interpret the Scripture. Paul in writing to his son Timothy states very clearly that "All Scripture is given by the inspiratio of God, and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works" (2 Tim. 3:16,17). The writer of this text was inspired by God and laid down the means by which men and women may be bentfitted. God's inspired words are not to be changed or humanized. The apostle Peter affirms the above statement when he wrote that "No prophecy of Scripture is of any private interpretation." Then he gives the reason: "For the prophecy came not in old times by the will of man: but holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit" (2 Pet. 1: 20,21).

If these texts are carefully analysed and believed they will do away with the divinity schools and man-made error. We need no Doctors of Divinity to interpret the Scripture. Such titles are unscriptural and useless except to deceive men. Paul in writing to Timothy says, "Preach the word, be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all long suffering and doctrine." The main feature in this charge is to "preach the word." Now if all Scripture is given by inspiration of God, and is profitable for doctrine, and is of no private interpretation, we must accept the statements as made.

When we make these statements we are met with the following answer: "Then you ignore the benefit of educated men and women ?" So far as the interpretation of Scripture is concerned, we do. In order to prove our position we will compare doctrine with doctrine. The key to the Scriptures from our viewpoint is the doctrine of the kingdom of God. The Scripture very plainly teaches that this kingdom was known as the kingdom of Israel over which Saul, David, and Solomon reigned. In the days of apostate Judah this kingdom was overturned with the promise that when the rightful heir should come it will be given him. The four universal kingdoms were given to another ruler, and the time will come when this earth will have no human ruler, but God's kingdom will extend its dominion under the whole heaven, and the kingdoms of this world shall become a part of the kingdom of God.

We wish to trace briefly the history of this kingdom. When Jehovah delivered Abraham's seed from Egyptian bondage he congregated them at Sinai, and under the leadership of Moses and Aaron he organized them into a political body, with this promise: if obedient to him he would make of them a holy nation. They were given laws that they might become what God desired a peculiar treasure unto him. While Moses was their leader he at all times communed with his divine King, Jehovah. After they possessed the land and became dissatisfied with the ruling of the judges, they demanded of Samuel that he give them a king. In this event we learn that Jehovah was their king, as he said to Samuel: "They have not rejected you but me, that I should rule over them."

From this time the rule of the judges ceased, and a human king was chosen. This body is known in history as the kingdom of Israel or the kingdom of the Lord, over which Saul, David, and Solomon ruled. This kingdom became divided and overturned, so we find it today. In preaching the gospel of the kingdom of God we must accept that this kingdom is overturned, but will be restored under the leadership of Jesus the Christ. In accepting Paul's statement as found in Acts 13th chapter we learn that a connection is made with the kingdom as ruled over by David and the future kingdom under Jesus. The apostles here gives a brief history of Israel under the judges and two kings, Saul and David, and the says: "Of this man's seed hath God, according to promise, raised unto Israel a Savior, Jesus." In this address he tells the Jews that their leaders put Jesus to death, but God raised him from the dead and had covenanted to give him (Jesus) the sure mercies of David, which were promised in 2 Sam. 7:12-18 and 1 Chron. 17:11-16. This brief history connects the two phases of the kingdom and is proof that the overturned kingdom will, under Jesus, become the restored kingdom of Israel.

This brings us to the preaching of the gospel by Christ and his true followers. Mark, one of the sacred writers, states that Jesus preached the gospel of the kingdom of God. The gospel is equivalent to glad tidings. So everywhere this gospel is preached we must believe that the kingdom was not destroyed but overturned, and it will, when Jesus shall come, be the restored kingdom of Israel. After the resurrection of Jesus he remained on earth and spoke to them "of things pertaining to the kingdom of God." These things are not numerated, but it is very evident that they belonged to the kingdom. The question asked by his apostles will help us to understand. The question was, "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel ?" They had no misconception of the nature of the kingdom, for they asked that the kingdom, which was once a literal kingdom, be restored at that time. Jesus had repeatedly told them that he must be put to death but would rise again. The question here was the time in which it would be restored. After Pentecost the time question passed out of their minds, and they preached the gospel, which embraced what Peter preached under the inspiration of the Holy Spirit. In this discourse (Acts 2) he stated that God had raised Jesus from the dead to sit on David's throne. It is strange that so little is said in church circles about this gospel of the kingdom of God. If all would accept the teachings of the prophets and Jesus and the apostles as the inspired word, all differences would pass away.

In conclusion, we wish to say that the gospel was preached that man should believe and be baptized in order to be saved. It is a very simple proposition. It needs no interpretation. They are the words of Jesus to his apostles as recorded by Mark. It is the commission under which Jesus sent his apostles out into the world to preach the gospel to every creature. God's purpose in having this gospel is to call out from among the nations a people for his name. The requirements are, faith or a belief of the gospel, baptism into the name of Jesus, and a holy life. Through obedience we are counted righteous: then an exemplary life will bring us eternal life through the resurrection and a place in the kingdom. May the Life-giver soon come is our prayer.

THE SECOND ADVENT

The question often arises as to what the hope of the fathers really was, and the early church in the time of our Savior and the apostles. We are informed that the Jews expected their Messiah to restore the kingdom to the same condition that it was when David ruled over it. They did not understand how a king could live forever so that the kingdom would always remain the same and under the same ruler. They did not understand that their king must die and rise from the dead to immortal life. Even the disciples who had been with our Lord during his earthly ministry did not comprehend the meaning of his words to them, when he told them that he must die and rise again. They were so much in the dark on the subject that when it transpired they thought that their hopes were all blighted. Peter said, "I go a fishing," and the others readily joined with him, and when the women reported having seen the Lord that thought it was an idle tale. After some of them had seen him Thomas declared that unless he could handle him he would not believe.

In time they were convinced that he was alive, but still they had no idea of what was to transpire. One of the last questions they asked him was, "Wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel ?" He did not answer their question in a direct manner, but told them, "It is not for you to know the times and the seasons that the Father hath put in his own power." However, he promised to send the comforter, which should guide them into all truth and bring to mind all things that he had told them. When they had received the Holy Spirit they were enlightened, but they still hoped to see him again in their day and to go into the kingdom without passing through the grave. Later Paul stated that that day could not come until there came a falling away, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition.

The falling away was so great that the faith nearly vanished from the earth. This continued for a long time until there was an awakening and popery lost its hold on a few. Luther for one broke loose from the Catholic faith. He read the Bible and found that what he had been taught was false--popery was not Christianity. So by his studies of the Scriptures, and his preaching and writings a new start was made. The Scriptures were investigated with the result that the ancient hope of Israel was revived. The gospel has been preached and become better understood, so that it has reached us, and we are looking for the fulfilment of the promises made to Abraham and to Mary and to many others. Luke 1:32, "He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David: and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." This is very plain language, and easy to be understood. If we take it as it reads it agrees with the promises made to Abraham. Was he not promised all the land of Canaan that he could see "for an everlasting possession," and that "in thee and thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed" ?

When Jesus reigns over the whole earth forever then this promise to Abraham will be fulfilled, as righteousness will cover the earth as the waters cover the sea. They shall not say one to the other, "know the Lord; for all shall know him from the least to the greatest." Then nothing shall hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain. Glorious conditions, for wars shall be abated, the earth shall bloom, the animal creation all shall have been made harmless, and God's will will be done on earth as it is done in heaven. May it soon come. J. E. Hogarth.

DON'T BE AFRAID TO BE RIGHT

How about it ? Are you afraid to take a stand for what you know is right, or are you waiting to see what someone else does, or do you fear the loss of a friend.

Well, if your friends are the right sort they will be glad to know that you have the courage of your convictions.

Better be blunt to the point of rudeness and let people know where you stand on questions involving a moral standpoint than to be forever on the fence, not knowing which way to jump.

And beware of the so-called friend who tries to use his influence with you to make you do a certain thing when you are in doubt as to the morality of it.

The earlier in life you learn to use your own brain and exercise your own will-power the higher your standing in the community will be.

Be slow to decide, if you must, but once you have mapped out the right course, be independant enough to do right whether So-and-So does or not.

The world needs men and women who have the courage to stand up in the face of every opposition and try to do what they believe to be right. -- selected by Georgia Gazeley.

DON'T FORGET THE HELPING FUND

We whose names are given below, believing it to be our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the manager of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. Those whose circumstances do not permit of the paying for the paper themselves should notify the manager, signifying their willingness to accept the paper, and it will be cheerfully sent from the proceeds of this fund.

EDITORIAL

Brother Alfred Titman has returned from New York, where he has been for a considerable time.

Sister J. Kauffman, of Springfield, O., was a welcome visitor at the Lord's table December 30th.

Misfortune is like the waves of the sea: when one is broken another follows. The end of one trouble is the beginning of another.

Brother Eugene C. Miller is in the non-combative service of the army. His address is 54 Depot Brigade, Barrack B. B. 52, Camp Meade, Md. A line from any of our readers will be appreciated by our Brother, who is practically in prison, as he has not yet been assigned to duty.

Many brethren and sisters are dissatisfied with themselves because they find that they act in the performance of duty from a desire to obtain "the recompense of reward." This is a right motive by which to bestir ourselves to religious activity; it has scriptural sanction, and ought to influence every son and daughter of God. Of course the constraining love of Chrsit is a stronger and sweeter motive to action. Still the emotion of love may not be felt when love is really the spring of all we do. Our hearts may be going on, constantly striving to please our Savior, even when we do not feel any perceptible emotion in the contemplation of his character. Some minds never feel ardent emotion of any kind; they have a calm, uniform feeling, rarely rising above the ordinary level. Such people act from duty till it becomes a habit, and are as really constrained by love as those who feel strong emotion. Devotion when regulated by fixed principle is more likely to be permanent and uniform. When we are actuated by feeling, and depend on this, we inevitably have seasons when the stimulus of strong feeling cannot be sustained; and then if we are not under the influence of a sense of duty and a fixed purpose of heart to serve God, we are sure to waver and grow cold. The thing to be desired and sought in the service of the truth is strength of purpose, a resolution increasing in energy every day, corroborated by acts of self-denial. Love is sure to follow in the wake of such a service.

THE STRUCTURE OF THE BOOK AND THE MESSAGES TO THE SEVEN CHURCHES IN GENERAL OUTLINE

Sermon Notes by the Editor on the Apocalypse

Revelation 2nd and 3rd Chapters

I. The Structure of the Book

1. Like a telescope: the primary vision of the Son of Man in the first chapter is like the outer case of the telescope; it contains all the inner cases. When drawn out, however, the primary vision contains the seven churches; the seventh church contains the seven trumpets: the seventh trumpet contains the seven vials: and the seventh vial contains the seven thunders.

2. All the churches are in the pre-resurrectional state—"a sad retrogression from the post-resurrectional state of glory depicted in the first chapter," you say; "and why"? Because

3. The end, which is first revealed, is the last developed (Rev. 1; 4; 11; 14; 15; 16).

II. The Messages to the Churches in General Outline

1. Each message is prefaced by an allusion to some feature of the Son of Man revealed in the first chapter, which comports with the nature of the message communicated.

2. Each one is written to "the angel of the church." Not a bishop, but the eldership of the church—a plurality (Rev. 2:7,10,11,13,23).

3. To each one the Lord says, "I know thy works:" he approves the good and condemns the bad (Rev. 2:2-7).

4. Each one is told what "the spirit saith," and that, like the whole of the Bible, the Apocalypse is not only for those immediately addressed, but for all who have "ears to hear" (Rev. 2:7; Matt. 13:9),

5. In each evil is cumulative and growing.

6. To each Christ's coming is urged as a motive to repentance (1).

7. In each a promise is given to the "overcomer."

(1) In the message to the church in Smyrna there are no express words which affirm the coming of Christ; but the reason of this omission is because Christ is revealed to this suffering church as he who was "dead and is alive" (Rev. 2:8); hence the "crown of life" he promises the faithful (vs. 10) is post-resurrectional "life" as opposed to post-resurrectional "death," "the second death" (vs. 11). In an epistle so manifestly post-adventual, it would have been indecorous and superfluous to have treated of the Lord's coming in a formal way.

COMMUNICATIONS

"They shall make known unto you all things which are done here" (Col. 4:9).

To The Restitution:

Enclosed postal note for another year's subscription to the dear Restitution. It is all I have, as we are isolated. We would like to have a minister, or some brother of the one faith come to see us, as we wish to be baptized. Some time ago I tried to get a minister to come to us, but failed, but hope to get one to come to us yet. I am trusting in the Lord, and am trying to live a Christian life.

Brother J. J. Heckman lives at Hobart, Okla., and we suggest that he attend to this call immediately. Such cases must not be neglected. If the need of funds hinders, let us supply the funds. —Editor.

Dear Brother Huggins:

As rumors are always worse than facts, if you wish you may publish the enclosed "statement" from my old home paper here.

We are living in times when it easy to make trouble for any one we have a spite against, as I know scores of men I could have in prison if I cared to make them trouble.

I have said nothing but what I believe the prophets and Christ taught, and have a clear conscience even though using some deceit I might have had no more trouble.

I do not know whether they may imprison me or not till my trial in the spring is over, but I am not so selfish as to worry about myself. I have sacrificed much for what I believed to be the truth during the twenty-eight years I have preached, and I believe that I have a few true friends who will not see my family suffer if I go to prison. Others have been imprisoned for teaching Christ's law of love and non-resistance of evil, and I may be another scapegoat. But I thank the Lord that since dropping the old shadowy sabbaths, that I have found the true rest by faith in Christ (Heb. 4), so that my tranquility of mind was never disturbed during my arrest, preliminary trial, or six days in jail in Hastings, Neb.

Never in the world's history was there a greater need for "the faith of Christ" or his "peace that passeth all understanding, to keep our minds and hearts through Christ Jesus" as "an anchor to the soul, sure and steadfast," while we "stand fast in the faith" and are "rooted and built up in him" who is "our refuge and strength, and very present help in trouble."

My wife's address is Mrs. Minnie Crow, Chanute, Kansas, 219 S. Wilson. She and the four girls at home I may have to leave in the care of the Lord and of his people. Surely no evil will befall them, nor plague come nigh them (Psa. 91) if we live close to the Lord and trust and serve him. Praise God for the fall of Jerusalem, and the sure realization soon of the hope of Israel, and the deliverance of God's people! "If I forget thee, O Jerusalem; may my right hand forget her cunning" (Psa. 137; 102; 122; Isa, 60). W. L. Crowe.

A STATEMENT

Being at the home of a German at Ayr, Neb., and not asking the people for money, a misunderstanding of my lectures on prophecy and on the law of Christ, led to suspicion that I was a German spy, or pro-German and disloyal.

Our church people were supporting my family at home, as can be proven by writing to Grace Lawrence, of Burlington Kans., or from our religious papers, and I took free-will offerings when handed me for my own expenses.

I have not opposed the war, as Abraham Lincoln did the Mexican war, or as Lloyd George did the Boer war, but I taught that it had to be in fulfilment of prophecy.

I am not a pacifist wanting a premature peace, as I taught that the war must be fought till the monarchs fell and a world of democracy was set up but that Christ's coming was the only hope of world peace.

I have nothing but detestation for the abominable Turkish atrocities, and for the beastly Kaiser's treachery and barbarism, and for the cruelty of the brutal element of the German people.

I can easily prove nothing pro-German in my lectures, but if I have to be imprisoned for quoting "love your enemies," "blessed are the merciful," "resist not evil," "overcome evil with good," "do good to them that hate you, and pray for them that despitefully use you and persecute you," etc., then I will have Christ and Paul and the prophets for my companions in prison, and I shall resign myself to whatever befalls me.

My only regrets will be that if a fine is imposed or a prison sentence, that it will punish my mother, and my family, deprived of my support, more than it will myself.

Being asked as to what I would do if my home were attacked, I said, "I would try to defend it without killing anybody, but that those who fully obeyed the Lord, had the promise that "no evil shall befall thee, nor any plague come nigh thy dwelling" (Psa. 91). But that if we lost our life for Christ's sake and the gospel that we were promised life eternal."

Mr. Crowe's parents were born in North Ireland and came to St. Paul in 1881 and became citizens of the U. S. before any of their boys were of age. The elder Mr. Crowe does not agree with his son that a man should seek a non-combative place in the war, but that if he were in the army he would want a combative place.

Mr. Crowe, Jr., says that he taught the church people that they could serve their country in the army of producers, or if drafted, in some non-combative service, and still fully obey Christ, but that the church and the world were distinct bodies, and that church and state should be separate in this age, as the United States constitution teaches. He says:

"Being out of jail on $5.000.00 bond, I shall endeavor in the future to preach on salvation from sin, holiness, purity, honesty and spiritual life, and omit reference to the war in any way that could be construed as disloyalty. Further than this I do not care to discuss with any one the merits or demerits of the case."

"And when its force expended,
The gloomy storm had ended;
And as the sunrise splendid
Came rushing o'er the sea;
I knew as day was breaking,
My little girls were waking,
And kneeling low and making
A prayer at home for me." –W. L. Crowe In "The Phonograph," St Paul, Neb.

THE LOUD CRY OF THE MARTYRS

Rev. 6:9-11

Inasmuch as the fifth seal and the martyrs are under consideration, I will offer a few remarks on the subject. It is admitted by all that the language of this seal is symbolic, in harmony with what is written in Rev. 1:1, that the angel "signified" the vision to John. That is, taught him by signs.

John being the agent by which the signs are made known to the servants of the Deity, he saw "under the altar"—the altar of sacrifice—"the souls" of the martyrs. The souls are the persons, according to the Scripture use of the term soul. They had blood, and that should confirm the truth that they were real persons who had been slain on account of the truth which they held. We should not make literal what God has declared to be symbolic. These souls cried with a loud voice for God's vengeance on their enemies, They had been killed, and could not cry literally if they so desired. To do so would be contrary to the spirit of Christians who sacrifice their lives for their faith. Their Lord taught them to pray for their enemies, and when on the cross said, "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." And Stephen, bing stoned, cried with a loud voice "Lord, lay not this sin to their charge" (Acts 7:60). John Huss when at the stake exclaimed: "May thy infinite mercy, O my God, pardon this injustice of mine enemies." On the same principle that the blood of Abel cried to God, he being the righteous soul. Should not the blood of millions slain on the same account, cry with a loud voice to God for vengeance? These martyrs were a large host.

The question remains, When did this scene meet its counterpart in the history of the world? It being a prophecy we should endeavor to leoate its fulfilment.

The chronology of these events is important. The chronology of the fifth seal corresponds with the time of the Reformation in the fore part of the 16th century. Therefore we should look there to find the counterpart of the fifth seal, the most prominent being the loud cry.

Only events of world-wide importance are revealed by the opening of the seals. The martyrs were called "heretics," and their faith a pestilential disease; and for the good of the community they must be destroyed. Luther found a Bible, and by its perusal came to the conclusion that the pope was Antichrist. A few extracts from D'Aubigne's history of the Reformation will give the reader an idea of the mind of the reformers. Luther says: "The time for silence is past: the time for speaking has arrived. The mysteries of Antichrist must at length be unveiled" (page 158). The pope issued a bull against Luther; Germany waited to see what the reformer would do. Would he stand fire? All eyes were fixed on Wittemberg. Luther did not keep his contemporaries long in suspense. On the 4th of November 1520, he replied with a discharge of thunder, by publishing his treatise against the bull of Antichrist: "What errors, what impostures," said he, "have crept in among the poor people under the cloak of the church, and the pretended infallibility of the pope? How many souls have thus been lost, how much blood shed, what murders committed, what kingdoms ruined" (page 172).

A holy fear took possession of men's souls. They saw Antichrist seated on the pontificial throne. This new idea, an idea which derived great force from the prophetical description being thrown by Luther into the midst of his age, gave Rome a dreadful shock. Faith in the divine word was substituted for that which till then, the church alone had obtained; and the power of the pope, which had long been adored by the people, became the object of their hatred and terror (page 180). They had learned that the pope was the very Antichrist, who was to persecute the saints; this was eloquently proclaimed by Luther, by Menancthon, and by about three hundred ministers of the reformed religion.

And if the blood of Abel, one righteous soul slain, cried to God from the ground; how much more so did the blood of millions slain by Antichrist cry with a loud voice for vengeance to God whose throne is the habitation of justice and judgment. When the eyes of the people were opened, and they saw that the slain of Antichrist were the saints of God, did not their blood, the blood of the slain, cry with a loud voice for vengeance like the blood of Abel? When the mass of the reformers believed that the martyrs were the saints, they counted them righteous, and thus gave them "white robes," the symbol of righteousness.

Dead things are represented as speaking in parables and in symbolic scenes. Abel was dead when his blood cried. The hire of the laborers, kept back by fraud, cried (James 5:4). "For the stone shall cry out of the wall, and the beam out of the timber shall answer it" (Heb. 2:11). This principle of inanimate things speaking is in evidence in this book whenever a symbol is heard speaking.

In relation to the chronology of the fifth seal:

First.—The argument for the time of the protestant reformation is based on the symbolism of the number seven, which is evident by the messages to the seven churches only, when there were many more passed by in silence. The seven mentioned spans the the time periods from Patmos to the end of this dispensation. And the same symbolism will place the fifth seal far on the way toward this dispensation.

Second.—According to Daniel 7:8 the horn that comes up after and among the ten is the power that makes war and prevails against the saints (verse 21). That is the papal power, and did not obtain power to persecute until some time in the sixth or seventh century, and after the rise of the ten horns. And in the text it is written, that they should rest "yet for a little season, until their fellow servants should be killed as they were, should be fulfilled." Indicating that they had already been resting for some time, and that from that time to the judgment was but "a little season." All these considerations point to a later date than that of the primitive martyrs. And again, if we apply the scene to the primitive martyrs, we exalt a mole hill above a mountain, a rivulet above a big river.

An extract from Gibbon will finish this article: "In the Netherlands alone, more than 100,000 of the subjects of Charles the V. are said to have suffered by the hand of the executioner; and this extraordinary number is attested by Grotius, a man of genius and learning, who preserved his moderation amidst the fury of contending sects, and who composed the annals of his own age and country, at a time when the invention of printing had facilitated the means of intelligence, and increased the danger of detection. If we are obliged to submit our belief to the authority of Grotius, it must be allowed, that the number of Protestants, who were executed in a single province and a single reign, far exceeded that of the primitive martyrs in the space of three centuries, and of the Roman Empire" (Gibbon 2. p.85).

Be sure that on life's common street
Are crossways when God's chariots meet.

The little cares that fretted me I lost them yesterday, out in the fields with God.

Aye drive the nail that will go.

LIFE

What is life? It is the gift of God. How did God give life? He created a being out of the dust of the ground and called it man; and to give man life he breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and this man became a living soul (Gen. 2:7) . That is, causing him to breathe made him alive. God also created every beast of the field, and every fowl of the air, out of the ground, so that man and beast originated from the same source, and get their life from the same source, viz., by breathing the air, or breath of life. "For that which befalleth the sons of men, befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them, as the one dieth, so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath: so that a man hath no pre-eminence above a beast. All go unto one place; all are of the dust, and all turn to dust again" (Eccl. 3:19,20). Man abideth not: he is like the beasts that perish (Psa. 49:12,20). "And all flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of beast, and of every creeping thing, and every man: all in whose nostrils was the breath of life died" (Gen. 7.21, 22).

Joshua in conquering the seven kings destroyed all the souls. utterly destroyed all that breathed, and at Hagos there was not any left to breathe. They were all deprived of life (Josh. 10:28,35,37, 39, 40; 11:11,14). Then where is man superior to the beasts of the field? God gave him dominion over them and over all the earth (Gen. 1:26,28). God named man, and Adam named the beasts of the field (Gen. 2:19). Is this life, that man and beasts get by breathing, all the life there is? To beasts, it is; but to man there is another life promised on conditions. This life is also the gift of God. What kind of a life is it? Eternal life. What are the conditions? "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved" (Mark 16:16). "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord" (Rom. 6:23).

To preach the gospel is to teach that Christ is the Son of God; that he is the seed of Abraham; that through him all nations will be blessed; that he died to save mankind; that he arose from the dead, and cannot die any more, which is eternal life; and this endless life is to be given to all that believe the gospel, and are baptized into Christ, and live true followers of Christ to the end of this present life. God has promised to send his Son from heaven for the very purpose of raising to eternal life all those that died in Christ. Those that have died without Christ have no promise of a resurrection, and those that died in Christ will be raised to "eternal life," and will live with Christ on this earth forever. This life we now live by breathing is full of woe and sadness, and is not such as one wants to endure forever. We get this present life by natural sources through Adam and his seed, and death ends it.

To get eternal life we have to seek for it by patient continunace in well doing (Rom. 2:7). Eternal life has no sorrows nor pains, but is an endless life of God's blessing. We get this life by serving God now; and we lose this life by serving man now. Look to the reward and strive to serve God. "Fight the good fight of faith, lay hold on eternal life" (1 Tim. 6:12); Job 27:34).

Memory Verses: Micah 6:8; Titus 2:13,14

Golden Text: Prov. 13:6

If our young readers will let me know the date of their birth, I will mail them a birthday card when the auspicious day arrives, thus creating a stronger bond of affection between us.

A Profitable Week-end

During one of the week-ends we visited some friends, and on Sunday we went with them to church, the First Presbyterian Church of Brunswick, N. J.

On entering we were given a word of warm welcome together with a hearty hand clasp; also a copy of "The Church Bulletin," on the front page of which was printed

This Church Offers:

A Hand of Welcome
A Place of Worship
A Message of Life
A Sphere of Work
A Vision of Hope.

And a little further down the page we read:

"Whosoever thou art that worshipest in this church, enter it not without the spirit of reverence, and leave it not without one prayer to God for thyself, for him who ministers and for those who worship here."

On opening "The Bulletin" we saw this on the third page:

"It is a great pleasure to receive a number into the membership of our Church on this Sabbath. It is 'as the gleaning of grapes when the vintage is done.' May this vine of the Lord's planting long flourish, bearing continually rich and abundant clusters."

And on the same page was this bit of timely advice:

"No preacher gets any inspiration from an empty seat. The promise, 'Where I have recorded My Name, there will I meet thee,' means in the place of Public Worship, and applies to every service."

And a little further down, all in capital letters, this met our eye:

"DO A GOOD TURN DAILY WITHOUT REWARD"

And as a fitting final was this classic which is well

Worth Repeating

"My Church is the place where God is worshipped, the word of God is preached, the power of God is felt, the spirit of God is manifested, the love of God is revealed and the grace of God communicated.

"May it ever be the home of my soul, the altar of my devotion, the hearth of my faith, the centre of my affection and my foretaste of heaven.

"I owe it my zeal my benevolence and my prayers. When I neglect its services I injure its good name, lessen its power, discourage its Pastor and members and I chill my own soul."

Above the preacher's head was an illuminated sign, reading:

NOT OURSELVES BUT CHRIST

2 Cor. 4:5

But the best of all was the talk of the Pastor, a man of 75 years, on the subject of "Christ our Hope," the equal of which would be hard to find; because it was logical, convincing, touching both heart and head, and every word the truth.

After leaving the edifice the thought came to me, "Why can not the membership of the church of God at Brooklyn be made more attractive?" and immediately the second thought, "As far as I have power to make them so, they shall be"; and having made this resolution I felt better, for as a church we truly have "The Message of Life" as well as a "Vision of Hope" and surely we understand the required service due our fellowship to accept any "sphere of work" offered us—yes, and even seek it—also to extend to all members, also visitors the right "hand of welcome" at any service, and to generally make myself so necessary to the brethren that if, for a day, circumstances might cause my absence, I would be missed: at all times working together with God in all things, whatsoever my hand findeth to do, doing it with my might, thus showing forth the love of God to the glory of the Father, the praise of his Christ, and our own upbuilding.

And brethren, if in any point this little article is of service to you, you may apply it, thus making the "week-end" of profit to you also.

Wise Sayings By Many People

"Have you somewhat to do tomorrow; do it today."

Pay what you owe, then you will know what you own."

"Let those who serve you best serve you most."

"Milk is milk, but there is a great difference between skimmed milk and the unskimmed article."

"Something almost always Turns Up for the Man who is hard to Turn Down."

"No democracy is real where the politicians are not afraid of the people."

"Because majorities are often wrong, it does not follow that minorities are always right."

"Some people never get up in the world because they never get up in the morning."

"Men take credit to themselves for their virtues and successes, and blame heredity, circumstances and fate for their vices and failures."

"As men grow older they slow up in effort, not so much though lack of power as because success and failure have grown to look so much alike."

"An alibi may fool the judge, the jury, and even your own lawyer. But your wife and the recording angel will know about what the facts were."

"Every business has in it a lot of men with such a grouch on their jobs that they would quit them in a minuite . . . if they were not afraid they would have to go to work somewhere."

"For want of the nail the shoe was lost.
For want of the shoe the horse was lost.
For want of the horse the rider was lost.
For want of the rider the battle was lost.
And all for the want of a horse shoe nail."

Our Weekly Puzzle

"Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he loved us, and sent his Son to be the propitiation for our sins. Beloved, if God so loved us, we ought also to love one another."

Where can this be found?
Answer next issue.

Answer to puzzle in last issue:
The passage was written by Paul to the church at Galatia and can be found in Gal. 6:9.

O Church of God, arise and do thy work!
Let every heart be kindled with true fire!
Love greatly, hate the wrong, be strong to serve!
Let Christ-like love each soul, each life, inspire.

QUESTIONS CONCERNING THE SABBATH

Does not the fact that a "week" being spoken of in Gen. 20:27 prove that the people in Jacob's day counted time by weeks—that is, from one sabbath to another?

Answer: Not until it is proved that they counted time from one sabbath to another. And prove that you cannot!

Besides: If the fact that "weeks" existed in those days proves a sabbath observance, then, the fact that time when being measured by the revolution of the moon (from one new moon to another) proves that new moon observance in those days!

As well argue that everyone that died in Jacob's day died on the sabbath, and that on the sabbath began the mourning which lasted 'seven days.' See Gen. 50:10. Or, as consistently reason that everybody in those days got married on the sabbath, and the "seven days of the" marriage feast began on Saturday! See Judges 14:12.

But Noah counted "seven days" during the flood several times. Does that not prove that the sabbath existed in his days?

Answer: No! It does not! Let us examine. We have a table that we prepared, covering the time in the flood for a year. Let us look at some things in connection with Noah. "seven days" as this table shows, for you know, "figures do not lie," and we can prove that we are not making them lie. Let us follow our lunar calendar now.

"For yet seven days, and I will cause it to rain" (Gen. 7:4). The rain commenced on "the seventeenth day of the" "second month" (Gen. 7:11). Let us say that the "seventeenth" was a sabbath. This is precisely what these people affirm who believe that the "seven days" of Noah commenced with and ended with a sabbath.

Very well: "The ark rested in the seventh month, on the seventeenth day of the month, upon the mountain Ararat" (Gen. 8:4). This was just five months (to the day) after it began raining. But this very day (the seventeenth of the seventh month) would according to the Sabbatarian claim of the seven-day cycle be a sabbath. Now read on: "On the first day" of the "tenth month" "were the tops of the mountains seen" (Gen. 8:5). That would be on our Monday.

"And it came to pass at the end of forty days, that Noah opened the window of the ark" (Gen. 8:6). What did he do on this day? "He sent forth a raven" (Gen. 8:7). The fortieth day would be the eleventh day of the eleventh month. And that very day was a sabbath—according to the cycle claim that Sabbatarians make.

"He stayed yet other seven days; and again he sent forth the dove out of the ark" (Gen. 7:10). This was a sabbath again. At the end of "seven days" the dove was sent again, and that on the sabbath of course, if the cycle claim is sound. But worse: "And it came to pass in the six hundred and first year, in the first month, the first day of the month" that "Noah removed the covering of the ark" (Gen. 8:13). And if our friends are correct in their cycle claim, our table proves that this very first day of the first month was a sabbath!!

More: "In the second month, on the seven and twentieth day . . . . God spake unto Noah, saying, Go forth of the ark, thou, thy wife, and thy sons, and thy son's wives with thee. Bring forth with thee every living thing . . . . of all flesh" (Gen. 8:14-17). And this very twenty-seventh day of that second month was a sabbath—if our cycle of weeks defenders are right!

Now friends: If the argument of the week cycle in Noah's day that Sabbatarians put forth so zealously is worth a pin, it makes Noah live in open defiance of all sabbath-law! For he flew birds three successive times on that day; tore off the roof from the ark on another sabbath, and to finish up his desecration (?) he moved "every living thing" out of the ark on still another sabbath!! We often wonder how Sabbatarians can be so persistent in some of their arguments.—J. J. Schaumburg.

BIBLE LESSONS ON FIRST PRINCIPLES

The Editor of "The Restitution" is now preparing for publication a series of Bible lessons which are designed to explain every essential feature of gospel truth. Three lessons of the series have just been published entitled respectively, "Introduction," "The Word of God in Threefold Aspect." and "The Gospel of the Kingdom the Only True Gospel." Valuable for conducting Bible studies and classes and for giving Berean lessons, as well as for individual study. Written primarily to teach the elemental principles of the gospel to candidates preparatory to baptism. Three cents for one copy; twenty-five cents the dozen.

DENYING THE FAITH

A sermon which is both doctrinal and practical. 20 pages; one copy 5 cents; 40 cents per dozen.

"THE SMOKE OF THEIR TORMENT ASCENDETH UP FOREVER"

A sermon of doctrinal and prophetic value. A profound subject made simple. 12 pages. One copy 3 cents; 12 copies 25 cents.

THE DEATH OF CHRIST

A doctrinal discourse setting forth logically and scripturally the meaning of death and its relation to the gospel of life. 3 cents each; 25 cents per dozen.

PARADISE LOST; PARADISE REGAINED

A sermon in which every text in the Bible where paradise occurs, either in the English or original tongue, is quoted and explained. 5 cents each; 12 for 40 cents.

THE BIBLE: ITS PRINCIPLES AND TEXTS

As indicated by its title, this book is divided into three sections: the first consists of a disquisition on "The Bible"; the second simplifies its "Principles" in formulated propositions; and the third expounds in a homiletic manner particular "Texts." As an Editor the Author has untied many knotty questions submitted to him by readers; more than a hundred and fifteen are considered in this volume. One copy $1.10; two copies $2.00.

THE END OF THE AGE

Hark! what tumult's raging yonder?
Satan's hosts are marching on;
Canons roar like peals of thunder,
Valiant soldiers dead and gone.

Blood is flowing free as water;
Have the prophets not foretold?
Men like sheep are led to slaughter,
This the age of greed and gold.

Hear the distant chariot rumble;
'Tis the coming of our God;
He'll protect the true and humble,
They have passed beneath his rod.

When we see him we'll be like him,
In his presence we shall shine.
War shall vanish from before him,
Banished by a hand divine

Then forever peace and glory
Shall this wide earth bathe in joy;
Saints forever tell the story,
Of happiness without alloy.

THE DESTRUCTIVE AND CONSTRUCTIVE WORK ATTENDING THE ESTABLISHMENT OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD

SETTING UP THE KINGDOM OF GOD IS BOTH A DESTRUCTIVE AND CONSTRUCTIVE WORK

I. When Christ Returns to Establish the Kingdom of God the Earth is Baptized in Judgment-fire (Isa. 66:15, 16; Psa. 50:3-6; Mal. 4:1,2; Jer. 30:23,24; Psa. 21:9; 11:6; Jer. 25:33).

II. Nevertheless in Wrath God Remembers Mercy. The out-goings of his wrath are destructive, deadly, and extensive, but not universal (Hab. 3:2; Gen. 6:7,8,17,18; 7:23; 8:1,18,19-22; 9:1; 2 Pet. 2:5; Isa. 34; 35; Jer. 4; Zeph. 1; Acts 2: 19-21; 3:19-23).

III. In Mercy God also Remembers Justice. The outflowings of his mercy are constructive, rehabilitating, and magnificent, but circumscribed.

(a) The subjects of the kingdom consist only of a "remnant," a residue composed of the meek, willing, and well-disposed of mankind.

(b) These "remnant" subjects are composed almost entirely of infants and children.

(a) Isa. 1:19,20; 24:6; 11:11,16; Zeph. 3:12; Zech. 14:16; Micah 4:1-7; Ezek. 39:2; 20:33,38.

(b) Deut. 1:39; Psa. 8:2; Matt. 21:15,16; Psa. 22:30, 31; 102:18,28; 127:3; Isa. 11:6,8; Zech. 8:5; 13:7,8,9; Luke 18:16.

SYNTHETIC REMARKS ON THE LESSON

SETTING UP THE KINGDOM OF GOD IS BOTH A DESTRUCTIVE AND CONSTRUCTIVE WORK

In the last lesson we learned that it is God's purpose to "send Jesus Christ" to the earth (Acts 3:20) to destroy all the kingdoms which now exist, and to set up a kingdom of his own (Dan. 2:44). We come now to consider the circumstances which will attend this prodigious political transformation. Will Christ creep upon the nations secretly and decimate "the powers that be" quietly, or will he come when wars are prevalent and troubles are rife? Instead of coming to redeem a saved world, according to the misconceptions of orthodox missionary propagandists, he comes in harmony with scriptural representations,

I. To Baptise the Earth in Judgment-fire. The change from the kingdoms of this world to the kingdom of our Lord and his Christ (Rev. 11:15) will be attended by "a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation" (Dan. 12:1). "Evil shall go forth from nation to nation" (Jer. 25:32,33). God has a controversy with the nations, and directly pleads with all flesh (vss. 30, 31). To natural, political, and military troubles, without a parallel in history, which cause "men's hearts to fail them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth" (Luke 21:26), will be added God's visible, judicial operations upon the nations. Natural and national perplexities will be supplemented by miraculous retributions. Vengeance of a most deadly kind overspreads the earth. Multitudes perish by war and pestilence; thousands more fall victims to the fire which will descend after the manner of the judgments upon Sodom and Gomorrah (Ezek. 39:6). "A fire shall devour before him" (Psa. 50:3-6) which falls "with pain upon the head of the wicked" (Jer. 30:23,24). Revealed in "flaming fire," Christ comes to take vengeance upon sinners, and to destroy them with an "everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power" (2 Thess. 1:8,9). To give some idea as to the extent of this advent-destruction the prophets write: "The slain of the Lord shall be many" (Isa. 66:

* Published by the Fellow Helpers' Society.

16); "The slain of the Lord shall be at that day from one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth" (Jer. 25:33). Out of this world-wide destruction comes this exhortation and warning: "Take heed to yourselves lest . . . . that day come upon you unawares. For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth. Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man" (Luke 21:34-36). If God's own loved ones must "watch and pray always" to be "accounted worthy to escape" this snare that springs upon "the face of the whole earth" at Christ's advent, what chance of "escape" do you see, dear reader, for the world which neither watches, nor prays, nor believes in the coming of the Lord? "They shall not escape" (1 Thess. 5:3). If God's own dear ones, after watching and praying without intermission, "escape" with the skin of their teeth (Job 19:20); if "the righteous scarcely be saved" (1 Pet. 4:18), are not Russellites, Restorationists, and Universalists in a precarious business when they promise the world "escape" from this world-wide "snare"; and then having escaped, another chance for life after the Lord comes? "With lies ye make the heart of the righteous sad, whom I have not made sad; and strengthened the hands of the wicked, that he should not return from his wicked way, by promising him life" (Ezek. 13:22). Instead of "strengthening the wicked" to continue in his wickedness by a "promise of life" and a "fair chance" in the coming age; instead of giving the world Russellite opiates to put them to sleep in sin, and stereotyped arguments of Universalists to make them feel safe in iniquity, "the man of God" (2 Tim. 3:17) must proclaim the word of God in stentorian voice: "Before the fierce anger of the Lord come upon you, before the day of the Lord's anger come upon you. Seek ye the Lord, all ye meek of the earth, which have wrought his judgment; seek righteousness, seek meekness: it may be ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger" (Zeph. 2:2,3). Seeking the Lord, righteousness, and meekness "before the day of the Lord's anger comes upon you" is here twice categorically commanded. Even after we have "wrought his judgment" the promise of our safety is only conditional: "It may be ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger." Russellism pledges to all men an unconditional and non-forfeitable "chance" in the coming age. This false and seductive system of religion promises all who have neither sought the Lord, righteousness, nor meekness, that they shall be "hid in the day of the Lord's anger"; that they shall all "escape"; it therefore promises more to the world unconditionally than God has promised to his own sons and daughters conditionally. This doctrine of a "fair chance" for all men, both dead and living, in the kingdom age, is the most audacious dogma that has been invented since theological quacks began to temporize with the word of God.

II. In Wrath God Remembers Mercy. Inasmuch as human governments are overthrown, the Papal and Protestant systems of religion abolished, and the reprobates of the earth expurgated at Christ's coming, in connection with the establishment of the kingdom of God, the reader who has been led thus far kingdomward will no doubt be ready to ask in anxiety, "Who, then, are to be 'hid in the day of the Lord's anger'; who are to 'escape' the devastating judgments of God which accompany the Lord's advent; who are to enjoy the benign reign of Christ as subjects of the kingdom of God?" This question is easily answered when we understand that in wrath God remembers mercy (Hab. 3:2). This arrangement permits the prudent to foresee the evil and "hide" themselves; but "the simple pass on and are punished" (Prov. 27:12). Setting up the kingdom of God is both a destructive and constructive work. To some minds these two words, "destruction" and "construction," and the ideas represented by them, are mutually exclusive. They are not antagonistic: in fact they are the best of friends. They are placed in successive chapters of the Bible, the one following the other logically and consistently, to show their amity. The thirty-fourth chapter of Isaiah is full of stalking destruction; the thirty-fifth overflows with permanent construction when "the desert shall blossom as the rose." And as further suggesting the friendliness of these terms, they are placed side by side in the same texts. Thus in Dan. 2:44 the God of heaven is said to "set up a kingdom," which is a work of construction, upbuilding, and restitution. In the same verse this kingdom is said to "break in pieces and consume all these (other) kingdoms," which is a work of demolition. To those who think clearly "the restitution of all things" in Acts 3:21 is in admirable harmony with the destruction of the rebellious (vs. 23). Destruction and construction, restitution and demolition, then, are not incompatible and mutually exclusive terms and ideas.

These discriminative observations help us to understand and appreciate the dual nature of the kingdom as found in the work of destruction and restitution. God's judgments are fully released at the return of Christ, for he comes to take vengeance (2 Thess. 1:8); they are destructive, deadly, and extensive, but they do not totally exterminate mankind. World-burners believe that the earth will be depopulated at Christ's advent, while others, more extreme still, think the globe itself will be annihilated. Both theories dishonor God and his word (Num. 14:21; Isa. 11:9; Hab. 2:14; Isa. 45:18; Eccl. 1:4; Psa. 104:5). Both give to a heated imagination the wings of a wild goose. The first is content in the thought that the kingdom of God will be set up on an ash bank, and that Christ and the saints will reign over a pile of cinders; the second is satisfied with Christ's kingdom and Lordship exercised over vacuity! Such unmitigated judgments as these ideas represent have not happened since the world began. During the course of God's dealings with man, extending over many centuries, his judgments have been almost numberless; but in no instance have they exterminated mankind entirely. The depopulation of the earth by universal destruction when Jesus comes has not one precedent in all divine history to sustain it. Take the flood as an illustration of God's most astringent judgment. Mercy shines even in that opaque catastrophe. If we are told God destroyed "man and beast" (Gen. 6:7), this modification is immediately added, "But Noah found grace in the sight of the Lord" (vs. 8). If "every living substance was destroyed" (Gen. 7:23), the pronouncement is mitigated subsequently in the words, "God remembered Noah, and every living thing, and all the cattle that were with him in the ark" (Gen. 8:1). "As the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of Man be" (Matt. 24:37). Since a remnant of men and animals were spared from death during the deluge in Noe's day, and the coming of Christ is compared to that day, are we not within the confines of Scripture, logic, and analogy in saying that a remnant will be preserved through advent-judgments?

As some "escaped" with their life from Sodom's destruction (Gen. 19:17-23), so at Christ's coming some are to be saved from death notwithstanding the conflagration (2 Pet. 2:6-9). As the spared remnant in Noe's day survived the flood, and afterwards made a burnt-offering, "and the Lord smelled a sweet savor," and blessed them in fruitfulness and multiplication, and commissioned them to exercise dominion in the new earth (Gen. 8:20,21; 9:1-3), so will it be when Christ comes. This conclusion is not reached through a prolix process of dubious reasoning; it is explicitly declared in the word of God. Out of the darkness of the flood twinkles this star of promise: "I will not again curse the ground any more for man's sake, ... neither will I again smite any more every living thing as I have done" (Gen. 8:21). Granting, then, that in the flood there was maximum destruction, here is the pledge of the Almighty never to "smite again" to the same extent. Here is "comfort" concerning "the ground which the Lord hath cursed" (Gen. 5:29, margin). To show how world-burners nullify this promise and comfort of God we will quote from "Bible Readings," a Seventh-day Adventists work, page 219:

"In what condition will the earth be after the coming of Christ? 'I beheld the earth, and lo, it was without form and void; and the heavens, and they had no light.' 'I beheld and lo, the fruitful place was a wilderness, and all the cities thereof were broken down at the presence of the Lord, and by his fierce anger' (Jer. 4:23,26; Isa. 24:1-3).

"Will any man be living on the earth at that time? 'I beheld, and lo, there was no man, and all the birds of heaven were fled' (Jer. 4:25; Zeph. 1:3)."

This quotation shows that world-burners understand and teach that advent-judgments are astringent, depopulating the earth, and reducing it to chaos. It also exhibits how surreptitiously they handle the word of God. On page 220 of "Bible Readings" the writer says through stress of necessity, "The saints are taken to heaven at the coming of Christ." If he has correctly interpreted Jer. 4:23, which he quotes to prove that the earth will be "without form and void," heaven will also be involved in this chaotic condition: "And the heavens, and they had no light." It cannot be an enrapturing prospect for the saints to be taken to heaven—a place where there is "no light"! Such prattle as this cannot stand the steelblue light of reason. The fact is, the texts cited in "Bible Readings" are garbled instead of quoted. They are historic, not prophetic; and the judgments which they enunciate are expressly qualified and hedged about with ameliorative features. Jer. 4:23,26 applies to Judah and Jerusalem (vss. 3,14), and the 27th verse, which the author of "Bible Readings" did not care to quote, reads: "The whole land shall be desolate; yet will I not make a full end." Destruction and preservation, justice and mercy, are both in this passage; and although world-burners have two eyes they can see only one thing: justice, destruction. They are blind in one eye. Isa. 24:1-3 is misquoted, too. "The land shall be utterly emptied, and utterly spoiled" (vs. 3) are words that catch the eye of world-burners every time; but they are totally blind to the effulgence of heavenly light which shines with a halo of glory in the 6th verse: "Therefore hath the curse devoured the earth, and they that dwell therein are desolate: therefore the inhabitants of the earth are burned, and few men left." Again, Zeph. 1:3 is quoted to prove the depopulation of the earth, "I will consume man and beast." Before the prophecy concludes, however, mercy is mixed with wrath in these words: "I will also leave in the midst of thee an afflicted and poor people, and they shall trust in the name of the Lord. The remnant of Israel shall not do iniquity. . . . . The Lord will rejoice over thee with joy; he will rest in his love, he will joy over thee with singing" (Zeph. 3:12,13,17). These readings show that the very Scriptures which are quoted to prove that the earth is without inhabitants after Christ comes, when closely read, declare that God does not "make a full end"; that a "few men are left"; and that "an afflicted and poor people" survive as a "remnant" whom God loves, and over whom he rejoices and sings. God made the earth to be inhabited (Isa. 45:18), and world-burners cannot annul his purpose. While it is true that God puts away the wicked like dross at the coming of Christ (Psa. 119:119), the heart-building truth remains: "Yet will I leave a remnant that ye may have some that shall escape the sword among the nations" (Ezek. 6:8). To this sublime truth this divine assurance is added: "And the remnant that is escaped of the house of Judah shall again take root downward, and bear fruit upward: for out of Jerusalem shall go forth a remnant, and they that escape out of Mount Zion: the zeal of the Lord of hosts shall do this" (Isa. 37:31,32).

III. In Mercy God Remembers Justice. Doubtless the reader now sees with a clear vision that the theory which burns up the globe, depopulates the earth, and translates the saints to heaven when Christ comes is an error which utterly subverts the word of God, since it declares that "the righteous shall never be removed: but the wicked shall not inhabit the earth" (Prov. 10:30). "The righteous shall be recompensed in the earth" (Prov. 11:31). World-burning destroys entirely the kingdom of God, for it leaves no subjects to be governed by it. While these allegations are serious and true, to maintain equilibrium we must also recognize, on the other hand, that the out-flowings of God's mercy are limited like the shafts of his justice. God is just as well as merciful (Rom. 3:26). At the expense of his justice Russellism proposes to raise all men from the dead, and then give them a "chance" for eternal life as subjects in the kingdom of God. But the Savior has closed the door in the face of Russellism by these words: "All that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation" (John 5:28). The subterfuge often employed by "fair chance" advocates, that God will be propitious to those who suffer "damnation," amounts to a parody upon the words of our Lord. To change krisis, "damnation," to a trial or "chance" for life, is precluded by a contrast in the description of those who are raised: "They that have done evil" versus "they that have done good." Those that have "done good" include all the saints; those that have "done evil" embrace all the wicked—Balaam, Judas, etc. What "damnation" means for one that has "done evil," it means for all. Therefore if damnation means a chance or trial, Judas and all other evil doers are raised from the dead to be given a "chance"—none are punished with condemnation! Again, "the resurrection of damnation" stands opposed to "the resurrection of life." What is the opposite of "life"? Not a trial, not a chance; but death! The Savior says only two classes are raised from the dead—"they that have done good" and "they that have done evil"—and he says that "all" who are raised get one of two things, corresponding with what they have "done" in a previous life: they either procure "life" because they have "done good," or they receive "damnation" (death) because they have "done evil." Destiny at the resurrection depends upon what we do in our lifetime; what we sow now we shall reap then. There are only two classes and two destinies spoken of in the Scriptures in connection with the resurrection. Those who "have done evil" have sown to "the flesh" in Pauline phraseology; those who "have done good" have sown to "the spirit" according to the same authority; the "damnation" of which Christ speaks Paul calls "corruption"; and the "life" which our Lord mentions is "life everlasting" in Paul's interpretation (Gal. 6:7,8). The opposing destinies of these two classes are called "everlasting life" and "shame and everlasting contempt" by the prophet Daniel (Dan. 12:2). These contrasts in the character and destiny of those who are raised from the dead leave not an atom of room, not a space thin as a hair line, for a third class who are said by Larger Hope apologists to emerge from the grave to undergo curative discipline during the millenium. The agricultural law of "whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap" (Gal. 6:7), is entirely set aside by these errorists who teach that if we sow nothing we shall reap something. Something is reproduced from nothing! Constitutional passivity blesses all its helpless subjects with a resurrection which is followed by alluring and saving chances and opportunities. The Scriptures, on the contrary, are clear as a trumpet blast that there is no third class raised from the dead who have done neither good nor evil, who have sown neither to the flesh nor spirit; and whose destiny is neither "life" nor "damnation." No one is given a "chance" to be saved after being raised from the dead. The subjects of the kingdom are taken out of the living people at the coming of Christ. They are selected from the "neutrals" of the time. The word "remnant" means "few of many" (Jer. 42), and is often applied to the subjects of Christ's reign. Every time the Bible uses this word world-burners and Russellites are both rebuked. The first say there is not one man on the earth during the reign of Christ. There can be no "remnant" of nations where there are no nations. The second say there are unnumbered hordes of the vile and ignorant raised from the dead and put on probation during the millenium. A "remnant" does not mean a horde. Neither have any use for the word "remnant." The reader will therefore perceive in the propositions hereto appended, and which are amplified and sustained by the word of God, a complete refutation of both the world-burning and "fair chance" theories—two dogmas which have been invented by the flesh and made popular by the traditions of men.

(a) The Subjects of the Kingdom Consist of a "Remnant," a Residue Composed of the Meek, Willing, and Obedient of Mankind.

"The left of the nations" (Zech. 14:16).

"I will leave but the sixth part of thee" (Ezek. 39:2).

"The remnant of his people, which shall be left" (Isa. 11:16).

"I will also leave in the midst of thee an afflicted and poor people" (Zeph. 3:12).

"With fury will I rule over you: . . . . I will purge out the rebels, and them that transgress against me" (Ezek. 20:33,38).

"I will make her that halted a remnant, and her that was cast far off a strong nation: and the Lord shall reign over them" (Micah 4:7).

"The Son of Man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity; and shall cast them into a furnace of fire" (Matt. 13:41,42).

(b) The "Remnant" Subjects of the Kingdom are Composed Almost Exclusively of Infants and Children.

"The streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls playing . . . ." (Zech. 8:5).

"A little child shall lead them. . . . . And a sucking child shall play . . . ." (Isa.11:6,8).

"And the children crying in the temple, and saying, Hosanna to the son of David" (Matt. 21:15,16).

"Lo, children are an heritage of the Lord, and the fruit of the womb is his reward" (Psa. 127:3).

"The children of thy servants shall continue, and their seed shall be established forever before thee" (Psa. 102:28).

"Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not: for of such is the kingdom of God" (Luke 18:16).

"This shall be written for the generation to come, and the people which shall be created, shall praise the Lord" (Psa. 102:18).

"Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hast thou ordained strength because of thine enemies, that thou mightest still the enemy and the avenger" (Psa. 8:2).

"Whom shall he teach knowledge? and whom shall he make to understand doctrine? them that are weaned from the milk, and drawn from the breasts" (Isa. 28:9).

"A seed shall serve him; it shall be counted to the Lord for a generation. They shall come, and shall declare his righteousness unto a people that shall be born, that the Lord hath done this" (Psa. 22:30,31).

"I will turn mine hand upon the little ones. . . . . In all the land two parts therein shall be cut off and die; but the third shall be left therein. And I will bring the third part through the fire" (Zech. 13:7,8,9).

"Your little ones which you said should be a prey, and your children, which in that day had no knowledge between good and evil, they shall go in thither, and unto them will I give it, and they shall possess it" (Deut. 1:39).

THE NATURE OF MAN

This article was printed in our town paper while living in Belton, Mo., because we were not allowed to give reasons, in church, for our belief.

Being a firm believer in the word of the living God, believing his word to be the only true and perfect guide to the Christian, and being desirous to tell the people what I believe on this subject, and the reason why I believe it; I have therefore taken this plan to let my light shine that others might glorify their Father which is in heaven, of whom Paul says, "Without faith it is impossible to please him."

I cannot have faith in any one when I doubt their word. If they tell me anything and I guess at the truth of the subject, and believe it to be just opposite from what they say, I certainly would have no faith in what that person, no matter how much I might claim to have. If I have perfect confidence in any one, I always believe their word. The prophet says that "God is not a man that he should lie." Solomon says, "A faithful witness will not lie."

Our Savior says: "It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God." David says, "Thy word is true from the beginning."

I. I believe man to be wholly mortal, subject to death.

II. That there is no conscience existence between death and the resurrection. These are my reasons for this belief: Gen. 2:7: "The Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul." I cannot believe that it was an immortal soul that God breathed into man when the word says nothing of the kind. It says plainly. "Breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul."

Nor can I think that man became an immortal soul, or a never dying soul, because Gen. 2:16,17 says: "The Lord God commanded man, saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat, but of tree of the knowledge of good and evil thou shalt not eat of it, for in the day thou eatest thereof thou halt surely die." The margin says, "Dying thou shalt die." Gen. 3:3, "Of the fruit of the tree which is in the midst of the garden," God hath said, "ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it lest ye die." "Hast thou eaten of the tree of which I commanded thee that thou shouldst not eat? and the man said, The woman whom thou gavest to be with me, she gave me of the tree and I did eat" (vss. 11,12).

The words, "I did eat," show plainly that death would follow, because "God hath said, Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it, lest ye die." The sentence is plain, showing what man is, and where he goes at death. Gen. 3:17-19: "And unto Adam he said, Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree, of which I coumanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it; cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life; thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee; and thou shalt eat of the herb of the field; in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return."

Paul says, Rom. 5:12: "By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin, and so death passed upon all men." Gen. 5:5, "And all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years, and he died."

He surely was then a dead soul. For if by adding the breath of life he become a living soul, to take away the breath of life he would then become a dead soul. Job 34:14,15: "If he set his heart upon man, if he gather unto himself his spirit and his breath; all flesh shall perish together and man shall turn again unto dust." Is not this in harmony with the plain sentence that says, "Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return"? Psa. 103:14, "He knoweth our frame; he remembereth that we are dust." Psa. 104:24: "Thou hideth thy face, they are troubled; thou takest away their breath, they die; and return to their dust." Eccl. 12:7: "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit shall return unto God that gave it.

I have learned by the plain word of the Lord, that man was formed of the dust of the ground. The Lord says, "Dost thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." "Man shall turn again into dust." Therefore when I read Eccl. 12:7, it is plain that man returns to dust as he was, and the spirit returns unto God who gave it. I cannot see that it even hints that the spirit is the man. God breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life, and when man dies the breath of life or spirit of life returns unto God who gave it. Job 12:10: "In whose hand is the soul of every living thing, and the breath of all mankind." He is "the God of the spirits of all flesh" (Num. 16:22; 27:16). Acts 17:28: "For in him we live, and move, and have our being."

In him Adam lived and moved nine hundred and thirty years, and he died (or ceased to live). Psa. 104:29: "Thou takest away their breath, they die." Job 14:14: "If a man die, shall he live again? All the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change comes." He here expressed his willingness to wait till his change comes. He says, Job 17:13;14:15,16: "If I wait the grave is my house: I have made my bed in the darkness. I have said to corruption,Thou art my father; to the worm, Thou art my mother, and my sister. And where is now my hope? As for my hope, who shall see it? They shall go down to the bars of the pit when our rest together is in the dust." Psa. 30:9: "What profit is there in my blood when I go down to the pit? Shall the dust praise thee? Shall it declare thy truth?"

I believe there is no conscious existence between death and the resurrection, because the dead know not anything (Eccl. 9:5). "His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth, in that very day his thoughts perish" (Psa. 146:4). "For in death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave who shall give thee thanks" (Psa. 6:5). "Shall thy loving kindness be declared in the grave? or thy faithfulness in destruction? Shall thy wonders be known in the dark? and thy righteousness in the land of forgetfulness?" (Psa. 88:11,12). "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence" (Psa. 115:17). "For the grave cannot praise thee, death cannot declare thee, they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth" (Isa. 38:18). "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor devise, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave whither thou goest" (Eccl. 9:10).

In the face of all this, it is impossible for me to believe that man—at death—goes to heaven, or to paradise as some say, or to the lake that burns with fire and brimstone. "Some," according to the word of the Lord, "shall awake; some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt" (Dan. 12:2). "The hour is coming, in which all that are in the grave shall hear his voice, and shall come forth; they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation" (John 5:28,29).

EDITORIAL

Laziness clothes a man in rags.

January 6th we enjoyed the fellowship of Sister Maud Darrah, of Mount Vernon, Ohio.

Brother and Sister J. E. Hogarth have left us to spend the winter in Florida.

Dating January 4th, Brother Adams writes: "I am visiting my father at my old home in Iowa. I expect to return to Nebraska and resume my work next week."

Sister Wince writes: "The Restitution is a very appropriate Christmas and New Year gift. Enclosed twelve dollars is to be expended in this way instead of for candy and feasts."

"The Destructive and Constructive Work Attending the Establishment of the Kingdom of God" is a twelve page Bible lesson which may be ordered at twenty-five cents per dozen. It is published in this issue. In view of the signs indicative of the Lord's soon coming, this lesson is most opportune, showing the things which will "attend" the setting up of the kingdom of God. The Fellow Helpers have published this booklet, and we bespeak for it a wide circulation among friends and foes. May it, under God's blessings, open the eyes of many, and turn them from darkness to light, is our prayer.

AN EXPLANATION

Our Duty Towards Worldly and Militant Organizations

"I Wonder," an article by Brother Thomas in this number, pleads for charity and sympathy for war-smitten Europe and also for the whole world. That we are to "do good good to all men," that we must be sympathetic and tender hearted, is one of the plainest teaching of the word of God. The good Samaritan is our example. That anything contrary to this spirit of humanity, not to say the spirit of Christ, he should assume as having been taught in The Restitution, is a "wonder" to us. His strictures show that he has misread and misunderstood The Restitution on the matter, and as others may have shared with him this misconception, we add a word or two of explanation.

Individual duty of charity is one thing; organized, government-controlled, military auxiliary societies is another. If a charitable organization in Germany were to approach Brother Thomas for a contribution, pleading that he ought to help the poor, starving, wounded soldiers of Germany, the orphans and widows, what would the Brother do? The basis of the appeal is charity and humanity. If he asked, "How did these men come to be wounded?" the reply would be, "They were trying to kill the British, and they got crippled in the attempt." If he said, "If I nurse them back to health, what do they propose to do?" the answer is, "They will go back to the front and kill all the British they can—indeed, that is why we want you to contribute to this fund: save our lives so we can take the lives of the British." Wonderful "charity" this—saving one life and taking another with the same contribution! And what is more, were Brother Thomas' charity to come to the ears of the United States he would spend many days and nights in prison for helping "the enemy."

The good Samaritan illustrates the point nicely; read the story in Luke 10:30-37. The man whom he helped "fell among thieves, who stripped him of his raiment, and wounded him, and departed, leaving him half dead" (vs. 30). He was an innocent victim of robbers, and deserved consideration. Had he been a robber and murderer himself, the Samaritan could only have helped him on the condition of turning the criminal over to the police after he succored him. The good Samaritan could not, and did not, keep the robbers who wounded their victim; and if he had, he would have identified himself with criminals, scripturally; and if they had been apprehended and punished, the good Samaritan would have gone with them to prison life as an accomplice in crime, legally.

The church of God is an insignificant body in the midst of a bustling, rich world. The sooner we get it out of our heads and hearts that we must take care of the world, the better. We can hardly take care of ourselves. The Restitution barely ekes out an existence; our preachers are few and are over-worked, under-clothed, underfed, and under-paid. What a shame, what a contradiction of charity, to let this state of indigence prevail truthward and then contribute voluntarily to some so-called charitable organization of the world on the catch-penny plea of "save a life," while in fact the same society is nursing men back to health who were hurt while trying to kill their brothers; and whose avowed purpose is to resume the killing business as soon as they are restored to health by "charity." These remarks do not reflect on the government, as it is not Christian and does not feel itself bound by the laws of Christ. It has the authority to tax us, to support the war. This, however, is involuntary on our part, and we pay this taxation "lest we offend them" (Matt. 17:27). But to voluntarily contribute to sustain a war machine intended to kill our enemies, for whom we should pray, shows that we are wrong in both the head and the heart.

CHRIST'S MESSAGE TO THE EPHESIAN CHURCH

"Unto the angel of the church of Ephesus write: These things saith he that holdeth the seven stars in his right hand, who walketh in the midst of the seven golden candlesticks: I know thy works, and thy labor, and thy patience, and how thou canst not bear them which are evil: and thou hast tried them which say they are apostles, and are not, and hast found them liars: and hast borne, and hast patience, and for my name's sake hast labored, and hast not fainted. Nevertheless I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love. Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent. But this thou hast; that thou hatest the deeds of the Nicolaitans, which I also hate. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the spirit saith unto the churches: To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the tree of life, which is in midst of the paradise of God" (Rev. 2:1-7).

I. History of the Church

1. Its foundation, progress, and partial apostacy (Acts 18:19,20.21; 20:17; Rev. 2:5-11).

2. "Holdeth" (Greek, kraton). in verse one, is translated "holdeth fast" in other places (vss. 1, 25; 3:11; John 10: 28; Psa. 21:8,9).

II. Things in the Church which Christ Approves

1. Labor and patience (vs. 2; Jas. 1:22-25; Rom. 6:3; Heb. 6:12; 10:36).

2. They refused to tolerate in fellowship evil men (vs. 2; 1 Cor. 5; 2 Cor. 7:8-12; 2: 1-10)

3. Pseudo-apostles they "tried" and showed to be "liars" (vs. 2; 1 John 4:1; 2 Tim. 1:10,15-18; 2 Cor. 11:4,13-15; 2 Pet. 2:1).

4. The Nicolaitans (the word means "vanquishers of the people"), corrupt in both doctrine and practice, they had withstood, and had "not fainted" in the warfare (vss. 6,15,3; Gal. 6:9; Heb. 12:3,4).

III. Things in the Church which Christ Condemns

1. Fervency of "first love" had cooled. A return to "first love" means a return to "first works" (vss. 2,4,5; 2 John 6; John 14:21; Rom. 2:7; Matt. 24:13; Jer. 2:2).

IV. The Promise

1. Nikao, "overcometh," means to be victorious and is translated, "gotten the victory" in Rev. 15:2 (Gen. 49:19; 1 John 5:4; 2:16; Titus 2:12).

2. Paradise means a garden (Gen. 2:8; Nehe. 2:8; Eccl. 2:5; Cant. 4:13).

3. "The tree of life" was on earth before sin; it re-appears on earth after sin (Gen. 3:22; Prov. 11:30; 13:12; Rev. 22:2; 21:5,6).

COMMUNICATION

Dear Brother Alldridge:

We read a letter from Sister Susan Shepherd today. She stated that the brethren had responded freely to her need, for which she is thankful. It would be a task for this dear sister to answer each one separately, therefore would be pleased to thank them all through the paper for their Christian love and kindness, which makes her think the Lord is her shepherd. She shall not want; a babe in Christ longing for spiritual food from the more learned ones. Loving greetings and a happy New Year to the household of faith.

Mr. and Mrs. L. P. Sweet.

Dear Brother Adams:

We rejoice in the work you are doing. The little band at Salem, Ohio, very much enjoyed your article in The Restitution December 11th, 1917, on "Preparedness." We all read it, and then Sister Ella Knowles read it at our Table Service. May we all "watch and pray that we may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man."

In The Restitution December 25th, 1917, I notice there is some prospects of another edition of the hymn book. Should we not sing "the same things," as well as speak the same things? "Sing with the spirit and understanding." There are some grand pieces in the book, but quite a number are out of harmony with the gospel, and should be left out of the new edition. I will call attention to at least twelve that are very objectionable. From those numbered by pages, beginning with the second one on page

90: Leave out the first stanza. "Death is an enemy."
96: Let us sing to Jehovah and not to men.
118: Would be all right in an M. E. book.
125: Out of place in a church book.
126: Out of harmony with Heb. 2:1-4.

130: Leave out.
142: Out of harmony with the gospel.
143: Hardly suitable for a congregation.
155: Too much jingle.
184: Please read carefully the forth stanza. I am sure it does not look well among gospel songs, and we should not sing it.

Brother Adams: Please leave these out, and if you find other out of harmony with the gospel take them out also that when our dear Lord and Master comes he will find us both "speaking" and "singing" the same things. This is not my opinion alone, but it is the opinion of many.

Your sister striving for the victory,
N. B. Robison.
Nancy

We have received a number of letters from correspondents urging a revision of the new edition of the song book. On page 46, third verse, a line is left out; and there are several cases of this kind in the book which should be fixed. Then in some cases the words are entirely unscriptural, as on page 223, second verse:

"Your many sins are all forgiven,
Oh, hear the voice of Jesus;
Go on your way in peace to heaven,
And wear a crown with Jesus."

In several other places you may go to heaven in the book; such places should be corrected in the new edition. We think the wrong words can be cut out of the electrotype plates and corrections put in their place. Proof reading is a very difficult art; but books of a second edition are supposed to be perfect.—Editor.

I WONDER

If I, a child of God, while passing down a lonely street, should see a fellow man wounded and bleeding and refuse to succor him, but pass him by on he other side, and leave him to suffer and die alone, as did the self-righteous priest and Levite (Luke 10:31,32); I wonder if God would approve and the angels of heaven applaud my act? I wonder if they would.

If while enjoying the comforts of my cozy fireside this cold and frosty night, I am told that a man of the world is lying wounded and bleeding on a country roadside, I wonder if God in heaven will frown, if I hasten to this suffering sinner, pour oil on his wounds, bind them up and set him on my beast, and take him to my home or an inn, as did the good Samaritan (Luke 10:34)? Or if, when I reach this suffering man I find he wears a uniform, and is suffering from a bayonet thrust, I wonder if it becomes my Christian duty to say to him, "You belong to the world, and were wounded in its battles; I must leave you entirely to your fate and think only of the church and its needs?" I wonder if it does.

If I were blessed with an abundance of this world's goods, and were travelling in war-stricken Europe, and should find a group of sorrowing widows and orphans by the wayside, helpless and starving, stretching out helpless and appealing hands to me for aid, would God reprove me if I helped them—if I put my arms round them and gave them frely of such comfort and aid as I was able? I wonder if he would. Would it be more pleasing in his sight, and more in harmony with the teaching and example of our dear Lord and Master, who went about ever ready to relieve the sick and suffering, gently ministering to all, and refusing none, if I should say, "Your brothers and husbands were of this wicked world, and were killed in its battles; I can do nothing for you. Please let me pass."

Our Lord used not the sword, but when Peter, with more zeal than authority, with it wounded one of our Lord's enemies, he gently healed the wound, while he reproved Peter (Luke 22:50); thus leaving for us this example, that we as his followers should heal the wounds even of our enemies.

Therefore dear ones, let us not be coaxed, persuaded, or driven to strike, or assist in striking a blow, that may by any chance wound or kill our fellow man. But if when the Lord comes, he should find me earnestly engaged in an effort to relieve some of the sufferings of these times of trouble, I shall not be ashamed, nor fear his displeasure.

We have been admonished to "keep ourselves unspotted from the world." Very true, and the same Scripture says that "pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father, is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction." I wonder if this means only the widows and orphans of the church, and that we should look coldly and with indifference upon the sorrows and sufferings of the alien orphans and widows around us? I wonder if it does.

It is truly important and necessary, if we would have a part in the glories of the ages to come, that we "keep ourselves unspotted from the world." But I have little fear of any brother or sister becoming spotted with the world while earnestly engaged in relieving the sorrow stricken and afflicted.

It has been said "there should be general preparation made for the coming of the Lord. Extra meetings should be held," etc. This advice is good, and should be pressed home to the church and be not neglected. But would not the memory of grateful looks and words from some unfortunate whom we have just assisted, help to lift us to a frame of mind to more fully and earnestly enjoy and receive the benefits of these extra meetings?

Again we are admonished to "stand entirely aloof from the world." In a certain sense this is a duty. But strictly speaking, hardly possible. To do this literally, we must draw our cloaks around us, and live entirely within ourselves, as do the monk and hermit. We must rather define a Christian's duty, to hold himself aloof from the sins and follies of the world, whose name is legion. But while life lasts, it is also his duty to labor unceasingly, to rescue from the world, those "who shall be heirs of salvation," and bring them to Christ. This he can never hope to do, if he wraps the cloak of the Pharisee around his person, and moves among his fellow men with the air and step of a superior being. He must rather meet his fellow men as brothers and sisters in Adam, join in their joys and sorrows, "rejoice with them that do rejoice, and weep with them that weep;" thus making their joys and sorrows his own, so far as is consistent with the life and example of our dear Lord and his disciples, and so secure that confidence which will prompt them to seriously consider the gospel mesage which he brings. And how better can we win the love and confidence of others, than by sympathy and assistance in times of trouble and affliction? Before we conclude that it is our Christian duty to "withdraw ourselves entirely from the world and leave it to its fate," it may be profitable to consider the fact, that "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish."

THINK ON THESE THINGS

Phil. 4:8: "Finally brethren, whatsoever things are true, honest, just, pure, lovely, and of good report; if there be any virtue, and if there be any praise, think on these things."

He that testifieth his thankfulness to God and his love for the increase in grace which ye have heard, learned, and received, and is practicing his duty daily to God, will be strengthened with all might according to God's glorions power (Col. 1:10). We must walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing, being faithful in every good work, and increasing in the knowledge of God. How thankful we ought to be to know that there is virtue and praise for us if we are true, honest, just, pure, lovely, and of good report, and have our names written in the book of life; and when our Master comes we shall hear his welcome voice, "Well done." Heb. 13:15: "By him therefore let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually." Eph. 5:20: "Giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ." Eph. 6:8: "Knowing that whatsoever good thing any man doeth the same shall he receive of the Lord." Phil. 4:6,7: "Be careful for nothing; but in every thing by prayer and supplication with thanksgivign let your requests be made known to God; and the peace of God which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Jesus Christ." Let us strive earnestly to have a good report when Jesus comes, that none of us shall be left out. Let us fit ourselves now to wear that crown laid up for us in the kingdom, which shall endure forever.

Labor and trouble can always get through alone, but it takes two to be glad.

Rumors run to earth are usually found to be groundless.

OBITUARY

Levi C. Cattell

Cattell: Levi C., was born at Chippin Norton, Oxfordshire, England, August 22nd, 1830; died at Oxford, November 26th, 1917.

Brother Cattell was for many years a resident of Cleveland, Ohio, coming to Ohio in 1852. He first located in Youngstown, but not long thereafter removed to Cleveland, where he met and married his first wife, Margaret May Martin in 1859, and who died at Cleveland December 6th, 1898.

The children by this union are Chas. L. Cattell, Willoughby, Ohio; and Mrs. C. A. Goss of Cleveland. About five years later Brother Cattell longed to see his native land, the faces and places to his memory dear, and finally left Cleveland for England in February, 1903, and never returned. He married again in England in March, 1904, and left a dear wife to mourn his loss. She has been a faithful and affectionate companion in his declining years, adding much to his comfort in his almost total loss of sight several years ago.

Levi C. Cattell

Brother Cattell was one of the pioneers of the truth in Cleveland, and was an earnest laborer for the spread of the gospel of the kingdom. He served as an elder along with Brothers M. Joblin, Robt. McLauchlan, George Elton, and Alfred Jones, all of whom have preceded him in the sleep of death. Brother and Sister Cattell were noted for their hospitality, and visiting brethren from far and near ever found a hearty welcome at their home. His second wife learned "the truth" under his teaching; she became obedient in baptism, and they together have been much blessed by the fellowship with the brethren of Oxford, to whose loving interest and affectionate care we commend her.

THE JUDGMENT

There appears to be as much difference of opinion on this subject as any other mentioned in the Bible. Some of our Advent friends claim that all sin will be wiped from the earth when the Lord comes, and that during the thousand years the righteous will reign over one another. Others claim that the thousand years will be one continuous judgment. They call it the "judgment age"; but we fail to find either of these theories mentioned in the Bible. And as it is our only source of obtaining information, we must be guided by what it teaches.

When does the judgment take place? Does it not take place during our life time? If our names are written in the "Lamb's book of life" are we not judged before our names are written there? It looks as though we must pass some judgment before our names are written there, as God does not allow any one's name to be placed there unless they are worthy. Jesus says, "I am the door." If we enter we must come in through him; if we do not enter, our names will not be in the book of life. In one instance Paul told the Jews that they "judged themselves unworthy of eternal life" (Acts 13:46). So we see that those people had passed judgment on themselves; so unless they repented later, their doom will be sealed. There is no need of any further judgment.

Now we will enquire, When does the final judgment take place? See 1 Cor. 15:51,52: "Behold, I will shew you a mystery: we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trump shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." The righteous are raised incorruptible. If so they are judged before they are raised; as they cannot die any more. Eternal life is their reward, and it cannot be taken from them when it has been once given. Luke 20:35,36: "Neither can they die any more: for they are equal unto the angels; and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

Only the righteous are raised in the first resurrection. "They cannot die any more"; and by the statement in 1 Cor. 15:52 we are informed that this change takes place "in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye," and as we have seen this change is final; so we see that there can be no further judgment for those mentioned in the Scriptures we have quoted: they are raised incorruptible, and cannot die any more.

Now there is another judgment which is to take place later when Jesus is seated on his throne (Matt. 25:31 to the end of the chapter). "Before him shall be gathered all nations: and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divides his sheep from the goats." This we see is a judgment of the nations that remain on the earth after the great battle is fought, and Jesus has established his kingdom, and is seated on the throne of his father David. Those who were raised in the "first resurrection" will be associate rulers with him, the twelve apostles ruling the twelve tribes of Israel; and the saints, some over five cities, and others over ten. This will continue during the thousand years. During this time the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea; all shall know the Lord from the least unto the greatest. This is the "good time" that we are waiting for. May it soon come.

DON'T FORGET THE HELPING FUND

We whose names are given below, believing it to be our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the manager of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. Those whose circumstances do not permit of the paying for the paper themselves should notify the manager, signifying their willingness to accept the paper, and it will be cheerfully sent from the proceeds of this fund.

The Old Fashioned Bible

How painfully pleasing the fond recollection
  Of youthful emotions and innocent joy,
When blest with advice and parental affection,
  Surrounded with mercies and peace from on high;
I still view the chair of my sire and my mother,
  The seats of their offspring arranged on each hand
And that blessed book that excels every other,
  The family Bible that lay on the stand.

That Bible, the volume of God's inspiration,
  At morn and at evening could yield us delight;
The prayer of our sire was a sweet invocation,
  For mercy by day, and safety thro' night:

Our hymns of devotion in harmony swelling,
  All warm form the heart of a family band,
Half raised us from earth to that rapturous dwelling
  Described in the Bible that lay on the stand.

Ye scenes of tranquility, long have we parted;
  My hopes almost gone, and my parents no more,
In sorrow and sadness I roam broken-hearted,
  And wander alone on a far distant shore;
Yet how can I doubt a dear Savior's protection,
  Forgetful of gifts from his bountiful hand?
O let me with patience receive his correction,
  And think of the Bible that lay on the stand.

The Power of the Bible on an Infidel

The other evening in looking through an old book I noticed the following quotation, which I have headed as above:

"Many years ago there was an infidel club in England. It was composed of learned and distinguished men. At the meeting of the club its members were in the habit of ridiculing the Bible, and of trying to show it was not worthy of being believed. On one occasion a member was appointed to examine the subject of the resurrection of Christ, and to write an essay for the purpose of showing that there was no satisfactory proof that he ever rose from the dead.

"He carefully examined what is said on this subject in the New Testament, and the end of it was, that he became fully convinced of the fact that Christ did rise from the dead, and instead of writing an article for the infidel club to show that what Christians believe about the resurrection of Christ is not true, he wrote one of the best books ever written, to prove beyond all doubt that the resurrection of Christ is true. He became an earnest Christian, and that which led to his great change was the convincing proof he found in the New Testament of the truth of the resurrection of Christ. He saw it was true that Jesus did rise from the dead, and when he became satisfied that this was true, he was obliged to admit that all the other teachings of the New Testament respecting Christ must also be true."

A Needed Work and a Worthy Appeal

In a large city like New York some strange things are at times seen or heard. The other evening Sister Donaldson and I were walking on Broadway in a section known as the "white light district" (so called on account of the thousands upon thousands of electric lamps burning, making mid-night almost as bright as noon-day) when a gentleman in the throng placed in my hand a small 80 page book with a bright red cover on which was printed

The Emphasized Gospel of John —Third Million—

The emphasis consists in printing certain portion in clearer, bolder, or heavier type. For instance chapter one is thus treated in verses 12,13 and in the last part of 29th chapter two is not emphasized, but chapter three has verse 3, the last clause of 7, all of 14,15,16,17,18, and 36; and so on through out the book. On the inside of the front cover is printed

Our Weekly Puzzle

"But of him are ye in Christ Jesus, who of God is made unto us wisdom, and righteousness, and sanctification, and redemption, that according as it is written, He that glorieth let him glory in the Lord."

Who wrote the above, to whom was it written, and where in the Scripture can it be found?

Answer in next issue.

Answer to puzzle in last issue:
1 John 4:10,11.

We are not sent into this world to do anything into which we can not put our hearts. We have certain work to do for our bread and that is to be done strenuously; other work to do for our delight and that is to be done heartily; neither is to be done by halves or shifts, but with a will; and what is not worth this effort is not to be done at all.—John Ruskin.

BIBLE LESSONS ON FIRST PRINCIPLES

The Editor of "The Restitution" is now preparing for publication a series of Bible lessons which are designed to explain every essential feature of gospel truth. Three lessons of the series have just been published entitled respectively, "Introduction," "The Word of God in Threefold Aspect," and "The Gospel of the Kingdom the Only True Gospel." Valuable for conducting Bible studies and classes and for giving Berean lessons, as well as for individual study. Written primarily to teach the elemental principles of the gospel to candidates preparatory to baptism. Three cents for one copy; twenty-five cents the dozen.

DENYING THE FAITH

A sermon which is both doctrinal and practical. 20 pages; one copy 5 cents; 40 cents per dozen.

"THE SMOKE OF THEIR TORMENT ASCENDETH UP FOREVER"

A sermon of doctrinal and prophetic value. A profound subject made simple. 12 pages. One copy 3 cents; 12 copies 25 cents.

THE DEATH OF CHRIST

A doctrinal discourse setting forth logically and scripturally the meaning of death and its relation to the gospel of life. 3 cents each; 25 cents per dozen.

PARADISE LOST; PARADISE REGAINED

A sermon in which every text in the Bible where paradise occurs, either in the English or original tongue, is quoted and explained. 5 cents each; 12 for 40 cents.

THE BIBLE: ITS PRINCIPLES AND TEXTS

As indicated by its title, this book is divided into three sections: the first consists of a disquisition on "The Bible"; the second simplifies its "Principles" in formulated propositions; and the third expounds in a homiletic manner particular "Texts." As an Editor the Author has untied many knotty questions submitted to him by readers; more than a hundred and fifteen are considered in this volumn. One copy $1.10; two copies $2.00.

BE GLAD

To Brother R. G. Huggins

"The righteous shall be glad in the Lord" (Psalms).

By S. Roxana Wince

Though eyes of all the world be red
With bitter stinging tears;
Be glad my brother! Lift the head,
For thy redemption nears!

For ne'er has Christmas like this one
By waiting church been seen;
So radiant with hope's bright sun,
So wreathed in evergreen!

For see! The crowns from tyrant's brows
Are swiftly snatched away!
That raging heathen made to bow,
May own the Savior's sway.

See! God from promised land removes
The Turk's defiling feet,
That Canaan for the saints he loves
Be made a dwelling meet.

Psalm 2nd Chapter

Though kings together counsel take
Against the Lord and his dear Son,
That they their bands and cords will break,
They ne'er can sever one!

So vainly Kaiser's countless men
Strive on in desperate war;
They cannot blot out Bethlehem,
Nor Jesus from his throne debar!

Their striving but prepares the way,
For wrong from earth to flee,
And hastens on the glorious day,
When "peace on earth" shall be!

Psalm 47th Chapter

When people all with one accord,
Shall voice of triumph raise,
Singing to their redeeming Lord
Repeated songs of praise.

Alas, to think how many people's creeds are contradicted by their deeds.

Content turns all it touches into gold.

THE HOLY SPIRIT

Prove All Things, Hold Fast That Which Is Good

Some subjects in God's word are of vastly greater importance than others. All professing Christians of whatever sect or denomination they may be, agree, nominally at least, that the knowledge of God the Creator should take the foremost rank. In actual fact, however, is this the case? Nine-tenths of the leaders of the churches are completely puzzled by the simplest questions relating to the Almighty. They "worship they know not what" in a truly literal sense.

We have already given in previous articles ample proof that the doctrine of the Trinity is untenable, but we wish now to show that the traditional teaching regarding the Holy Spirit is particularly at variance with the truth. Current theology maintains that there are three Gods, viz., God the Father, God the Son and God the Holy Ghost (or Holy Spirit), and that these three are co-equal and co-eternal. "God the Father" is a distinctively scriptural term (1 Pet. 1:2; 2 Pet. 1:17; Jude 1). The other two expression are foreign to the Bible, and antagonistic to its teaching. That the Father and the Son are both personal beings, is abundantly testified in the sacred writings, and no single statement can be brought forward which in any sense nullifies that fact. It is most remarkable, however, that relative to the Holy Spirit, the exact reverse is the case.

The doctrine of the personality of the Holy Spirit is built almost entirely on the use of the personal pronoun in the 14th and 16th chapters of John's gospel. Did these passages stand alone, and had there not been any previous references to the Holy Spirit in both Old and New Testaments, we might readily admit that such would be a natural interpretation to a casual reader; but, when another construction may legitimately be placed upon them, which will bring them into harmony with others which cannot possibly be consistent with personality in the general accepted sense, it is but right to do so. Careful study, however, of these passages gives abundant evidence that the orthodox view is incorrect, and is only attained by superficial reading, and a lack of appreciation of the laws relating to the requirements of grammar, as we shall see later.

The strong belief in the Holy Spirit is, as we have already said, based principally on the two chapters referred to in John's gospel, where the promise of the Holy Spirit (the Comforter, the Helper or Advocate) is given. Strange to say, it is contended that the fulfilment of this promise took place at Pentecost, continuing from then until now. There was on that occasion no sign of personality, for the Spirit came as "cloven tongues of fire," and any suggestion of personality seems to be entirely omitted. To my mind, the gift of the Holy Spirit at Pentecost is the fulfilment of "the promise of the Father" (Joel 2:28, Acts 1:4; 2:3) and is not to be confused with the promises given by Christ. Reference to Joel 2:28, is sufficiently convincing that the "Spirit" there referred to is not personal, as the figure used cannot apply to personality. In spite of this undeniable fact the passage is frequently so applied.

We think orthodoxy is right in teaching that Christ promised something new—something that did not then exist on the earth among men, and could not do so while he remained (John 16:7). How then can they affirm that the Holy Spirit (or Comforter) promised by Christ was a personal being—the third person in the Trinity, who as they teach was co-equal and co-eternal with the Father, taking part in the creation and continuing throughout Old Testament history? It is clearly proven by the following passages that the Holy Spirit was already working in the lives of men in exactly the same manner up to the time the promise was given by Christ and afterwards: Luke 1:15,67; Luke 2:25,26: Luke 4:1; Acts 2:4; 6:3-5. There surely then is something inconsistent here, which according to the traditional view, nullifies the force of Christ's promise of another Comforter. If the Holy Spirit referred to in the above quoted passages is a personal being, as is generally taught, then Christ's promise of another future gift cannot be.

That the Holy Spirit, wherever referred to, is the same throughout the Scripture (except in manifestation), is, we think, correct, but the insistence of its personal individuality leads to endless confusion and inconsistency, and the difficulty is greatly magnified by adding to it the Trinitarian doctrine.

Having expressed our disbelief in the personality of the Holy Spirit in the sense accepted by current theology, we will now endeavor to give what we believe to be some cogent reasons for so doing, and would ask our readers to carefully weigh the evidence, comparing facts.

Fact 1.—It is most remarkable that only of God the Father, and of Jesus Christ the Son, do we read that they live. It might reasonably be assumed that God lives—that he is a "living God," yet it is repeatedly asserted in the Scriptures in spite of the natural evidences which surround us.

The case is different regarding the Son. He died and was buried, and proofs and statements are required to demonstrate the fact that he lives, and they are not wanting. Turn to the following passages in God's word, then ask yourself the question, "Why is it no such testimony is made regarding the Holy Spirit?" Deut. 5:26; Josh. 3:10; 1 Sam. 17:26; Num. 14:21; Psa. 42:2; 84:2; Jer. 10:10; 22:24; Ez. 5:11; 34:8; Dan. 6:26; Hos. 1:10; Matt. 16:16; Acts 14:16; Rom. 14:11; 2 Cor. 13:14; Heb. 7:8,25; Rev. 1:18.

Fact 2.—All descriptions of God the Father, and all appearances of the Son are personal—none are impersonal—whereas all manifestations of the Holy Spirit are impersonal—none are personal. For example see Luke 3:22; Acts 2:3. The former passage seems to expressly imply that "bodily form" was not its natural state.

Fact 3.—The Holy Spirit has no personal name, and if a personality would appear to be the only one living in God's universe without. The Father and Son have many names. Why should the Holy Spirit be thus singular, if co-equal and co-eternal with Father and Son? Personal names do not require the definite article. It would be absurd to say "the Peter," "the James," "the John," or "the Jesus," etc.

Fact 4.—The Father and the Son frequently speak of their relationship to each other—the Holy Spirit never does so. Co-equality is certainly lacking in this respect.

Fact 5.—Both Father and Son undoubtedly exercise complete control over the Holy Spirit (Joel 2:28; John 14:16; Psa. 104:30; Matt. 12:28).

Fact 6.—Prayer is made to God, even by Jesus Christ, but prayer is never made to the Holy Spirit, nor is there any record of prayer by the Holy Spirit.

Fact 7.—Paul, writing to Timothy, distinctly affirms that there is but "one mediator" (Intercessor or Advocate) between God and man—the man Christ Jesus. This statement cannot be correct if the record given in Rom. 8:26,27 applies to the Holy Spirit as a separate personal being.

Fact 8.—The Scripture terminology used relative to the Holy Spirit is altogether inconsistent with personality as any unbiassed person will admit, and it is a most significant fact that no such language is ever used respecting God the Father of Jesus Christ the Son, viz., "pour," "pour out," "anoint," "baptize," "by measure," "quench," etc. It is particularly worthy of note how almost against their will the revisers have been compelled to alter the phrase "by the Holy Spirit" to "in the Holy Spirit." Surely such a fact needs no comment!

Fact 9.—The Revised Version, in spite of the recommendation of the American committee have retained the word "ghost" instead of substituting "spirit' in all places where the prefix "Holy" occurs, evidently because it seemed to them to favor personality, though in other instances they have rendered the same word "Spirit." By substituting the word "Ghost" for "Spirit" in the other passages the absurdity of personality is very clearly demonstrated. Take for instance Rom. 8:9; 1 Cor. 2:10,11,14; Phil. 2:1; 1 Thess. 5:19; 1 John 5:8; Rev. 2:7; 1 Cor. 12:3,4,7,8,9,11,13.

Fact 10.—The fact that the personal pronoun is used in connection with it, does not demonstrate that there is another God beside the Father. If we read of the Spirit coming, guiding, speaking, showing, and teaching, we understand clearly enough that God does these things by the instrumentality of the Spirit proceeding from him, as Christ said, making various persons and objects his medium of communications. We would call attention to the fact that though the personal pronoun is used through the necessities of grammar (as in French), the neuter pronoun is used also in 1 Pet. 1:11, "It (the spirit) testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ." Wisdom is personified, sin is also personified.

Were I to leave the subject here I should be greatly disappointed in my task, for I am no believer in pulling down what I believe to be error unless I have good hope of building something entirely better in its place. Put to practical test in the light of the foregoing remarks, what solid ground for comfort have orthodoxy got? By their own confession they cannot understand, or attempt to explain the doctrine of the Trinity, nor can they explain the difficulty in which they are placed when they teach that all three persons of the Trinity pre-existed the time of Christ, and took part in the affairs of men right up to the time when Christ promised to give them another Comforter. Who then is this other Comforter? How can he be the third person of an already existing Trinity?

We have previously stated that we agree that the Holy Spirit (except in manifestation) is the same throughout Scripture, but we insist that the very variety of manifestation is itself a strong argument against personality of any sort; other than association with personality.

When we come to recognize the fact that the Holy Spirit is the "power of the Highest" which "proceedeth from the Father," that it is the Spirit of the Lord, the Spirit of God who is in heaven (Dan. 2:28; Psa. 102: 19; Psa. 123:1), we begin to understand something of its wonderful nature, and its operation in differing manifestations. "By his Spirit he garnished the heavens" (Job 26:13). By his Spirit are all thing created and sustained in life (Psa. 104:29,30). The Spirit of God is everywhere. We cannot evade it (Psa. 138:7-12). It was by the Spirit of God that Samson did his marvellous feats; by this power also Elisha detected the deception of Gehazi, and Peter the lies of Ananias. Anna and others were "full of the Spirit" as also Stephen. Christ himself used the Spirit of God (Matt 12:28, see margin). It became the "Holy Spirit" when definitely set apart for carrying on the work of God's Holy Servant Jesus.

In what way then, considering all these manifestations had the Holy Spirit as promised by Christ not yet been manifested so as to cause him to say he would send them another Comforter, Advocate, or Helper (John 14:16)? We get further information by noticing carefully our Savior's remarks, descriptive of the promise, and the results occuring from its fulfilments.

Notice Christ's expression, that this promised other Comforter (thus implying a former one) is called "the Spirit of truth." Then turn to Deut. 33:10; from this we get a reference to Malachi 2:6,7, and we gain the information that the Old Testament "law" was called "the word of truth." David, in the Psalms calls the law "the word of truth" (Psa. 119:43,142,151,160). Notice how Christ, after speaking of the Comforter, immediately speaks of those who keep his word, or rather, as he says himself, not his word but the Father's and the comforting results that follow. Then he comes back again, as it were, and talks to them of the Comforter. Even the Holy Spirit, which he as least three times calls "the Spirit of truth," Peter tells us, "Holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit," or in other words the Holy Spirit was manifested through these men in the "law of truth." That this "law of truth" was a Comforter and Helper the Psalms of David amply testify. Truth is not a personality, but like wisdom it may be and is personified.

Notice other results that were to follow the special gift of the Holy Spirit:

1. The Spirit was to guide into all the truth.
2. To testify of Christ.
3. To show, or declare things to come.

Now are not all these promises exactly fulfilled in the New Testament, and in no other way? Let us examine them carefully and see, and if it is so, surely the force of the argument cannot fail to be seen!

1st.—Do not all Christians agree that no man can be guided into all truth apart from the word which is truth?

2nd.—Do we accept any testimony or witness concerning Christ as authoritative, other than that given by the "Spirit of truth" or "word of truth," which is he same?

3rd.—Is reliable knowledge of "things to come" attainable any other way than through the Old and New Testaments which are both manifestations of the Holy Spirit of God? And surely in both of these we find "Comfort" and "Help" so that we may be able "to comfort others with the comfort whereby we ourselves are comforted of God."

Paul speaks much of comfort. He found the Scriptures a great comfort (Rom. 15:4; 2 Cor. 1:3; 2 Thess. 2:7).

The Old Testament is one Comforter.

The New Testament is another Comforter (Psa. 119:49, 50; Psa. 23:4; Rom. 15:4).

A straight answer to the three questions above will do much to solve difficultiess in relation to this all important subject. Other very important points might yet be considered, such as the studied omission of any mention of the Holy Spirit in many passages that would unquestionably demand it were the Holy Spirit a personality. Space, however, forbids unless our indulgent editor permits a continued article.

Reply to Brother Judd's Article by The Editor of "The Student"

The foregoing article deserves to be carefully studied. It deals with a question of more than ordinary importance, for there is no phase of Bible teaching where the Holy Spirit (or "Spirit of God") is not in evidence. It is everywhere present: "Whither shall I go from thy Spirit? or whither shall I flee from thy presence?" (Psa. 139:7).

With much of our contributor's matter we cordially agree, but we cannot accept his denial that Christ promised to send a personal "Holy Spirit," as a "Comforter" to his sorrowing disciples, after his own departure. Our contributor admits the sending of the promised "Comforter," but holds that the sending of the New Testament is what Christ meant!

Let us quote the Lord's words here: "I will pray the Father, and he shall give you another Comforter, that he may be with you for ever, even the Spirit of truth; whom the world cannot receive; for it beholdeth him not, neither knoweth him" (John 14:16).

Again: "The Comforter, even the Holy Spirit whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring to your remembrance all that I have said unto you" (verse 26). Again: "When the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall bear witness of me" (Chap. 15:26). Again: "It is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you: but if I go, I will send him unto you. And he when he is come will convict the world in respect of sin, and of righteousness, and of judgment: of sin because they believe not on me: of righteousness, because I go to the Father, and ye behold me no more: of judgment, because the prince of this world hath been judged. I have yet many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now. Howbeit when he, the Spirit of truth is come, he shall guide you into all the truth: for he shall not speak for himself: but what things soever he shall hear, these shall he speak; and he shall declare unto you the things that are to come. He shall glorify me: for he shall take of mine and shall declare it unto you" (Chap. 16: 7-16).

Referriing to these utterances of our Lord, our contributor says: "The doctrine of the personality of the Holy Spirit is built almost entirely on the use of the personal pronoun in the 14th and 16th chapters of John's gospel. Did these passages stand alone, and had there not been any previous references to the Holy Spirit in both Old and New Testaments, we might readily admit that such would be a natural interpretation to a casual reader; but when another construction may legitimately be placed upon them, which will bring them into harmony with others which cannot possibly be consistent with personality in the generally accepted sense, it is but right to do so."

One wonders if the author of these remarks has carefully examined the Scripture passage in question. The pronouns do unmistakably point to personality of the Holy Spirit, but there is far stronger evidence of a different kind in the language. The "Comforter" is described as one who "shall not speak from himself; but what things soever he shall hear, these shall he speak." Could this "Comforter" both "hear" and "speak" if he were not a person ? Not only can he hear and speak, but he is also entrusted with duties which demand a high order of intelligence. To put the New Testament forward as answering to the demands is absurd, as can easily be shown in a variety of ways.

But, while we regard the Savior's teaching as clearly indicating a personal "Comforter," we have no sympathy with what our contributor calls "the orthodox view," against which he is contending. There is, however, good reason to believe that the key to unlock the mystery will be found in the Old Testament. Christianity is the modern form of a movement which originated in the garden of Eden, when Jehovah provided a means for man's redemption from sin and its results. The "Sons of God," in every age of the world, constitute the "Church of God," comprehensively speaking. The proto-martyr, Stephen, referring to Moses says: "This is he that was in the church in the wilderness, with the angel which spake to him in the Mount Sinai, and with our fathers: who received the lively oracles to give unto us" (Acts 7:38). In the same chapter Stephen traces the development of the Israelites from Abraham to his own day, showing clearly that they were under angelic guidance and protection: events such as the "Burning Bush"; the "giving of the law to Moses in the mount"; and the sending of him to Egypt to deliver them from bondage were instances of angelic ministration. At Exodus 23:20, we read: "Behold, I send an angel before thee, to keep thee in the way, and to bring thee into the place which I have prepared. Beware of him, and obey his voice, provoke him not; for he will not pardon your transgressions: for my name is in him."

This "Angel" was obviously the personal representative of Jehovah attending to the wants of the Israelites on their way to Palestine; authorized to speak and act as Jehovah in their management--see Exo. 3:2-7, and note the phrase, "My name is in him."

If, then, this was the way the Church of God was "ministered unto" in the Mosiac dispensation, what would hinder a similar arrangement to be made for the Christian dispensation ? The evidence seems to us to support the view that such is the case. The angel Gabriel was sent to announce the conception of Jesus, and angels were in evidence at his birth, as well as throughout his lifetime. It was Gabriel who appeared to Daniel (Dan. 8:16 and 9:21); also to Zacharias, the father of John the Baptist (Luke 1:19), and next to Mary. His words to Zacharias—"I am Gabriel that stand in the presence of God"--are indicative of the highest rank. His ministrations to Daniel would warrant the view that he was the one in charge then; and this is strengthened by the fact of his visits to Zacharias and Mary in the closing years of the same period. What could be more reasonable then, than the thought that God would again send him, to guide and comfort the church, when Jesus their Lord and Comforter was taken from them into heaven ?

As regards the name, or title—"Holy Spirit"—about which our contributor has considerable to say, there is really little difficulty. "Angels are ministering spirits sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation" (Heb. 1:14). The term "holy" is from hagios—"set apart," or "separated"; hence "Holy Spirit" is a "set apart Spirit," which fits exactly in this case. This may help to explain the baptismal formula (Matt. 28: 19), "Baptising them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit": the three persons being not co-equal, but chief co-operators in the great work of redemption. Much remains to be said on this absorbing topic.

MYSTERY

God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform;
He plants his footsteps in the sea,
And rides upon the storm.

Mystery: a secret doctrine; anything very obscure; that which is beyond human knowledge to explain; anything artfully made difficult; hidden meaning. The word occurs twenty-eight times in the Scriptures. A parable is a mystery. "Why speakest thou unto them in parables ? Because it is given unto you to know the mysteries of heaven, but to them it is not given" (Matt. 13:11; Mark 4:11). Christ in the parable of the sower was asked by his disciples about this parable, and he answered: "Unto you it is given to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God: but to others in parables; that seeing they might not see, and hearing they might not understand: lest at any time they should be converted, and their sins should be forgiven them" (Luke 8:10-12; Mark 4:12).

How true this is, as all that go about preaching the kingdom of God have found out. The people do not believe the gospel of the kingdom; it is a mystery to them, but to us who do believe it, it is given to us to know the facts, and is no mystery. We get the facts as recorded by searching the Scripture. But the doctrine of a sky kingdom is a false doctrine, and we do not believe it; and we think it a great mystery that people will reject the gospel of the kingdom, as recorded in the word of God so plain, for the false. But it seems to be according to God's plan that those that believe the true gospel, their eyes are opened to the beauty of God's plan of salvation.

The Jews were God's chosen people, and it was a great mystery to them that the Gentiles should have a hope in the future kingdom. This mystery had been hid from ages and from generations, but when Christ came it was then made manifest to the saints, and Paul was called to make known what is the riches of the glory of this mystery among the Gentiles (Col. 1:26,27). Paul says the ministers of Christ are stewards of the mysteries of God, and a steward of God must be faithful (1 Cor. 4:12). Why did salvation come to the Gentiles ? To provoke the Jews to jealousy (Rom. 11:11). And Paul warned the Gentiles not to boast of it in his lesson to them on grafting, and he did not want them to be ignorant of this mystery, lest they should be wise in their own conceits. He explained this mystery by saying that blindness in part is happened to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentile be come in (Rom. 11:11-36; Acts 26:18; Eph. 4:18). Christ further reveals this mystery when he says Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled (Luke 21:24). Paul declares we speak the wisdom of God in a mystery, even the hidden wisdom, which God ordained before the world unto our glory which none of the princes of this world knew, for had they known it, they would not have crucified the Lord of glory. Why ? Because it was hidden from them. But the things that were eternal, God revealed unto us by his spirit. Paul and his associates in the gospel, received not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God, that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God (1 Cor. 2:7-12).

Paul also speaks of a mystery which we think will soon be revealed to the world: "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound and the dead shall be raised incorruptible and we shall be changed" (1 Cor. 15:51,52). Paul speaks of a mystery that was kept secret since the world began, but was made manifest, by the Scriptures of the prophets, according to the commandment of the everlasting God, in his day, and was made known to all the nations for the obedience of faith. This was the time the gospel was preached to every creature which is under heaven (Rom. 16:25,26; Col. 1:6,23), and fulfills the prophecy of Matthew 24:14; Rom. 10:18, and the command of Christ Mark 16:16.

There are many mysteries in the world, that are known to some, and not to others: the phonograph, telephone, flying machine, wireless telegraphy, sub-marines, etc. The working of secret societies, many robberies, murders, fires, explosions, and accidents are among the mysteries that a few understand while the majority do not. Jerusalem is out of the rule of the Turk, and we think this act paves the way for the greatest of mysteries to soon take place, viz., The coming of Christ, and the resurrection of the dead in Christ. Lord, hasten the day.

DON'T FORGET THE HELPING FUND

We whose names are given below, believing it to be our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the manager of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. Those whose circumstances do not permit of the paying for the paper themselves should notify the manager, signifying their willingness to accept the paper, and it will be cheerfully sent from the proceeds of this fund.

A man said the other day that women often became entangled in absurdities because of their lack of logic.

"That may be," admitted his wife, "but anyway, we women didn't get up those Hague Peace Conferences; and there are those that say that since those were established there have been more wars than ever before in the history of the world."

EDITORIAL

An excellent poem by Brother Bronson is crowded out this week. Look for it next issue.

As this month has five Tuesdays, this issue will be the last until Tuesday, Februrary 5th.

The article this week by Brother S. H. Thomas is of unusual interest. It deals with a prophetic difficulty sanely and wisely, and we bespeak for it repeated readings. It is a precious contribution: do not pass it by lightly.

CHRIST'S MESSAGE TO THE SMYRNEAN CHURCH

"And unto the angel of the church in Smyrna write: These things saith the first and the last, which was dead, and is alive: I know thy works, and tribulation, and poverty (but thou art rich), and I know the blasphemy of them which say they are Jews, and are not, but are the synagogue of satan. Fear none of those things which thou shalt suffer: behold, the devil shall cast some of you into prison, that ye may be tried; and ye shall have tribulation ten days: be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life . . . . . He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death" (Rev. 2: 8-11).

I. History of the Church

1. Its foundation, progress, and division (Acts 19:26).

2. Home of Polycarp—Birthplace of Homer—Church there was commended by Ignatius.

3. The "fallen" Ephesians left Ephesus (because they were not tolerated there) and went to Smyrna, where they established a church of their own. "The church in Smyrna" was distinct and separate from this "synagogue of satan" established there by the "fallen" Ephesians (vs. 9; 1 John 2:19; Jas. 2:2-7).

4. "Sensual, having not the spirit," is why they did not remain in the church of God. They said they were Jews (Christians), but this claim was "blasphemy" (vs. 9; Jude 19; 1 John 2:19; John 6:63; 1:47; Rom. 2:24,28,29,; 9:6-8; Phil. 3:2,3; 1 Tim. 6:1).

II. Things in the Church which Christ Commends

1. Tribulation and poverty (vs. 9; Acts 14:22; 1 Thess. 3:4; Heb. 10:34; 1 Cor. 1:26; Heb. 11:37; Matt. 19:23).

2. "But thou art rich" (in faith) (Luke 12:21; 1 Tim. 6:18; Jas. 2:5).

III. Christ's Wisdom in Speaking a Word to the Weary

1. He frankly tells them the worst (Isa. 50:4; Rev. 2:10; Acts 9:16; 20:22,23; Matt. 10:16-31; Luke 9:23; John 16:1).

2. The imprisoning and killing power of the devil and why (vs. 10; Matt. 16:23; 2 Chron. 32:31; Jas. 1:12).

3. "Ten days" is prophetic time for the duration of the "tribulation," which lasted from the demise of Nerva to the death of Trajan, A. D. 117, that is, ten years (Gen. 47:9, 28; Numb. 14; Ezek. 4:4).

4. For history of this "ten day" tribulation, see correspondence between Pliny and Trajan.

5. Briefness of the trial is urged as a motive for patient endurance of it (Isa. 26:20; 54:8; Psa. 30:5; Matt. 24:22; 1 Pet. 1:6; 5:10; 2 Cor. 4:17).

IV. The Promise

1. "Crown of life." A garland of victory, a diadem of royalty (vs. 10; Jas. 1:12; 1 Tim. 4:8; 1 Pet. 3:4; Isa. 52:3; Rev. 4:4; 5:10).

2. "Not hurt of the second death." The "crown of life" stands opposed to the "second death." There is a second life for the righteous, and a second death for the wicked. As there is a "life" for the righteous subsequent to death, so there is a "death" for the wicked after death (Heb. 9: 27; 11:35-40; Luke 12:4,5; Rev. 20:6,14; 21:8).

COMMUNICATIONS

"They shall make known unto you all things which are done here" (Col. 4:9).

Dear Restitution and Brethren and Sister in Christ:

I am still on the land of the living, but not very strong. I am nearly seventy-two years old. I am strong in the faith of the promises made to the fathers, and I am looking for the soon coming of our Redeemer and King. The Bible and The Restitution are my preachers and my guides. In my weakness I try to show others the way of life eternal, but it seems they are established in their way and cannot see anything but a sky kingdom and a home in heaven. It grieves me to think that some of my children are with them, but all I can do is to warn them of their danger. It seems they do not like this, but my love for them is strong, and I think we are nearing the end of the Gentile times, and we should all see that our lamps are trimmed and bright as we are in troublesome times, and men's hearts are failing them for fear of the things that are coming on the earth. The preachers are preaching war, and everything else but the gospel of the kingdom, but the time will soon come which will prove our faith. May the time soon come when peace will flow like a river.

Your looking for Christ,

Jesse Harrold.

1st Separate Detachment 154 Depot Brigade,
Barrack B B 52, Camp Meade, Md.
Jan. 5th, 1918.

Dear Brothers and Sisters of the One Faith:

I cannot fully express my appreciation for the very appropriate presents which you are so kind as to send me. My heart simply rejoiced when I opened the packages and saw what they contained. They were more appropriate than anything else you could have sent. I want to thank all the dear brothers and sisters who are making my camp life so very much happier.

I arrived here in Camp Meade on Nov. 5th, and the next day I showed my non-combatant papers to the Captain, and he said he would see after my case. On Nov. 9th, the Captain sent me to the Col. and after short talk with Col. Sweegy I was sent or transferred to the 1st separate detachment, 154 Depot Brigade, which consists of all the conscientious objectors in Camp Meade; and upon arriving here I had a talk with Col. Bond. He asked me what branch of service would I do. I told him that I would do non-combatant work in either the medical or quartermaster departments. I signed up for the quartermaster department Nov. 9th, and about fifteen other conscientious objectors signed up also; and all these applications for transfers were sent to Gen. Kuhn, who was our commanding General at that time. He tried to transfer us, but did not succeed. We did not hear anything from the transfer until Dec. 29th. Dec. 29th General Nicholsen, who succeeded General Kuhn as our commanding General, gave an address to all the conscientious objectors who were members of religious denominations who do not believe in taking part in war. He asked how many of us would do work for the Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., Knights of Columbus, and the Hebrew Association until the president makes his decision. About thirty volunteered to do this kind of work, and he went on to say that he highly respected conscientious objectors who were members of religious denominations whose creed forbids participation in war, which consists here in this camp of Dunkards, Minnonites, Quakers, Adventists, Russellites, and myself, all of whom the Local Boards gave Form No. 174; and that he wanted all of the other conscientious objectors such as Socialists, I. W. W., two Catholics, and one Methodist separated from us at once and put in a room to themselves, which was done.

On Dec. 31st we had another talk with General Nicholsen, and he wanted to know how many would accept, transferred now. I gave the sub- or quartermaster departments at this time, and that he thought that he could get as many as would accuept, transferred now . I gave the subject careful consideration and after finding out what the quartermaster department fully consisted of, I decided to accept Base Hospital work. On Jan. 2nd I signed an application for a transfer to the medical department, but I do not know how long it will be before I am transferred. About fifteen others beside myself signed up for the medical department, and about the same number signed up for the quartermaster department.

We have not been doing any drilling but take about a five mile walk twice a day except Wednesday afternoon, Saturday afternoon, and Sunday. On these days visitors are allowed. About ten of us are detailed each day to help prepare our meals and wash up. Two out of each four rooms are detailed to keep the rooms clean and warm. We run short of coal very often, and then we go out in the woods and cut down trees and bring them in for our own use only. We must furnish everything that we use and wear, and will not receive any money until we are transferred.

May the Lord soon come and establish peace on the earth, is my prayer.

Your brother in the Anointed One,

Eugene Miller.

WHAT WILL THE STONE SMITE ?

S. H. Thomas

In Daniel 2:35 the king in his vision saw a stone smite the image on the feet and break the feet and toes to pieces. Then the stone continued its work of destruction, breaking up and reducing to chaff the whole image, the brass, the silver, and the gold together. Many profound students have concluded that whereas the gold, the silver, and the brass, represent once mighty kingdoms which have passed into history and no longer exist, therefore they must necessarily be reproduced, and exist in some sense, before the stone can perform the work assigned to it; and it has been taught by many that these mighty empires represented by the gold, the silver, and the brass, will be reproduced representatively, or by proxy, in the person of a mighty king who must yet arise, described as a "rampant atheist," the little horn, "the beast," "the king of fierce countenance" the antichrist, etc. This wonderful individual it is said, will be prospered, and permitted to build up in a very short space of time a universal government that will fitly represent each of the different phases of the empires represented by the image. And it is this king and his government that will be destroyed by the stone.

Now this may be a correct solution of the problem, but I have my doubts about it. To me the theory has a strained and man-made appearance. Come ! let us examine this image more carefully and see if we cannot reach a more scriptural and reasonable conclusion.

We notice first, that the image was merely a vision, used to represent the Gentile governments which should bear rule during the Gentile dispensation.

Second, we notice that Nebuchadnezzar saw the whole image, not merely the head which represented himself, but the entire image. And it was complete when he saw it. He saw its feet and toes at that time, just as clearly as the head. Therefore we conclude that the entire image existed at that time, complete in all its parts, otherwise he could not have so seen it.

As before said, this image represented human or Gentile dispensations or governments. It existed in Daniel's day in all its cruelty, corruption, selfishness, and injustice. And it exists today, wearing the same hideous and blood stained cloak. Nebuchadnezzar died, but the image at whose head he stood (Gentile dominion) remained. Cyrus, Darius, and Alexander, have passed into history, but the image remains. No characteristic of it has passed away. As we descend the stream of time from its head to its breast and arms, corruption and selfish violence, bloodshed, and human misery still characterize it. And onward to its belly, thighs, and feet, we find no change. Prompted by selfish love of gain and power, men are still tearing and rending each other like bloodthirsty savages, while idolatry, skepticism, and infidelity sit enthroned on its haughty brow. Surely the same old image of Gentile misrule and corrupt forms of government still exits, in all its former power. Nothing has been lost by the lapse of time and this ancient representation of Gentile dominion stands before us as complete, terrible, and repulsive in these days of its feet and toes as in the days of its head. But the stone will very soon come to smite it on the feet (or in the latter part of its dominion), and will continue to smite, until every vestige of existing Gentile governments will be reduced to chaff and scattered to the four winds of heaven, and replace them with a new and righteous government wherein judgment, and justice will sit enthroned; and our long promised King will reign, under whose gentle and beneficent rule "Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

In view of these facts we reach the conclusion that the image was merely a vision, used to represent human governments.

That human government existed, complete in all its corrupt and revolting parts in the days of its head (beginning), as in the days of its feet (ending), that when the stone smites the image on its feet (during the last days of human government) and utterly destroys it, leaving not a vestige remaining, replacing the old and corrupt with a new and righteous form of government, then will the stone have reduced the iron, the brass, the silver, and the gold, to chaff together. May God speed the day, is our prayer.

Lesson XXI

Divine Love

Memory Text

"And we have known and believed the love that God hath to us. God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God, and God in him" (1 John 4:16).

1. "But thou, O Lord, art a God full of compassion and gracious, longsuffering, and plenteous in mercy and truth" (Psa. 86:15; 103:8,9; 145:8,9).

2. "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life" (John 3:16; Rom. 5:8; 1 John 4:9,10; 1 John 3:16).

3. "We love him because he first loved us" (1 John 4:19).

4. "Jesus saith unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God, with all thy heart, with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets" (Matt. 22:37-40; John 13:34; 15:12, 17: Rom. 13:8-10).

5. "Though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains and have not charity (love, R. V.) I am nothing" (1 Cor. 13:2, whole chapter).

6. "No man hath seen God at any time. If we love one another God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us" (1 John 4:12).

7. "Beloved let us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born (begotten, R. V.) of God, and knoweth God. He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love" (1 John 4:7,8).

8. "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother abideth in death" (1 John 3:14).

9. "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ ? . . . . . I am persuaded that neither death nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord" (Rom. 8: 35-39).

Practical Truths

It is possible to serve God through a sense of fear of his power, or of adoration of his majesty. The only worthy service is that which springs from love. God is not a tyrant; he is not a cold unfeeling being. He is love. Love is divine, not human. Men learn love only as they know God. Love is the motive power of the gospel. Jesus in every word and deed was an embodiment of love. Where love is no law is needed. Without love all other service is without beneficial effect, because inspired by selfish motives. Love is the opposite of selfishness, and as love grows selfishness dies. As we manifest love in our lives we prove that we are filled with the spirit of God. Love in our lives is proof of divine begettal for everlasting life.

Notes on the Lesson

God is Love.—Everything in nature and in the gospel proves that the chief attribute of Deity is beneficence, and that all things work together for good.

1. Full of Compassion.—A being who is filled with love and compassion and tender mercies will deal gently with the erring. It is impossible to harmonize such Scriptures with the notions that God will eternally torment those who disobey his law; or that he will destroy in the day of Judgment the ignorant who have never learned of him.

2. Gave His Son.—Jesus, the Son of God, who died for our sins and rose for our justification, is the chief example of the love of God. It was while we were sinners and enemies that God so loved us (Rom. 5:7,8). Mark the lesson. It was the love of the Father that sent the Son, not as some teach—the love of the Son that persuaded the angry Father The Son was a representative of God's love and God's will (John 6:3, 9, 40, 57, 12:49,50; 14:10).

Might Not Perish.—But for God's love all would perish because all are sinners, and the wages, or natural effect of sin is death. Love has provided a way of escape.

3. The Motive For Love.—Like begets like. Love begets love. We cannot love God because he is great or because he is glorious. Not because we have learned that he will give us something; that would be a selfish motive. We love because we are beloved.

4. The Perfect Law. –Laws are for restraint of those who would do wrong. Man's first duty is to his Creator, and his second is to his fellow-man. He who loves God keeps his commandments, and he who loves his neighbor does him no harm. If all mankind would obey these commandments nothing more would be required. The greater comprehends the less. The law of Christ fills up the requirements of the law of Moses and goes beyond it.

5. Love the Test of True Service.—Unless the Spirit of Christ is in us we are none of his. Without the love of God shed abroad in our hearts our Christian lives will be barren and unfruitful. If we are indeed children of God we must grow into his likeness.

6. God Dwelleth in Us.—Love is from God—it is not natural to man. Faith and hope are human attributes, but we cannot manifest love without some knowledge of God. In this way God can dwell in us, and we can work the works of God as we do deeds of love.

7. Begotten of God.—Love is a proof that we have been begotten by the incorruptible seed, and that the new creature in Christ Jesus is alive. That which is begotten of Spirit is spirit, and he who manifests the fruits of love gives evidence of godliness.

Knoweth God.—To know, or get acquainted with God is the chief end of life. It is life eternal (John 17:3). The time is coming when all shall know him (Heb. 8:11; Jer. 31:34; Hab. 2:14; Isa. 11:10), and in that day love will fill every heart.

8. Evidence of New Life.—The manifestation of the love of God by mortal men is evidence of beginning of the new life in changing our natures. That work of the indwelling of God which begins with the planting of the incorruptible seed at our begettal by the Spirit will work with transforming power, and in the day of his coming we shall be made like our Lord (2 Cor. 3:18; 1 John 3:2,3; Eph. 4:15).

9. Inseparable Bond of Union.—Love is a golden chain which binds together the Father, the Son, and the disciples. By this means alone can there be "Trinity in Unity" (John 17:11,21-23). The unity of spirit, and that the spirit of divine love by means of which we dwell in God and God dwells in us. This bond of union no other power in heaven above or earth beneath or the waters under the earth can break.

Suggestive Topics and Questions

1. General Evidence.—Apart from the gospel can you name any evidences of God's love and mercy (Matt. 5:45; Acts 17:24, 27) ? Would it be possible to love a person and at the same time cause them needless suffering ? Can our God have love for man and at the same time doom him to a life of eternal misery ?

2. Special Evidences.—What is the greatest special evidence of God's love ? What does the Son of God save us from ? Could man claim eternal life as a right (Rom. 5:8; 6:23) ? What other special evidence have we of God's love (Heb. 1:1, 2; 2 Pet. 1:4; Rom. 15:4) ? What relationship has the Christian that is evidence of God's love (2 Cor. 6:18; Gal. 3:27) ?

3. Divine Unity.—In what manner can we have God dwell in us ? Can we in the same way be said to be in God ? Where is the source of true love ? If all men loved God and their fellowmen, would they need any restraining laws ? What spirit controlled all our Savior's actions ? If we follow the spirit of love can we be said to have the spirit of Christ (Rom. 8:9) ?

4. Love and Life Eternal.—Is there life eternal for any who are not related to God ? What evidence can we have in this life that we have received part of the divine nature ? What is the test by which we can know that we have been begotten again for the spiritual life ? What is it to "know God" ? What result will follow when all men "know God" ?

Golden Text: 1 Timothy 6:6

Make This A Day

Make this a day. There is no gain
In brooding over days to come;
The message of today is plain,
The future's lips are ever dumb—
The work of yesterday is gone
For good or ill, let come what may;
But now we face another dawn.
Make this the day.

Though yesterday we failed to see
The urging hand and earnest face
That men call opportunity;
We failed to know the time or place
For some great deed; what need to fret?
The dawn comes up a silver gray
And golden moments must be met.
Make this the day.

This day of yours; your work is yours;
The odds are not who pays your hire,
The thing accomplished—that endures,
If it be what the days require.
He who takes up his daily round,
As one new armored for the fray,
Tomorrow steps on solid ground.
Make this the day.

The day is THIS, the time is NOW;
No better hour was ever here—
Who waits upon the when and how
Remains for ever in the rear.
Though yesterday was wasted stuff,
Your feet will still seek out the way,
Tomorrow holds not time enough.—
Make this the day.

An Acknowledgment

Sixty-eight of our friends have sent us either Christmas or New Year greetings which we hereby acknowledge. A word of encouragement or good cheer is always appreciated. Thank you.

A Correction

In issue of January 1st. under the heading "Our New Year Greeting" appears the sentence "the salvation of Paul to Philemon." Kindly correct same to read "the salutation of Paul," which will make it more understandable. Personally we are not astonished at these errors occasionally occuring, having a slight knowledge of the work of getting up a paper. Our wonder is that they do not occur more often.

"He hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness" (Isa. 61:10).

God gave his dear Son a ransom for us; the holy one for the transgressors, the innocent for the guilty, the righteous for the unrighteous. For what else could cover our sins but his righteousness? In whom could we transgressors and ungodly be justified, but only in the Son of God? Oh! sweet exchange! Oh! unsearchable contrivance! that the transgressions of many should all be hidden in one righteous Person, and the righteousness of One should justify many transgressors!

It thus appears that the pardoned sinner's "change of raiment" is just Christ's righteousness put upon him, imputed to him.

Among the hundred words which stand most prominent in the Bible service is very conspicuous and more so the conception it represents. Here is the ultimate end toward which all else properly tends—the true goal of salvation and sanctification. No man lives to himself. He is saved that he may be sanctified—conformed to the image of God's dear Son; but even such conformity reaches its highest results in helping others to a like destiny, and so all culminates in glory to God. How plain it is that those who are content to be saved from ruin themselves, and do nothing to rescue others, are "blind and cannot see afar off."

Our Weekly Puzzle

"Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

Who gave this advice, and to whom was it given? Where can it be found?

Answer in next issue.

Answer to puzzle in last issue:

The passage was writen by the apostle Paul to the church of God at Corinth, and can be found in 1 Cor. 1:30, 31.

Some Difference

It makes a difference, yes, indeed,
To this advice attend:
While all men seek a friend in need,
They dodge a needy friend.

Paul in writing to Titus said: Unto the pure all things are pure: but unto them that are defiled and unbelieving, is nothing pure; but even their mind and conscience is defiled."

Therewith Be Content

The habit of contentment is formed, not from without, but from within; and it is a wonderfully satisfying habit to own.

Stevenson says, "There is no duty we so much underestimate as the duty of being happy. By being happy we sow anonymous benefits upon the world which remain unknown even to ourselves; or, when they are disclosed, surprise nobody so much as benefactors. A happy man or woman is a better thing to find than a five-pound note. He or she is a radiating focus of good will, and their entrance into a room is as though another candle had been lighted."

It is strange that contentment should not be more widespread, considering how very common and close at hand are the elements that go into it.

Work—-first of all
Get work. Get work—be sure 'tis better far
Than what you work to get.

Simple tastes—the power of finding great satisfaction in little things—is another ingredient.

Ruskin has it: "To watch the corn grow on the blossoms set; to draw hard breath over plowshare or spade; to read, to think, to love, to pray; these are the things that make men happy."

I would not have any one to be slothful; there is a difference between the person that does not worry and the person who merely does not care. The man who stands still, or slides back, is entitled to no respect.

But he who is wise enjoys the various stages of his program while he is passing through them. St. Paul, for instance, did a good sized job in the world and left a shining record. He was forever "pressing forward to his goal"; yet it was he who wrote: "For I have learned in whatsoever state I am, therewith to be content."

Of itself, prayer will achieve nothing. Prayer must be backed by works to be successful.

A prayer that does not lead to works is of little value.

Back your work by prayer and back your prayer by work, and watch the result.

Be Not Deceitful

Camouflage never deceives God.

We are hearing a great deal about camouflage just now. It means masquerading—making things appear what they are not. A railroad station is so changed in appearance by camouflage that an aviator flying over the enemy's territory mistakes it for some building of little importance.

Camouflage works all right with aviators, but it never works with God. We may conceal secret sins from the world, from our families, from our wives, but we cannot conceal them from God. There is no searchlight that throws such a powerful light upon the sins of our hearts as God's love.

Be Not Afraid, Neither Be Thou Dismayed
Josh. 1:9

Say to them of a fearful heart, be strong. Isa. 35:4.
I will hold thy hand and will keep thee. Isa. 42:6.
I will cause them to walk in a straight way. Jer. 31:9.
He is a buckler to all that trust in him. Psa. 18:30.
My heart trusteth in him and I am helped. Psa. 28:7.
He leadeth me beside the still water. Psa. 23:2.

SECT IS AGAINST WAR

Burton S. Richman, who registered under the draft from the Hotel Richford, with the Seventh Division Board, has notified that board that he is a conscientious objector on religious grounds. He claims he is a Christadelphian, a religious sect which was organized here in 1860.

In filing his objection he uses a printed form, and says that Christadelphians living in Great Britain have been exempted. He also says that during the Civil War Christadelphians were exempted in the South, and claims were pending in the North when the war ended.

In the form it is stated that Christadelphians object to both combatant and non-combatant service. The matter will be submitted to the adjutant general for a ruling. One paragraph of the form says:

"God commands those who would serve him to 'come out from the world and be separate' and to be 'in the world but not of it.' In compliance to his commands Christadelphians as a class (myself included) have 'come out from the world' and take no part in its affairs, either socially, religiously or politically. We do not vote, nor are we affiliated in any way with any political party. We do recognize and discharge the duty of submitting to all laws enacted by the government where such laws do not conflict with the laws of God. I have deeply-rooted convictions that the laws of God are higher than the laws of men, and when the two come in conflict that there is but one thing to do, i. e., to obey God."—Rochester Times.

The creation of man, and the sentence God passed is the A, B, C, of his book; and when we learn this, if life we desire, we must to Jesus Christ look. "For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead. For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order: Christ the first fruits. Afterward they that are Christ's at his coming" (1 Cor. 15:21-23). It is he who says, "I am the resurrection and the life" (John 11:25). "I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold, I am alive for evermore, and have the keys of hell and of death" (Rev. 1:18). Good news to hear that we have a Savior who has the keys of hell (or the grave) and of death; or in other words, who has the power to unlock the grave and give life. I can say with Paul that "I am not ashamed of the gospel (or good news) of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to everyone that believeth" (Rom. 1:16).—Emma Fugate.

A PAPER REPRESENTING THE CHURCH OF GOD, AND DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF "THE THINGS CONCERNING THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND THE NAME OF JESUS CHRIST" (ACTS 8:12)

VOLUME 70 CLEVELAND, O. FEBRUARY 5, 1918 NUMBER 5

FALSE DOCTRINE

In the last times, will come teachers
Having so-called itching ears,
Who will preach to men new doctrines
As a calm for guilty fears.

Led by self-styled men of science,
Men will turn from truth to fables,
Seek to know the occult meaning
Of Planchette and moving tables,

Some there be who tell us plainly,
"There is no such thing as sin."
If no sin, we need no Savior,
But are pure without, within.

If no sin, nor need of Savior,
Then Christ's sacrifice was vain,
And his brutal crucifixion
Brought to human kind no gain.

And our Father was mistaken
When "he sent his only Son"
To be our propitiation
And the world's, not our's, alone.

Sin is real: we need a Savior,
Christ the Lord came in the flesh;
Let us not reject his message
And thus crucify afresh.

We are told in "Health and Science"
That the Savior was not dead;
His disciples were mistaken
And by them we are mislead.

But we have the Savior's statement,
"I was dead, but am alive";
And he adds the precious promise,
"As I live, ye too shall live."

When we barter holy Scripture
For the words of woman's dotage
We are trading great possessions
For a mess of Esau's pottage.

J. J Bronson

All one's life is music, if one touches the notes rightly and in time.

For an hundred that bear adversity, there is hardly one that can bear prosperity.

"Blessed are the pure in heart" (Jesus).

THE GREAT COMMISSION

"And Jesus came and spake unto them, saying, All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father and of the Son and of the Holy Ghost. Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you, and lo I am with you always, even unto the end of the world" (Matt. 28:18-20).

The foregoing quotation from Matthew, presents what is generally known as our Lord's last Commission to his Apostles previous to his departure from earth to heaven, and truly, we should ever be willing to cherish the last words of a parting friend, and know their fullest meaning and importance. It is our intention to analyze this Commission and develop from it that system of instruction and truth taught by the Apostles and their followers.

There is not a sect in all Christendom, but what, in some form or other, date their origin from, or faith on, this Commission. The Papal church claims from it Apostolic succession and spiritual power. Two hundred and fifty popes, successively claim to have worn the mantle of Peter, and held the keys of the Kingdom of God. The Protestant clericals ignore these arrogant claims of the Roman pontiffs as blasphemies, and yet they claim that what spiritual power they have is derived from this great Commission to the Apostles. Various views concerning the divinity of Christ and of baptism, and miracles, have originated by giving different interpretations to this portion of divine teachings. It is not our intention to examine and refute, by scriptural arguments, these various views, but to present an exposition as shall accord with the whole tenor of inspiration, and unfold in a harmonious manner the purpose of the Deity as set forth in the prophetic and apostolic writings, and when understood and obeyed will qualify an alien to inherit that rest which remains for the people of God.

In order to faithfully expound the points suggested in the Commission, we shall introduce the following heads as covering the area of the subject:

1. The "all power" given to Christ;
2. The command, "Go teach the nations," and the things taught;
3. Baptism into the name, and what is meant thereby;
4. The things to be observed by those Christianized; and
5. The end of the world.

Jesus says, "All power is given to me in heaven and in earth." This expression has led many to suppose that Messiah must be the Eternal One, otherwise he could not have had "all power," but it will be seen at once that this power was not underived, but was delegated or transferred from the Father to the Son. Hence Christ did not possess original power, but derived it from the Father, which at once shows that he is not the All-Wise One.

There are three kinds of power, physical, civil, and ecclesiastical. Now, in the light of Scripture facts, we cannot for a moment suppose that Jesus meant all these powers, when he said that all power was given to him. The word "power," in this connection, simply means authority. That is to say, Jesus had been authorized by his Father to qualify and send out his disciples to proclaim the divine system of salvation to the nations. The authority is the Headship of the Church, even as Paul says, when speaking of Christ, "and hath put all things under his feet and gave him to be the Head over all the Church, which is his body, the fulness of him that filleth all in all" (Eph 1:22,23). To infer that Chriist has now kingly power and is reigning because he has a certain kind of authority, is to infer more than the language will justify, for Jesus has not yet attained a position where all things are subjected to him. The Apostle assures us, that "we see not yet all things put under him" (Heb. 2). This language would be incompatible with the idea that Christ is now a King, or that he is reigning in his kingdom. The Scriptures present Christ as seated at the right hand of the Father, expecting till his enemies are made his footstool, which would not accord with his position as a King. The power therefore, must be ecclesiastical and limited to those of the faith, of whom he is the Head and Redeemer. The power exercised by Christ while on earth, may be classified as follows:

1. The power to perform miracles;
2. To proclaim the truth; and
3. To forgive sins, and to instruct, and qualify others to teach the way of salvation.

When Messiah was about to leave the disciples, and after he gave them the great Commission, he instructed them to tarry at Jerusalem until they were endued with power from on high. As ambassadors of the Christ it was necessary that the Apostles should be clothed with authority and miraculous power, in order to vindicate their claim and ratify their mission. This power was given in fulfilment of the Messiah's promise, that his disciples should be baptized with Holy Spirit, which event took place on the day of Pentecost, ten days from the day of Christ's ascension.

After the Apostles received the Holy Spirit, they had the indwelling power, as Jesus had before them. They performed miracles; had power to forgive sins. (Matt. 16:19), and preach the gospel; organize Ecclesias and place over them bishops and deacons. Hence the Apostles could say, "He that is of God, heareth us." They preached the gospel with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven. They settled all points of difference among the Ecclesias, and wrote inspired letters "as a guide to those who were to believe through their word." The power therefore, given to Christ, was afterwards extended to the Apostles, and they were the qualified teachers after he ascended on high.— H. V. R.

A PRAYING CHURCH

Dear Bereans:

Did you ever stop and meditate on what a power and influence we might have on ourselves and the church in general if all were a consecrated and prayful people, devoted to the interests of God and welfare of each other? In order to see what can be done by prayer, let us look to God's word and see what prayer by the faithful few has done in the past.

First, Christ was a praying man. One of the sweetest pictures in the life of Christ is portrayed by Mark. "And in the morning a great while before day, he rose up and went out in a desert place and there prayed." Why could he not lift up his heart in prayer as he lay upon his couch? He could, no doubt; but he preferred the place of solitude, the silence of nature, where he could pour out his heart to God.

We might also ask why did Jesus need to pray at all? Could not he command the wind and seas and the forces of nature? Yes, but he had a nature wherein he was tempted in all points like unto his brehren, and it had to be met by a daily and constant communion with the Father. Especially do we find Jesus praying at every crisis of his life. He had recourse to prayer at his baptism; when making the selection of his apostles; just before feeding the five thousand; on the mount of transfiguration; in his last intimate farewell meeting with his apostles; at his betrayal in the garden of Gethsemane; and when hanging by his pierced hands and feet between heaven and earth on the cruel cross of Calvary. If there is a time above all others when we need the help of prayer it is when facing a crisis.

He also taught his disciples to pray. We too, his followers are to pray. If Jesus needed to pray, do not we need to pray? If prayer was his daily custom, why not ours? If prayer helped him, why not us? If he loved the solitary place and the quiet hour alone with God, should we not esteem it an equal privilege and great joy to be often on the hill-side with none but God near? If at times of crises he prayed with special intensity, why should we not? If he could not get along without ceaselesly calling on God, how can we? Yea, more; every reason that can be given why Christ should pray, becomes a reason a thousand-fold greater why we should. If he was always and everywhere the praying Christ, O church of God and Bereans, how much more should we be praying Christians!

Second, a praying church. The apostolic church has always been considered a model to pattern after. We have been accustomed to look to it for doctrinal rather than practical purposes. We have used it for settling its rule of faith and practice, its foundation principles and such, which is right and proper; but it is also a model in some other respects which touch on the springs of practical living and influence us more strongly in our daily lives. Particularly is it a model of a praying church. Let us read where they returned to Jerusalem after the ascension of Christ. The apostles entered an upper room and continued steadfastly in prayer, until the day of Pentecost was come. It was a protracted prayer meeting, and out of it came the church of God of the three thousand who became obedient to the faith. It is said, "They continued steadfastly in the teachings and fellowship, breaking of bread and prayers." When Peter and John were commanded to cease preaching they went to their own company, and lifted up their voices to God with one accord; and when they had prayed the place was shaken where they were gathered together, and they were all filled with the Holy Spirit, and spake the words of God with boldness.

No less remarkable was Peter's deliverance from death by Herod. But prayer was made without ceasing by the church unto God for him. What was the outcome, dear Bereans ? An angel of God came to his rescue. Read Acts 12th chapter. After this he went to the house of Mary where many were gathered together praying. His deliverance was a remarkable answer to the prayers of the church. "The eyes of the Lord are open unto the righteous, and his ears are open unto their prayers."

James tells us, "The supplication of a righteous man availeth much.' Elijah prayed that it might not rain, and it was withheld three years and six months. He prayer again and heaven gave rain and the earth gave her increase. Even John on the lonely island of Patmos refers to prayer.

These are all wonderful instances that God hears and answers prayer. So we see the early church was a praying church, and today the praying church is the living, spiritual, working church. It should take God into all its plans and purposes. It should feel its dependence on him, seek his counsel and aid, and submit all things to his guidance.

The value of such prayer to a church is that it blesses the hearts and lives of the members, increases their zeal and earnestness, and gives them power to work for God; enables them to consecrate themselves so as to say, "Father, make me to be just what thou wouldest have me to be, and do what thou would have me do." And as God has delivered his people in the past from death and trials, so he will again to show his power that he is all and in all, if we are his devoted people at heart.

So church of God and noble Bereans, let us consecrate our all to God and offer up united prayers in love and harmony with God's will for guidance, protection, deliverance and final salvation from the perils of these last days. Our Father in heaven, we know how precious in thy sight thy church is. It cost the life of thy Son. It has come to us as a priceless inheritance. May we make and keep it a glorious church, not having spot or wrinkle. We pray that it may be glorious in its doctrine, purity, work, unity, and power. Especially dear Father, do we pray that the day may speedily come when there will be one flock and one Shepherd, and may the day be not far distant when the knowledge of the Lord shall cover the earth as the waters the great deep, when the heathen shall be Christ's inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth his possession; when he shall have dominion from sea to sea, and from the river unto the ends of the earth. May the church be the instrument of this glorious consummation. In every land and continent of earth may it unfurl the banner of the cross. May the globe on which we dwell one day be the trophy through the church by Christ's all conquering power.

Mrs. May Moore.

OUR DUTY

Have we obeyed from the heart the form of doctrine laid down in the word ? Yes. Then have we presented our bodies a livng sacrifice, holy acceptable unto God ? What say ? Have we arisen from the watery grave and walked the new life in Christ ? These are some of the questions for the child of God to ask himself.

For the lack of some of these most important things many are weak and sickly (1 Cor. 11:30). "If we would judge ourselves we should not be judged" (1 Cor. 11:31).

If we have given our whole life to Christ pray tell us how much of our time and means have we left to render to the world in things they ask of us which are not in accord with, or in harmony with, God's will for his child ? "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins" (Rev. 18:4). "I pray not that thou shouldst take them out of the world, but that thou shouldst keep them from the evil" (John 17:15). "They are not of the world." What is that, please ? May we not assist the world to make things better for all the world to live in ? Now dear Master, please have a little consideration for us and the time wherein we live, for you know, dear Lord, that if we do not do as the rest of the world does, they will look down on us and call us all kinds of evil names and perhaps worse if we do not do as they ask us to do.

Dear Lord, forgive us if this is wrong, but please let us do it. You know it is so hard to suffer persecution. "Whosoever shall be ashamed of me and my words in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him also shall the Son of Man be ashamed when he cometh in the glory of his Father" (Mark 8:38). Let us cast off the works of darkness and put on the armor of light. Let us walk, not in strife and envyings, but put ye on the Lord Jesus Christ, and make no provision for the flesh, to fulfil the lusts thereof (Rom. 13: 12-14). If we suffer (with him) we shall also reign with him. If we deny him, he also will deny us (2 Tim. 2:12).

"But there were false prophets among the people, as there shall be false teachers among you, who privily shall bring in damnable heresies, even denying the Lord that bought them, and bring upon themselves swift destruction. And many shall follow their pernicious ways, by reason of whom the way of truth shall be evil spoken of. And through coveteousness shall they with feigned words make merchandise of you" (2 Pet. 2: read the chapter). "Yea, and all that will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. Evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived" (2 Tim. 3:12,13). "All they that take the sword shall perish with the sword" (Matt. 26:52). "Whosoever shall seek to save his (present) life shall lose it; and whosoever shall lose his (present) life, for my sake shall find it (or preserve it unto life eternal) (Matt. 10:39). "From whence comes wars and fightings among you? Come they not of your lusts? Ye lust and have not; ye kill and desire to have and cannot obtain; ye fight and war yet ye have not because ye ask not. Ye ask and receive not because ye ask amiss that ye may consume it upon your lusts. Ye adulterers and adulteresses, know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Whosoever therefore will be a friend of the world is the enemy of God. Resist the devil and he will flee from you. Draw nigh to God and he will draw nigh to you. Cleanse your hands, ye sinners; and purify your hearts, ye double-minded (Jas. 4: read the chapter). "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world" (Jas. 1:27).

Worldly spots and beastly marks, oh! Now be careful my brother, my sister. What are the worldly spots that James speaks of? Have we received any hint from the foregoing Scriptures? "The mark of the beast," that sounds bad, too; but what does it mean? Go with me to God's word and see if we can find an answer.

The prophet Daniel informs us in Dan. 7th and 8th chapters that this world was to be ruled by powers represened by wild beasts. How long? Until the coming of the Son of Man. Has the Son of Man come yet? Well, no one has seen him. Jesus speaking to John on the isle of Patmos seems to refer to the same thing in the 13th chapter. He even goes so far as to say they would cause every one to have the mark of the beast in their foreheads or in their hands, viz., all those whose names are not written in the Lamb's book of life. These have the Father's name written in their foreheads.

We have taken on the name of Christ, and he has in the Father's name; and obedience to Christ will cause the Father's name to be written on us, and our names to be written in the book of life. But after this has been all said and done, supposing someone comes along and would represent himself as an angel of light and try to persuade us to walk with the world in this, that, or the other thing, that we ought to know Christ would not do: Should we listen to his subtle teachings, or should we say "Get thee behind me?" Remember that if we yield to his reasonings he would deceive even the very elect if it were possible (Matt. 24:24), and then we would have our names blotted out of the book of life (Rev. 3:5). On the other hand if we are faithful unto death, we are promised a crown of life (Rev. 2:10). If we obey Christ's commands to preach the gospel, visit and assist the widows and fatherless and the other things he has laid down for us, we will not have any time or means to spend on the things of this world, and besides all this, Christ has shown that we cannot bear the mark of the beast and come up in the first resurrection (Rev. 20:4).

Then, brethren, let us keep busy with God's work and we will not be troubled with the other mark.

Now, brethren and sisters, does it not behove us to examine ourselves to see whether we are in the faith or not? We may believe we have no life outside of Christ; we may believe Christ must return to give it to us; we may believe the saints will reign with Christ; and we may believe ever so many truths; but are our lives in harmony with the truths we believe?

We cannot serve God and Mammon (Matt. 6:24). The world will take care of its own, but who will carry on God's work if his children neglect their duty?

Let us work the works of God while it is called today for the night cometh when no man can work (John 9:4).

Brethren, the Scriptures are fast fulfilling before our eyes and if we are not careful one of these days we will wake up to the fact that Jesus has come and caught away his elect, and that we have been left to go through the great tribulation. Oh Lord, preserve us from such a fate.

Let us study to show ourselves approved of God. Then we need not worry as to what the world approves. Workmen that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth.

Submitted in love and in hope of eternal life when Christ comes, by your brother in Christ.

THE LORD'S SECOND COMING WILL BE LITERAL

Jesus Will Appear in Person, Says This Theologian

To The Editor of The Evening Sun:

Sir—Undoubtedly the Lord's second coming will be literal and the Savior himself will appear in person. Two messengers from heaven told the disciples that even as they saw him taken up into heaven, so he "in like manner" would return (Acts 1:11). And that he was a person then we may well believe from the experience of Thomas (John 20:25-29). Moreover, spirits (our conception of them, and this was spoken to us) do not shout (1 Thess. 4:16); nor do they drink wine (Mark 14:25); nor are they ashamed (Mark 8:38).

Christ himself says (Matt. 24:30; 26:24) that all the tribes of earth shall see him coming in the clouds of heaven with power and glory; not as a cloud himself, or a disembodied spirit, but as one sitting on a throne. Every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him (Rev. 1:7; Zech. 12:10). Can one see holes in a spirit or discern a spear thrust in vapor?

From which we must conclude that he will come the second time as a person, in shape and form like us, who were made in his image (Gen. 1:27; John 10:30). How every eye is to see him need not concern us so much; rather should the clear statements made in Daniel 7:10; 2 Thess. 1:8; Heb. 10:27; Rev. 19:15-21, give us thought. From these, too, we gather that the unrighteous cannot behold him and live; yet they must behold him first, if for the same reason they are thus to die.

Let us not make any mistake about the Lord's second coming, as the Jews did regarding his first, for terrible has been their punishment.

Man seems ever to prefer his own theories to the facts of the Bible; a manifestation of his ego, I suppose. Great men of science like Huxley and Tyndall, have tried to abrogate the Genesis account of creation by the theory of evolution and spontaneous life, only at last to be compelled to admit that spontaneous life and the building up from nothing to something, from less good to better, is not possible, and life from life and gradual deterioration the only process compatible with nature and science. Huxley says: "The doctrine of biogenesis, or life from life, is victorious all along the line." More and more as we gain in true scientific knowledge do we find the Bible and it to agree.

Some few years ago men of learning and erudition were preaching and predicting the impossibility of future war. Banking interests, they said, would not furnish the money; people were too enlightened; engines of destruction too cataclysmic, and so on. Right on the eve of the most far-reaching and horrible war of all time they boasted in their man-made theories that it could not be, forgetting the facts of the Scriptures (Dan. 12:1; Joel 3:9; Matt. 24:6,7; Rev. 11:18).

The Bible facts are that Christ's second coming will be in person and literal, and that it will be soon. For, if we take the time and trouble to look about us we see the earth physically waxing old as a garment (Isa. 51:6); also we see men morally becoming more and more like the descriptions given in 2 Tim. 3:1-7 and James 5:1-5.

But whether his second coming is spiritual or personal, or both, or imminent or far off, we should so live all the time as if it were personal and imminent. For we may die in the next hour, and as far then as we are concerned the end will have come and our probation will have closed, and the event will have been to us very personal and very imminent.—Nicholas Deacon, in The Baltimore Evening Sun.

CHRIST'S COMING

What will be the state of the world when the Lord Jesus returns? "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of Man. They did eat, they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until the day that Noah entered the Ark, and the flood came and destroyed them all. Likewise, also, as it was in the days of Lot; they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded; but the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven and destroyed them all. Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of Man is revealed" (Luke 17:27,20).

Now since God has given such a testimoy in his word, we ought seriously to consider the remarkable fact, that the Lord Jesus is to come to this world, when things will be going on as in the days of Noah, and as in the days of Lot. The coming of the Lord Jesus is sufficient to cause fear in every heart that has not yet received forgiveness of sins, and that seriously considers the circumstances and consequences to be such as they are; for though it is very hard now to forget God, and the name of the Lord Jesus, yet in the day when he shall appear, it will be impossible to do so. In that day it will be said by unconverted men, to the rocks and mountains: "Fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: for the great day of his wrath has come: and who shall be able to stand?" (Rev. 6:16,17.)—Prophetic Times.

WHAT POWER DEPENDS ON

Acts 1:8

Power does not depend on volume of knowledge, on width of experience. Spiritual power, like hydraulic power, depends on height and pressure. The pressure of a column of water is not determined by its quantity, but by its height. The miners in the mountains go high among the snowy summits, tap the reservoirs that are hidden in lofty clefts and the lakes in old volcanic cups, bring the streams down the mountain slopes to the far away precious gold-bearing ledge, and tear the adamant to powder with those foaming streams. And when the Christian reaches beyond the clouds to the fountains of water that gush from he throne of God and makes of himself a channel for the streams of grace, then there is the power of God in his service, the pressure of a column higher than the stars, and the world's hard rock is made to yield its treasures. Prayer and communion with God are the great means of spiritual power.—Leander Turney

DON'T FORGET THE HELPING FUND

We whose names are given below, believing it to be our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the manager of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. Those whose circumstances do not permit of the paying for the paper themselves should notify the manager, signifying their willingness to accept the paper, and it will be cheerfully sent from the proceeds of this fund.

EDITORIAL

Abundance, like want, destroys many.

Brother Chas. Fankbonner writes: "I am enclosing money for a dozen copies of Lesson V, 'The Destructive and Constructive Work Attending the Establishment of the Kingdom of God.' It sure is a fine article. Mr. Day says it is the finest he ever read."

Brother J. A. Dickinson writes: "I want to take up the study of the' Bible Lessons on First Principles' that you are publishing. I have two copies sent me by the Berean Society. I like them so well I desire to take the study of the entire series. Please advise me what the cost will be, and when the other numbers of the series will be printed."

A subscriber of The Restitution writes to complain that while she is not a Russellite yet her views have been misrepresented in Lesson V. We welcome criticisms as well as commendations, but in this instance the complainant omits to state in what particular her belief is mis-stated. In the lesson only world-burning and Russellite theories are criticized, and that these have been correctly presented we are ready to prove. In truth, if this writer is not a Russellite, it is impossible for her views to be "mis-represented," for only Russellite views are represented and discussed. If she holds an intermediate doctrine of future probation which is different from Russell's, her view is not alluded to nor discussed, much less "mis-represennted," in Lesson V; but if she believes exactly the teaching of Russell on the subject then she is a Russellite; her views are Russell's; and then there is no mis-representation of anybody's views unless it can be shown that Russell's theory has been wrongly stated, which we deny.

From Sister W. H. Eidemiller we are sorry to learn of the protracted indisposition of Miss May Westfall, the daughter of Brother and Sister N. S. Westfall. Sister Eidemiller also makes some enquiries concerning Red Cross work. If she and others who are interested in the question will read an editorial in The Restitution entitled "An Explanation" of January 15, 1918, and Brother Lent's article in this issue, we think they will be satisfied both from Scripture and reason what their duty is in the matter. So-called charitable organizations may be very charitable to themselves, and they may aid needy worldly objects; but they have not and never will contribute one penny to the support of the truth. The truth of the matter is, the world loves its own and will take care of itself. If we do not love God's truth and take care of it and ourselves, no one else will. If God's children keep themselves clear of worldly entanglements, and support the cause of the truth as freely, enthusiastically, and liberally as the world furthers its plans and schemes, plenty, success, prosperity, and the blessing of God will be the sure result. "Choose you this day whom ye will serve" (Jos. 24:15).

As we predicted in an editorial some weeks ago, Lesson V, "The Destructive and Constructive Work Attending the Establishment of the Kingdom of God," is stirring up discussions wherever it goes. Truth usually turns "the world upside down" (Acts 17:6) because it is wrong side up. A Bible lesson which exposes two popular religious systems, world-burning and Russellism, is bound to provoke discussions and criticisms from those who believe and advocate these errors. This was anticipated and predicted. Why then, did we write the lesson ? Well, there is a small element of people in the world yet who have open minds, and who investigate and approve the truth. To instance an illustration: We gave Lesson V to five world-burners with the request that they state frankly after reading it what they thought of world-burning. In each case they abandoned the theory for "something better," to use their own words. They are all now learning the truth, and we hope soon to baptize them into a confession of the faith.

In answer to Brother Dickinson and others who have made similar enquiries about "Bible Lessons on First Principles," we may state that the complete series will consist of twelve numbers, three cents per lesson; twenty-five cents by the dozen. They are issued occasionally. When the series are complete they may be had either separately or bound. Our motive in printing them separately is to keep them cheap in price, and also to make it possible to order any single lesson on any subject that may be desired. Those who want them bound as a book for the library may order them after the series are complete. The following numbers are already printed and should be ordered now, as the money received from their sale goes into a fund to be used in the publication of the remaining issues:

Lesson I: Introduction: The Importance of Bible Study.

Lesson II: The Word of God in Threefold Aspect.

Lesson III: The Gospel of the Kingdom the Only True Gospel.

Lesson IV: "The Things Concerning the Kingdam of God."

Lesson: V: The Destructive and Constructive Work Attending the Establishment of the Kingdom of God.

Lesson VI: The Thousand Years Reign of Christ and the Saints.

Lesson VI will be ready to mail about February 20th. See the last page of The Restitution for further particulars.

CHRIST'S MESSAGE TO THE PERGAMENIAN CHURCH

"And to the angel of the church in Pergamos write: These things saith he which hath the sharp sword with two edges: I know thy works, and where thou dwellest, even where satan's seat is: and thou holdest fast my name, and hast not denied my faith, even in those days wherein Antipas was my faithful martyr, who was slain among you, where satan dwelleth. But I have a few things against thee, because thou hast them that hold the doctrine of Balaam, who taught Balak to cast a stumbling block before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed to idols, and to commit fornication. So hast thou also them that hold the doctrine of the Nicolaitans, which thing I hate. Repent; or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will fight against thee with the sword of my mouth. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the spirit saith unto the churches: To him that overcometh will I give to eat of the hidden manna, and I will give him a white stone, and in the stone a new name written, which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it" (Rev. 2:12-17).

History of the Church

1. Pergamos was the birthplace of Galen, second only to Hippocrates as a doctor—Contained 200,000 volume library—Pergamena, now corrupted to "parchment," invented there; also tapestry. —Kingdom of Pergamum founded B. C. 283, by Philetoerus; his brother Eumenes was his successor. He was succeeded B. C. 241 by Attalus, first king of Pergamum.—Attalus II died B. C. 131; bequeathed his kingdom to Rome.

2. Why we preface our sermons on the seven churches with historical, geographical, and political information (vs. 13): (a) "Satan's seat" (Greek, "thrones"). (b) Antipas ("against all"). (Jas. 4:4; Acts 4:19; 5:29; Jer. 15:10).

II Things in the Church which Christ Commends.

1. "Holdest fast my name . . . . not denied my faith" (vs. 13; Matt. 19:29; Mark 10:29; Luke 18:29).

III. Things in the Church which Christ Condemns.

1. Baalism and Nicolaitanism (Numb. 22; 25:1; 31:16; 2 Pet. 2:15; Jude 11).

2. The sword is threatened the transgressors (vss. 12,16; Gal. 4:20; Numb. 22:23-33; 25:5; 31:8; Jos. 13:22).

IV. The Promise

1. The manna was of two kinds:

(a) The ordinary kind was like "hoar frost on the ground," and was corruptible (Ex. 16:12-15,20).

(b) The extraordinary kind was "hidden manna," ("manna which had been hidden," Greek), concealed in the "golden pot which had manna," was kept for centuries in the Ark of the Testimony, and was incorruptible (Ex. 16:33,34; Heb. 9:4).

(c) This manna is called "corn of heaven," "angel's food," "spiritual meat," etc., and when "hidden" or concealed in the golden pot of the Most Holy, was symbolic of our eternal life which is "hid with Christ in God" (Ps. 78:24,25; 1 Cor. 10:3; John 6:31-33,48,51; Acts 2:27,31; 1 John 3:2; Col. 3:1-3).

2. The white stone speaks of acceptance, the black of rejection. Lodges that "blackball" rejected candidates, are a good illustration of the text (Rev. 1:14; 3:5; 7:9; 14.14; 19:8,14; 20:10).

3. Since all the other promises to the seven churches are single or intimately related, we judge that the "white stone" of this promise is the Israelitish Urim and Thummim, which was only one stone, a diamond (Ex. 28: 15,30; Numb. 27: 21; 1 Sam. 28:6).

4. For explanation of the "new name," see sermon outline on the message of Christ to the church at Philadelphia (Rev. 3:12).

COMMUNICATIONS

"They shall make known unto you all things which are done here" (Col. 4:9).

Editor Restitution:

In these days of terrible stress for the nations, I feel special need of an effort on the part of the brethren to exhort one another, and so much the more as we see the day approaching. When we see so many of our brothers and sisters drawn away with the things of the world and yet they seem to think they are doing God service, it has prompted me to write the enclosed article, hoping it may find a place in your paper at an early date. Respectfully submitted with love and prayers, we remain your truly, J. E. Lent.

An Appeal for Help

Dear Brethren and Sisters, Readers of The Restitution:

We wish to make an appeal to all charitably disposed brethren to help Brother J. F. Day, a very sick man, a member of the church of The Blessed Hope, Church of God, in Chicago, and an elder as long as he was able to hold that position. Now he is confined to the house. His heart is badly affected and his lungs are diseased, having strong symptoms of tuberculosis, causing swelling of the body and limbs. He is sixty-six years of age and a devoted Christian man; has a wife and five children between the ages of nine months and fifteen years. The fifteen year old girl will graduate from the grammar school next February. The only support they have is about $2.00 a week his wife makes by working every spare minute on some elastic work and buttons for a dry goods merchant, and they are greatly in need of food and clothing as well as coal. Our church has agreed to pay the rent, which is about all the church of God here is able to do. Anything that any of our brethren or sisters can do for them will be thankfully received. Contributions can be sent to the Secretary, R. W. Thompson, 544 Long Ave., Chicago, Ill., who will see that it will be judicially expended.

Lesson XVIII

Subject, The Time of Reward

Memory Text

"For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels and then he shall reward every man according to his works" (Matt. 16:27).

1. "Behold, I come quickly and my reward is with me to give every man according as his work shall be" (Rev. 22:12).

2. "And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants, the prophets and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldest destroy them which destroy the earth" (Rev. 11:18).

3. "But when thou makest a feast, call the poor, the maimed, the lame, the blind;

4. "And thou shalt be blessed; for they can not recompense thee; for thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just" (Luke 14:13,14).

5. "That the trial of your faith being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire might be found unto praise, and honor, and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ" (1 Pet. 1:7).

6. "Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord. Behold, the husbandman waiteth for the precious fruit of the earth and hath long patience for it until he receive the early and latter rain.

7. "Be ye also patient; stablish your hearts: for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh" (Jas. 5: 7, 8).

8. "And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment.

9. "So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time without sin unto salvation" (Heb. 9:27, 28).

10. "For I am now ready to be offered and the time of my departure is at hand.

11. "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith.

12. "Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing" (2 Tim. 4:6-8).

13. "And then shall they see the Son of Man coming in a cloud with power and great glory.

14. "And when these things begin to come to pass, look up and lift up your heads; for your redemption draueth nigh" (Luke 21:27, 28).

Practical Truths

Our lesson today is on "the time of reward." To the faithful believer in Christ no day could be more welcome than the day of reward. Then he will lay down the cross of suffering for the crown of rejoicing and glory; the transitory for the eternally enduring. Some good people think the reward is given at death, but the Scripture passages quoted above show that it will be given at the second coming of our Lord, and the resurrection of the dead. God's word on this important topic should settle the question.

Notes on the Lesson

Son of Man.—Jesus is called the Son of Man several times in the Scriptures and so styles himself in our memory text. He is a great many times called the Son of God. He was truly both. In the genealogies as given in the first chapter of Matthew and the third of Luke his descent is traced through David. He was made of the seed of David according to the flesh (Rom. 1:3). He was begotten of the Holy Spirit (Luke 1:35; Matt. 1:18). Our faith should comprehend both of these plainly revealed truths as setting forth his relationship to both God and man.

1. To Give Every Man According as his Work Shall be.—The judgment of God is according to truth (Rom. 2:2). so in the rendering of rewards through his Son to whom he has committed all judgment, it will be done in harmony with the principles of truth, justice, and mercy. He will render to the righteous all things embraced in his exceeding precious promises and inflict upon the wicked the punishment threatened in his Divine word. Against the assertion of his chosen people that his way was not equal he affirmed his way equal and their way unequal.

4. Recompensed.—To make a return to, to render an equivalent to, for service, loss, etc. (Webster). The recompense or reward promised to God's people is infinitely more than an equivalent for service, loss, and suffering. It is a gift bestowed by the hand of Divine goodness and mercy exceeding in value all that we do or suffer as eternity outmeasures a few short years.

Resurrection of the Just.—There will be two resurrections: one at the coming of Christ, the other at the close of the 1000 years reign.

5. Trial of Your Faith.—Trying or testing in any manner. Here it comes through persecution. God has, in every age, tested the faith of his people.

Gold Tried by Fire.—To purge away or destroy the dross leaving the precious metal: so a tested faith is pure, more precious than gold, and will be honored or rewarded at the coming of the Lord.

9. Bear the Sins of Many.—The Lord hath laid on him the iniquity of us all (Isa. 53:6). These and similar figures of speech are employed to set forth the great leading thought that Jesus died for us or was made a sin offering for us.

12. That Day.—The day o fthe Lord's appearance when he shall judge the quick and dead. The phrase occurs several times in the epistles of Paul, all having reference to the same time.

Suggestive Topics and Questions

1. When the Son of Man Comes.—In our memory text with what event is the giving of the reward connected? Will you please read verses 24, 25 and 26 of Matt. 16th? Also Luke 9:24, 25, 26? These texts refer to those who would lose their livse for the sake of Christ. What are such called? When will these martyrs get their reward? Is this coming of the Son of Man a coming in person? Has this event already taken place in the past, or is it yet in the future? Will our Lord bring the reward when he comes. Can we get the reward before he returns?

2. All of the Righteous Rewarded at the Same Time.—Can you give the proof? See 2nd paragraph in Scripture quotations. Do you think that the persons mentioned in this text as servants, prophets, saints, and them that fear God's name, include the church of all time down to the period of the resurrection? Will all be perfected together (Heb. 11:40)? Do you know of a single text which teaches that God rewards his people one at a time?

3. At the Judgment.—God has appointed a day in which he will judge the world (Acts 17:31). With what event is the judgment connected in point of time (2 Tim. 4:1; 1 Cor. 4:5)? Will God reward men before the judgment? Before the hidden things of darkness are brought to light and the counsels of the heart made manifest?

4. In the World to Come.—When will the righteous get eternal life (Luke 18:30)? What is meant by "world to come"? In his argument with the Sadducees in Luke 20:35, does Jesus refer to the same world or age? With what does he connect it? "Worthy to obtain it." What is meant by this language? Will this worthiness entitle us to all the good things belonging to that world?

5. Should the Children of God Pray for the Time to Come?—If all the promises are to meet their fulfilment then, is it resonable to desire that day to come? Do we pray for it to come when we pray for the kingdom to come? Do all the Scripture proofs bring us to the same conclusion as regards the time?

Our Biblical Alphabet

Apostles abhorred and avoided abominattion, accepted affliction, ably acknowledged atonement, added affection; anointed Advocate abundantly abided.

Bible baptism begets bountiful blessing, bestows brightness, betters brethren because bodies bought by benefactor.

Christ crucified creates charity, comfort, consolation, compassion. Christ's coming calleth chosen, causeth certain conquests, confers crowns.

Disciples desired doctrine, diligently destroyed deceitful desires, disdained dishonesty, deemed detestable devices dangerously deadly; deserved declared deliverance.

Eager, earnest exhortation entertains, enables, embraces, elevates, encourages, enriches, edifies.

Firm, faultless faith frees faithful from fancy fables, favors friendliness, forbids foolishness, frightens fanatics.

God's greatest gift glorifies, gives gospel grace, gathers gentleness, gains gaiety, gallantly guides, gently governs, guards, gladdens.

Happiness houses honesty, hearty honesty honors hope, humble hope helps holiness, holiness hastens heavenly habitation.

Instruction increaseth intelligence, intelligence imparts integrity, integrity invites immortality.

Jehovah joins Jesus, justifying joyous juveniles.

Kindliness kept kindred kingly; kindles knowledge; keeps knights kingdomward.

Love lingereth like lighted lamp, lightens life's labor, levels laws, leashes lions, leads lambs, leavens loftiness, laments lying lips, loathes lurking lust, lacks languidness, lauds liberality, lightly laughs lest leisure lessens liberty.

Merciful Messiah makes miserable, mortal men marvel; merry melody maketh mad malice move; mercy maintains meditation, mellows memory; manifold miracles manifest, multitudes make might.

Neither nobby neighbors nor notable names necessary; Nazarine's noble nature naturally nourishes.

Observation opens opportunity, offers obedience, overcomes offence, obtaineth order, overthrows odious opinion, opposeth oppression, obscures outcasts, ordaineth, operates, occupies, often omits ornamental ordinances.

Pure preaching proclaimeth prophecies, prevents prejudice; proper prayer procures precious pardon, provides peculiar peace; pitiable perverted prevaricators plainly perish; parables provoke particular prudence.

Quiet quality quickly quenches quarrels, quells queer queens, questions quantity, quits quizzing.

Remember righteous reformation, revealing regeneration, registers reconciliation, reapeth rich reward.

Sincerely search spiritual statutes, study Scriptures, speak soundly, smite sin, sacrifice selfishness, subdue self strength, serve Savior, safely secures salvation.

Tumults, trials, troubles, teacheth truth; tranquil trust turneth tribulation to thankfulness; tempesteous temptations tendeth to terrible transgression.

Unfruitful unbelievers utterly underestimate unity, uniform understandnig upholds uprightness; unites unusual utterances; urges ultimate, uncompromising union; utterly upturns unmerclful usurpation.

Verified, valiant virtue, voluntarily visiteth vagabonds; verily vanishes villainy, vanity, vengeance, vandalism; vehemently vindicating visible victory.

Worthy worship, withholding wickedness, with watchful waiting wins wisdom, which worketh weighty wonders.

X. As the letter "X" signifies both cross and "Christ" we shall fill this space with "In the Cross of Christ I glory."

Youth yearns yester-years Yuletide; young yoke-fellow yields yard; Yeoman, yelling "yo-ho" yanks yahoo.

A Twenty-six Word Passage

Read it carefully and try to discover what is odd concerning it.

Apostles baptized certain disciples; exhorted faithfulness; gave hearty instruction; justified kindness, love, mercy, nobleness, obedience; preached quiet reformation; sincerely trusted; united virtue with 'xcellence; yearning zealously.

Now that you have read it, have you noticed anything peculiar? If not, suppose you take the first letter of each word and form the alphabet.

Personal

Following are a few expressions from readers regarding our page. They are printed without egotism or desire for self-glory, but with a full appreciation and thankfulness to our heavenly Father that our work is not wholly in vain.

A sister at Freedom, N. Y., writes:

"I am only one struggling and weak follower of our dear Lord, with little ones, he has given in my care for his purposes, but I hope other mothers placed as I am, will tell you how much they need your page for little ones. We are isolated here, with no church near, and I do not feel right in sending the children to Sunday Schools where they learn so much error, so teach them at home. I would feel grieved indeed were your page done away with, as it is so much help to me, and the children enjoy it so much. They are eleven, nine, and five years of age. The two oldest are boys, and I am trusing your good page will help me to lead them to a saving knowledge of the blessed truths of the gospel."

A little man living in Buffalo, Texas, sent this:

"I am a little boy nine years old. Man. and I read your page and like it so much. Please do not discontinue it. I want to be baptized when I am old enough."

And this from a young lady of Chinook Cove, British Columbia:

"Please do not stop the publication of "The Young People's Page." I am sure we all would miss it very much. I have read it with profit every week since it was first started. I am thirteen years of age."

One a mother, one a son, the other a daughter; widely separated, yet all on the same road, striving to serve the Master. May the ambition of each be realized, and may we all soon meet in the kingdom of God, is our earnest prayer.

117,130,711 Bibles

"We talk of books as 'Best Sellers,' but which book can approach these figures? The American Bible Society in one hundred years has put into circulation 117,103,711 Bibles, Testaments and smaller portions in 154 languages. Of these over 71 million volumes have been absorbed by the United States, while some 46 million volumes have been scattered throughout the territories abroad. Where American Missions are established the returns from the sale of Bibles during 1916 are not yet complete, but during 1915 there were put into circulation 7,761,377 volumes, of which 5,053,406 volumes went to foreign lands, and 2,707,971 volumes (in 99 languages) were put into circulation in the United States; and the demand is growing by leaps and bounds. Ten years ago 682,692 copies of the Bible were issued in this country in the English language; in 1915 the number was 2,104,652."—Copied by L. H. J.

President Wilson's Opinion of the Bible

Written at Washington, D. C., Aug. 15, 1917.

"The Bible is the word of life. I beg that you will read it and find out this for yourselves—read not little snatches here and there, but long passages that will really be the road to the heart of it.

"You will find it full of real men and women not only, but also of things you have wondered about all your life, as men have been always, and the more you read the more it will become plain to you what things are worth while and what are not, what things make men happy—loyalty, right dealings, speaking the truth, readiness to give everything for what they think their duty, and, most of all, the wish that they may have the real approval of Christ, who gave everything for them—and the things that are guaranteed to make men unhappy—selfishness, cowardice, greed and everything that is low and mean.

"When you have read the Bible you will know that it is the word of God, because you will have found it the key to your own heart, your own happiness and your own duty."

"Woodrow Wilson."

A Desire That Never Will Be Fulfilled Till Christ Our Lord Shall Come

The President says: The Bible is the word of life. I beg that you will read it." And I on my part would advise the politician to read it; and in reading it ponder over its precepts, take note of its examples, seriously consider its import, obey its commands, and follow after its instruction; and if this be done, we will have much better legislation at far less cost. The poor man will get his due without robbing his more wealthy neighbor, war would cease, and a great many other things would be that never will be until the King of kings and the Lord of lords shall take the governments of this world unto himself and rule them in equity and in peace. For that time we long and pray. If worldly politics were pure, then we would not have need of a change, and we would not be overly desirous to have the kingdom of God instituted; but while man rules corruption and unrighteousness will prevail, and we who are of the day, living in the world, must keep on in our attitude of waiting, watching, and praying that God's will may be done on earth as it now is done in heaven, which is another way of saying, "Come, Lord Jesus; come quickly."

God honors them that honor him. He withholds "no good thing from them that walk uprightly." He "meets him that rejoices and works righteousness." If only we will go on doing what is right, giving up the best to our neighbor to avoid dispute, considering God's interests first and our own last, expending ourselves for the coming and glory of the kingdom of God, we shall find that God will charge himself with our interests. And he will do infinitely better for us than we could.

When you find yourself, as I daresay you sometimes do, overpowered as it were by a melancholy, the best way is to go out, and do something kind to somebody or other.

SELECTIONS

From the Syriac New Testament

"Faithful is the declaration, and worthy to be received, that Jesus the Messiah came into the world to give life to sinners, of whom I was the primary" (1 Tim. 3:15).

"Beware, lest any man make you naked, by philosophy and by vain deception, according to the doctrines of men, according to the rudiments of the world, and not according to the Messiah, in whom dwelleth all the fulness of the Divinity corporeally" (Col. 3:8,9).

"For this is good and acceptable before God our life-giver; who would have all men live, and be converted to the knowledge of the truth. For God is one; and the Mediator between God and men is one, (namely) the man Jesus the Messiah; who gave himself a ransom for every man;—a testimony that arrived in due time, of which I am constituted a herald and legate" (1 Tim. 3:3-7).

A PAPER REPRESENTING THE CHURCH OF GOD, AND DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF "THE THINGS CONCERNING THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND THE NAME OF JESUS CHRIST" (ACTS 8:12)

VOLUME 70 CLEVELAND, O. FEBRUARY 12, 1918 NUMBER 6

DEAR LORD, REMEMBER ME

E. W. Knapp

This world is full of grief and woe,
You see it everywhere you go;
The nations in a fearful war,
Such scenes we surely do abhor.
In this great war thy word has said,
That Christ shall come and raise the dead;
The time is drawing near we see,
O then, dear Lord, remember me.

We know the Savior shall descend,
Ten thousand of his saints attend;
They stand upon the holy mount,
And to the world give one grand shout.
The kingdoms of this world are done,
We now must serve God's only Son;
And if in life we chance to be,
O then, dear Lord, remember me.

Remove the curse from off the earth,
'Tis done by means of spiritual birth;
We reach beyond the mortal man,
And do God's will at his command.
We're striving with our might and main,
This glorious kingdom to obtain;
And when our Savior we can see,
O then, dear Lord, remember me.

The nations strive to rule this land,
By heeding to a man's command;
The peace they seek can not be right,
They're in the dark, know not the light.
The cry of peace on earth we know,
Is not from man; "he is too low";
For Christ, he brings the news you see,
O then, dear Lord, remember me.

O bring the joys we know will last,
We had our sorrows in the past;
In striving to defend God's cause,
In living under unjust laws.
Now we do hope that in this land,
That we may with the Savior stand,
And if asleep we chance to be,
O then, dear Lord, remember me.

"The industrious man is light hearted—the man who works is the happy man."

THE BIBLE

Especially Dedicated to the Infidel and Skeptic

S. H. Thomas

I love the Bible because I firmly believe that it is a message from God to man, mercifully telling him how he may escape the prison house of death, and stand up alive once again to die no more.

Because I am fully persuaded that it contains within itself indisputable evidence that it is exactly what it claims to be, the word of the living God.

Because it is the only book in the world that tells us from whence we came, and whither we go.

Because it contains our only hope of a resurrection from the dead, and endless life in the ages to come.

Because it makes known the infinite love of God for those of his creatures who believe his word and obey his commands (but for none others), and his promise of pardon for their sins through Jesus Christ our Lord.

I wonder why the infidel hates the Bible, and would destroy it if he could? The only book in the world that offers him life again from the dead, or hope that he may again clasp in his arms those loved ones whose eyes he has closed in death.

I wonder why he would destroy this book, which contains God's message of a love so great that he freely gave his only begotten Son, that "whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Truly his hatred of God and his word is a thing most unaccountable.

If perchance he sees a fellow-man, devout, sincere, and earnest in his faith in God, and the Bible as his word, he promptly proceeds to turn down that faith which comforts and sustains his brother. He sneers at it, and points out that the old Bible is no longer taken seriously among refined or educated people as true and as the word of God. That only the weak-minded, and simple, so regard it in these enlightened days. That it is now generally conceded to be but a collection of ancient fables, and foolish fish-stories, and of interest only as a curious relic, handed down from the days of witchcraft, and simple-minded superstition.

Mr. Infidel: Do you not think it a mean, and unkind act to seek to tear down the faith, and destroy the hope, which comforts and makes happy a fellow-man? Indeed, it is worse: it is robbery to take away and destroy the faith and hope of another, unless you are prepared to replace it with a better. Can you do it? Nay, verily: Search as ye may through the pages of your scoffing literature; sift Ingersoll's "Mistakes of Moses," Tom Payne's "Age of Reason," and all vain vaporings of Voltaire, Bradlaugh, and others, and find if you can one sigle sentence that will comfort a man in the solemn hour of death. In such an hour infidelity is a miserable failure.

Let us now consider a few of the multitude of evidences that the Bible is the word of God. I ask you to consider the Jew. I want no greater evidence than he to confirm my faith in the book. Even before he became a nation, his future nationality was foretold and written down in minutest detail. And before he went into the promised land would scatter him among the nations, and that among those nations he should "find no ease," should have "a trembling heart and sorrows of mind," and that he should be in great danger, and should have none assurance of life (Deut. 28:63-67); and although robbed, persecuted, massacred, and murdered by the millions yet remain a great nation down to the coming of the Lord. And today he stands an unanswerable evidence of the truth and inspiration of the Bible.
of the Bible.

Where are Babylonians? where are Medes and Persians, the brazen-coated Greeks and mighty Romans, all of whom in turn robbed and massacred the helpless Jew? They have passed into history, have become but a memory; while the persecuted Jew is still with us, ready to play his part in the closing scenes of Gentile times. Without a visible king or capital city, but still scattered among the nations of the earth, they stand a great nation, controlling the wealth of the world. During all these long centuries they have not mixed with other peoples, but remained separate and distinct, retaining all their national and individual characteristics and customs—an eloquent and unanswerable evidence of the truth and divine autheuticity of that grand old Book, which foretells all these remarkable things thousands of years ago, even before they became a nation.

But space forbids mention of the multitude of other evidences, equally as positive and unanswerable. The prophecies concerning Babylon, Turkey, Egypt, and other nations, and their marvelous fulfilment; the testimony of numerous monuments and ancient libraries, clay tablets, and records on stone, and papyrus, dating back to the days of the patriarchs, hidden deep in the ruins of ancient Babylon, Ninevah, and Dedin, buried beneath the sands of Egypt and the lands of Moab, God has kept these silent witnesses securely hidden and in these last days of skepticism and unbelief, they have been uncovered and brought forth to confound and silence the infidel and atheist.

Wherever the Bible goes, civilization and an uplifting of the standard of morality, follow. Remove the Bible and man would soon return to violence, anarchy, and semi-barbarity. Why? To the infidel death ends all. Therefore his motto is "Let us eat, drink, and be merry, for tomorrow we die." Why deny ourselves? The world is ours for today and the fulness thereof. Let us drain the cup of pleasure to its dregs. A short life and a merry one, and then a plunge into the land of forgetfulness from whence I came. Poor fellow! I am sorry for the infidel. From my heart I pity him; no beams of light and promise ahead; naught but darkness, coldness, and everlasting forgetfulness. With such a faith can we wonder that ninety-nine out of one hundred criminals, murderers, robbers, liars, fornicators, adulterers, etc. are infidels? Rarely indeed is a Christian convicted of crime. Will infidels tell us why?

The infidel declares that the Bible has been responsible for most of the bloodshed of the world, and that mankind would be much better off if the last Bible could be burned. But I have always noticed that he continues to remain close around where the teachings and principles of the old Book are revered and practiced. If he really believes the Bible an impediment to human knowledge and progress, why does he not go to some country where it is not known? To Turkey, China, or the South Sea Islands? His life or property might not be so safe as in a Bible country, but he can get away from the old Book if he really wants to.

The infidel says that Moses made mistakes, that Jacob lied to his poor old blind father, and cheated Esau out of his blessing and birthright. That king David, the man after God's own heart, fell in love with another man's wife, and caused her husband to be killed, that he might have the woman. And that according to the Bible itself, every last one of these holy men of old were guilty of evil and disreputable acts. Mr. Infidel, you are right; your charges are true: And I cite this very fact to prove that the Bible is the word of God, The Old Testament Scriptures are a history of the Jewish nation, written by Jews under divine inspiration. If God had removed his influence during the making of these records of that nation, would not the national pride of these Jewish writers have prompted them to leave out those details that would discredit their history? When they came to that sin of king David, would they not have said: 'We will not say anything about that matter: to mention it would do no good, and only disgrace our nation for all time." But when God writes, or causes to be written, the record of a man or nation, he tells the truth about it. Human nature is poor stuff, and always has been since Adam's fall. Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, Moses, and king David—all were but human, weak and prone to sin just as we are; and the Bible is a true and faithful record of their faults as well as their virtues. If the Holy Scriptures had described them as superior beings, entirely free from sin, and yet partakers of a sinful nature, we then might, with reason, have questioned its truths.

Infidelity is all right on dry land, when everything is lovely and no trouble or danger in sight, but when at sea the storm rages, and billows war and foam, and the old ship founders and is about to sink—it is then, on bended knee, he calls on God to save him, and with earnest fervour sings, "Nearer My God to Thee." Ingersoll's "Mistakes of Moses," and Tom Paine's scoffing literature, has no charm for him now, as in terror and despair he stretches out helpless hands to that God whom he has so often denied and dishonored.

Thousands have been known to bitterly regret on their death bed that they were infidels, but there are two things I never expect to see: Two mountains with no valley between; and a dying man, who regrets he is a Christian.

It is said that the last words of Thomas Paine, the great infidel writer and author were, "I am taking a leap in the dark." What a contrast between this and the last words of a Christian! No leap in the dark for him; all is light, and he sees exactly where he will land. Our Lord says: "I am the resurrection and the life. He that believeth on me, though he were dead, yet shall he live."

The world has but one example of a great nation discarding the Bible and its principles, and adopting those of infidelity; and no nation has since cared to repeat the experiment. About the year 1790, Voltaire the great French infidel and author, devoted his time and brilliant talents, to destroy the Bible and the Christian religion in France; and the world for the first time heard a vast assembly of men, born and educated in a civilized country, lift their united voices to deny the worship of God, and the Bible as his word. One of the leaders of the nation publicly challenged God as follows: "God, if you exist, avenge your injured name. I bid you defiance; you remain silent; you dare not launch your thunder. Who after this, will believe in your existence?" In all public cemeteries this inscription was placed, "Death is an eternal sleep."

Soon all law and order were abolished, and mob law was established throughout the empire. Infidelity ran riot, and blood flowed like water, while hundreds of thousands perished. Finally, realizing the necessity of some form of worship, to hold the infidel fanatics in check, they brought a veiled harlot into the national convention. Senator Chaumette took her hand and said. "Mortals, cease to tremble before the powerless thunder of a God whom your fears have created. 'Henceforth accept no divinity but reason: I offer you its noblest and purest image. If you must have idols, sacrifice only to such as this.' Thus, the harlot was established by infidel France, as the Goddess of Reason. Madame Milard was her name. She was conducted to the Cathedral of Notre Dame, and elevated upon a high altar, and worshipped in place of God.

This season of the triumph of the principles of infidelity in France, has gone down in history as "the reign of terror." But the Bible, and the principles of Christianity, were restored in time to save the nation. Voltaire has passed into history, and it is said that the press used by him to print his infidel literature, has since been used to print the word of God.

The infidel reminds me of a foolish sailor who was washed overboard during a terrible storm. His mates threw him a rope, but he found all kinds of fault with it, and refused to grasp it. It was too small to suit him, and was made of cotton instead of hemp, and it had spots on it, that looked to him like defects, or weak spots. In vain his mates shouted to him that this was the only rope they had, that it was all right, and would land him on board if he would grasp it; but he would have nothing of it, and miserably perished. Just so the foolish infidel is sinking in the great sea of eternity. His mates on the gospel ship, throw him a gospel rope and implore him to grasp it; but he scoffs at and ridicule it, finds fault with and criticises it. In vain they assure him that it strong and safe, and the only rope on board ship that will reach him, but he turns away from it, and is lost forever in the sea of eternity.

INVENTIONS

No. 3

Stephen prayed, "Lord Jesus, receive my spirit. And devout men carried Stephen to his burial, and made great lamentation over him" (Acts 7:59; 8:2). These verses teach us two things:

(1) That which was buried was Stephen; and
(2) The spirit was not conscious Stephen; for it was not the thing that did the praying. The Stephen that prayed was the Stephen that was carried, and buried, and lamented, and fell asleep; and if there was another Stephen we have no mention of him in this account. If the spirit had been a conscious intelligent entity, it could have prayed for itself, but it did not; and that fact alone would prove it incapable of praying, and shows it to be like the spirit of the queen of Sheba and others which we have noticed.

But Mr. Barlow says the soul also is separated from the body in death, and that it is conscious while the body lies mouldering in the grave, though he offers no proof, and only asserts that men exist while dead. David asks, "What man is he that liveth, and shall not see death? shall he deliver his soul from the hand of the grave?" (Psa. 89.48). Often biblically a question is a strong negative affirmation, and this is an instance, and means to state that no living man can deliver his soul from the hand (power) of the grave; for all must go there, which proves conclusively that soul and body go together in death. But the man that goes to the grave soon ceases to exist, hence the soul goes out of existence at death. Hezekiah declares, "Thou (God) hast in love to my soul delivered it from the pit of corruption" (Isa. 38:17). From what had Hezekiah been delivered? Death. Then when one dies his soul goes into the pit of corruption, and not into eternal existence. "They smote all the souls that were therein with the edge of the sword, utterly destroying them" (Jos. 11:11). Does a soul exist after it has been destroyed? If not, then the souls of the people of Hazor are not now in existence. If those people's souls are now in existence they were not utterly destroyed, and the word of God would be stating a falsehood. His "word is truth," and Mr. Barlow is mistaken, and hence souls are destructible. David speaking of the Egyptians, declares, "He (God) made a way in his anger; he spared not their soul from death, but gave their life over to pestilence" (Psa. 73:50). "Life, a condition of existence" (Barlow). The lives of those souls were given over to the pestilence, and the souls were spared not from death. Suppose we put both of Mr. Barlow's definitions and read, "He spared not their soul from a condition of existence, but gave their condition of existence over to the pestilence." Did those souls continue to have a condition, or be in a condition of existence, after "their condition of existence" was given over to the pestilence? If yes, then Bible language is without meaning; for their condition of existence was not taken from them. If we should read a life was given over to the pestilence, we would have some room to think there might be another life or condition of existence for them; but their condition of existence makes assurance doubly sure that there is not another for them, and again knocks the props from Mr. Barlow's invented definition of death.

"O Lord, thou hast brought up my soul from the grave: thou hast kept me alive, that I should not go down to the pit" (Psa. 30:3). Here again it is plainly declared that the soul goes into the grave, and one must be kept alive that he may not go into the pit. If the soul does not go into the grave, then David was talking nonsense; if it does go there, then it goes out of existence; for all that goes into the grave soon returns to its mother element—dust. We might multiply texts to substantiate what we have here shown; but we believe those are sufficient to prove Mr. Barlow's definition false, and that death is not a condition of existence no matter whether it refers to soul, spirit, or body. When the soul is spoken of as departing it is the same as the life, and not that which can exist. Herod sent men to kill Jesus in his infancy, and had not the Lord interferred he would have been successful; but God delivered him by sending him down into Egypt. After the death of Herod, an angel told Joseph; "They are dead which sought the young child's life" (Greek, soul). What did Herod intend to do with Jesus' life? Destroy it, or take it from him. Now had he been successful, and had God given it back to him, it would have been said "his soul returned to him," but been no proof that said soul existed while dead. Again: "He that findeth his life shall lose it: and he that loseth his life for my sake shall find it" (Matt. 10:39). Here again "life" is from the same Greek word that is translated "soul" in the New Testament. If one loses his life for Christ's sake, he shall find it. It would be impossible for one to lose an eternal existing soul for Christ's sake; but he can have his life or condition of existence taken from him, and given back to him in the resurrection; and his finding it would be its return to him. So in cases were some were resurrected in the past. While the life is in us, we have life; but after it has departed, we have no life; and it is not an existing entity, but as Mr. Barlow says, a condition of existence, and without it we cease to exist. We readily admit that life is not existance, and I am unacquainted with any that teach that it is; but Mr. Barlow claims that is the definition contended for by the poor annihilationist.

Many things exist without life, and that fact of itself proves that life is not existence. Humanity, and the animal and vegetable kingdoms depend upon life for existence, and without it they soon perish. Hence it is "the state of being alive; that condition in which animals and plants exist with the capability of exercising their natural functions" (Standard Dictionary). This definition seems to be more nearly correct than Mr. Barlow's, for life is not a condition of existence to the everlasting hills, and much other dead matter which could be mentioned. It also is in harmony with the Bible; for the Bible says, "The dead know not anything" (Eccl. 9:5). The word "function" is defined, "Any specific power of acting or operating that belongs to an agent, or the specific work accomplished by it; as the functions of the mind" (Stand. Dic.). Thought being a natural function, ceases in the death of the thinker. All work, knowledge, wisdom, and device must cease when the life ceases; and that for ever kills Mr. Barlow's invention. He can no more prove his new theory than the orthodox can the old one; and his invention is worthless. He says both soul and spirit die, and we read the dead know not anything, hence both soul and spirit become unconscious in death; and that is what the poor annihilationist contends for.

But he quotes as proof, "He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life" (1 John 5:12). He argues from this text that he had existence before he had the Son, and before he had life and concludes from that that people can exist, have knowledge, and work without life. He fails to notice the preceding verse: "And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son." What life? "This," the eternal life. The unbeliever has life, but not eternal life. He then as another proof quotes, "In the day that thou (Adam) eatest thereof thou shalt surely die" (Gen. 2:17), contending that Adam did not cease to exist the day he ate, and from that fact claims he has positive proof that a person may be dead, and yet exist as a conscious intelligent being. Over looking this: "And he said unto Adam, Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it: cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of (not thy death) thy life." Adam still is recognized as living, and God must know better than Mr. Barlow whether Adam was dead or living when he spoke those words. Had Adam been dead God should have said, "All the days of thy death;" but as he did not so say we are compelled to conclude Adam was not yet dead. We read: "Thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee; and thou shalt eat the herb of the field: in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken: for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return" (Gen. 3:17-19). This is the sentence given Adam for his disobedience, and the only sentence that can be found in God's book concerning it, and was given while Adam was alive; and in it it is stated that he had days to live, and would yet live "all the days of thy life," and eat of the fruit of the ground in sorrow.

The word "day" is often used figuratively, and is so used in the chapter from which Mr. Barlow quotes: "These are the generations of the heavens and of the earth when they were created, in the day that the Lord God made the earth and heavens, and every plant of the field before it was in the earth, and every herb of the field before it grew; for the Lord God had not caused it to rain upon the earth, and there was not a man to till the ground." By comparing chapter one the reader will see that earth was made before there was even light, and light was spoken into existence upon the first day, and it was not until the third day that plant life was produced; and if we take into consideration what is said about man in both chapters we can see that the second chapter makes the whole of the seven days, "the day;" and whether these even were figurative or literal days, either makes "the day" a figurative day. The same with our text: "All the days" must be considered a part of "the day" in which Adam was to die, as they were "days of his life"; and as the day" includes "all the days," it could not be a literal day; and where is Mr. Barlow's dead man? In the dust, and as he teaches soul and spirit die as much as the body, they too must no more exist than it does.

IS THE THIEF IN PARADISE?

"And he said unto Jesus, Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom. And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, Today shalt thou be with me in Paradise" (Luke 23:39-44). V.

Jesus' answer to the thief in Rotherham's translation reads, "Verily, to thee I say today, With me thou shalt be in paradise."

The Cottage Bible by Parker reads: "Verily I say unto thee, The same day thou shalt be with me in Eden's garden." "The same day" would here refer to the day referred to in the thief's question, when Christ comes to establish his kingdom.

Now, as the original Scriptures contain no punctuation marks, and the present system of punctuation was invented by Aldus Manutius, a printer of Venice, in the 15th century, we know that the present punctuation of the king James' translation is not inspired. Hence we have authority to change the punctuation and reading of the Authorized Version to read, "Verily, I say unto thee today, Thou shalt be with me in paradise."

The thought in this with the Parker and Rotherham translations would be: "I give you direct promise to your request to be with me when I come into my kingdom, to restore the long lost paradise on earth, that you will be with me there."

We would say to those who base their hope of entering into their reward at death upon this text as translated in the common version, and on the position of the uninspired comma, that we will agree with them when they can reconcile the following nine objections to their position:

1 The thief had no immortal soul or spirit entity to go to paradise (Rom. 2:7; 1 Tim. 6:16; 2 Tim. 2:10; 1 Cor. 15:53-56).

2 The soul of Jesus went to hades that day (Acts 2:31; Psa. 16:10).

3 Jesus wholly died, soul and body—no separate entity survived death to go to paradise Isa. 53:8,10; Rev. 1:18).

4 The only paradise the Bible reveals is that lost by the first Adam, which is to be restored again on earth beyond the resurrection (Rev. 2:7, and chapters 21 and 22; Isa. 51:3). This is the paradise to which Paul was conveyed in vision, as was John the Revelator (2 Cor. 12:3).

5 The only Savior of whom the Scriptures speak was in the tomb, and nowhere else, for three days and nights (Matt. 12:40; 28:6).

6 Jesus was not in heaven during the three days while he was dead (John 20:17; Acts 1:3,9).

7 Neither Jesus nor the thief had any conscious existence while dead (Psa. 146; 6:5; Eccl. 9:11-15; Job 14).

8 Dead saints cannot go to glory before the change of the living saints at the resurrection of the just (1 Thess. 4:15; 1 Cor. 15:23; Heb. 11:39,40).

9 The judgment of the world, and the reward of both living and dead saints do not take place until the second coming of Christ (2 Tim. 4:1; Matt. 16:27; Rev. 22:12; 20:13; Luke 14:14).

The one witness who records what Jesus said to the thief says that Jesus' answer was: "Amen lego soi seemeron met emou ese en to paradiso."

Now what did Jesus say to the thief?—W. L. C.

Measures speed of Clouds

The comb nephonscope is a device for measuring the speed of clouds. It consists of an upright brass rod about nine feet long, bearing at its upper end a crosspiece to which a number of equidistant vertical spikes are attached. The observer turns the crosspiece until the cloud appears to travel along the line of spikes and notes the time it takes to pass from spike to spike. This forms a basis from which he reckons the speed.

DON'T FORGET THE HELPING FUND

We whose names are given below, believing it to be our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the manager of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. Those whose circumstances do not permit of the paying for the paper themselves should notify the manager, signifying their willingness to accept the paper, and it will be cheerfully sent from the proceeds of this fund.

EDITORIAL

January 27th Mr. David B. McKenzie, and his Wife, Mrs. Catherine McKenzie, both formerly Presbyterians, after making a very intelligent confession of faith in the things pertaining to the essentials of the gospel, were baptized into Christ.

Sister Wince writes, dating Jan. 22nd, "You know Sister Susan Howard of Chinook Cove, B. C. Her husband has been studying the Bible and has come to see the absolute necessity of being baptized in order to be saved; but before his purpose could be carried out he was taken sick. He went to bed as well as usual last Saturday night, and before ten o'clock Sunday morning had been taken to the hospital by team fifty-three miles distant. Sister Howard is in great distress, and asks that prayer be made for his recovery so he can obey the Lord."

Dating Jan. 30th Sister Sadie Skeels writes: "We of Brumfield, Kentucky, Church of God are very thankful for the mercy which God has granted us at the hands of the government. There were but five young men of military age, who were members of our congregation. Three who lived in Mercer County were granted religious exemption; the two others were of Boyle County, and they received fourth class because they have families; but they have both appealed their case. The Board asked, "What better do you want? That class is safe." We all want to say with the Psalmist, "I will say of the Lord, He is my refuge and my fortress: my God; in him will I trust."

We ask that all of our young brethren who are subject to draft keep us posted by frequent communication how they fare before local and district Boards, and how they are treated in military camps. From "The Tower" of Jan. 15th we note that the Russellites have passed resolutions asking for exemption, and have presented the same by a committee of three to president Wilson. We quote the reception he accorded them, with one or two statements he made to the Committee, as they are of considerable interest to us and are very significant with meaning:

"Brother Rutherford, as president, appointed Brother Dr. Smith of Louisville, Ky., Brother E. D. Sexton, of Los Angeles, California, and Brother E. W. Brenneisen, of New York City, as a committee of three to bear these resolutions to Washington and there in person present them to President Wilson, Secretary Baker of the War Department, and a copy to Provost Marshall General Crowder. The Committee proceeded to Washington for this purpose, and on Friday, January 11th, they were granted an audience with President Wilson. The Committee was very kindly and graciously received by the President who patiently listened to the reading of the resolution. The President expressed himself as fully sympathizing with our position. He suggested that some had exceeded their authority in dealing with our brethren and promised that these mistakes should be speedily rectified. Afterwards a copy of the resolution was presented to Secretary of War Baker and Provost Marshall Crowder."

THE SUBJECTS OF THE KINGDOM

Dear Brother:

I wish to call your attention to The Restitution of Jan. 15th where you make a statement which has surprised me not a little regarding the subjects of the kingdom of God. I had supposed that the "remnant" was composed of all people left on the earth who should pass through the fiery trials and tribulations in safety after the saints, who comprise the body of Christ, have been rewarded. It seems strange to me that Christ and the saints are to rule over infants and children entirely. I am asking for information, as I wish to know all that the word of God has for me; and if it teaches this it is new to me. Your words are: "These remnant subjects are composed entirely of infants and little children."

Yours in love of the truth,

Jennie ———.

Editor's Reply

The writer has not exactly reproduced the words and ideas to which we give expression in Lesson V. We say on pages one and twelve that the subjects are "composed almost entirely of infants and children." By leaving out the word "almost" the Sister unintentionally exaggerated the statement. Restore this word in the sentence, then read Lesson V carefully, and we see no room for dissenting opinion.

In addition to the plain Scriptures quoted on page twelve to prove that the infants contemporary with Christ's coming are the subjects of the kingdom primarily, we may point to one typological argument which to us is conclusive. Six hundred thousand adult Israelites left Egypt under Moses (Ex. 12:37). All these perished in the wilderness before they came into the land of promise except two (Heb. 3; 4; Deut. 1:35, 36,38). Who then, composed the subjects of God's kingdom under the Judges and Kings of Israel? The testimony is explicit: "Your little ones, which ye said should be a prey, and your children, which in that day had no knowledge between good and evil, they shall go in thither, and unto them will I give it, and they shall possess it" (Deut. 1:39).

Now as Christ will be a prophet "like unto Moses" when he returns, and as his "times of restitution" and "refreshings" are analogous to those under Moses (Acts 3:19-24), it follows as a positive and dogmatic fact that as adults were destroyed after the exodus (Jude 5), and the "little ones," those who were so young that they "had no knowledge between good and evil," came in and lived in Canaan as subjects, so it will be under Christ One cannot but admire the divine wisdom displayed in such a just and merciful provision. The incongruous idea of Christ and the saints reigning over infants and children "entirely" is not a necessary or logical conclusion, although these are practically the only ones spared at the coming of Christ. The forty years which elapsed from the exodus from Egypt to the settlement of the children in the land of Israel, may be indicative of as much time intervening between the return of Christ and the beginning of his reign. The children alive at the second coming of Christ would, according to this arrangement, be forty years of age when the reign begins. This accounts for the fact that adults appear as subjects in the kingdom although only infants are saved, from the "devouring fire" of Christ's apocalypse.

AN OPEN LETTER ON THE SONG BOOK

To Sister Robison and All Who are Interested in the New Song Book:

I thank you for your commendations, and will say part of your criticism with reference to the first edition is just and part merely technical. Now there are two or three ways at the least those errors could have gotten in: In selecting the pieces we often found a piece that was good except a word here and there that was wrong: these we would mark to be fixed; and as that part of the work fell mostly on me, we would lay them aside to be fixed when most convenient. Those that are wrong may have slipped in by mistake by us thinking they had been corrected.

Again when we decided upon the words to be substituted, we had to find those words somewhere and cut them out and paste them over the objectionable words so the engraver would get it correct. In some cases these pasted words may have come off in handling. This could have all been righted in the proof reading; but here is the rub. How many people go through this world blamed for certain things that they are not in the least to be blamed for. In making the contract with the printer I had a perfect understanding that he was to send me all the copy to proof read. This he did not do. He sent probably forty pages; then I waited and waited for more, and none came. Then a note saying he had put in press without sending me any more to proof read, thinking he could get them out sooner. Of course they were not correct; but it robbed me of any chance to correct any more that might have crept in. The Committee and Brother Huggins and some others know what an influence was brought to bear on the printer and others to prevent the publication of the book. This alone caused at least a year's delay in printing. But we succeeded in overcoming all this evil influence, and we wonder at the fewness of the mistakes.

Now let us remember the church owns the plates, and all the cost there will be in printing again will be printing and binding; and for a few new plates that are proposed. In talking with the engraver I find the plates we now have are worth at least $1.10 more than when we bought them. I mean each plate is worth this much more. I have had two of the most reliable firms I know figure on the proposed edition, and there is but ten dollars difference between them. In August last I had one of these firms figure on the book just as it is now. Now the same firm and another I had figure on it, want just the same for printing the last half of the book.

So many places have no books and have ordered them we decided to print the songs beginning at page 90, and add 18 new, beautiful songs to supply the urgent need. Change the numbers and make 90 No. 1. We do this because we have not money enough to print the whole book. This book would have sixteen pages folded and sewed together, just double the one we now have, making it hold twice as well. They promise the mechanical work to be far superior to the old book. We will see that no errors get in this book; that is, no real errors. "Real errors" we would call those where the words are in direct opposition to the truth. This we find to be true in two or three of the present songs. The others are just technical. One that Sister Robison objects to is the favorite of one brother, and nearly every meeting he calls for it. We know all do not like the same songs: we each have favorites, and others that we very much dislike.

Now as to technical errors: let us examine the song on page 184, vs. 4. There never was one more devoted to the truth than the sister who selected this song. She would neither talk nor sing an error. There is not one of us but has had friends and mothers and fathers who tried to lead us to the light, and fell asleep disappointed; and their voices now come floating to us from those by gone days, and we remember them as we sing. These voices we have really heard, and these voices of the past are recalled, and we feel their power. Just as we heard the voice of the speaker who is persuading them to accept the call of the gospel. Just as you and Brother Robison have done many times. There is no doubt in my mind that the writer had a different idea when he wrote the song, but that does not hinder us from putting a different and better construction on it. I doubt if one but our own people would even notice it. It is where they speak of going to heaven, etc., that is serious.

We will eliminate every error that is at all misleading. In some of your objections it is just a matter of taste. Some have entered a protest against leaving out some you wish to. Their taste is different. We can satisfy all alike by eliminating all serious errors, as mentioned above; but we cannot suit all tastes any more than we could in cooking. Let us have it as near perfect as possible and not out of harmony with the gospel. Now brethren, we need another edition badly. We have the plates, so let us rally to the cause and give the brethren a book that have none. We have some new congregations, as well as old, that have no books. We had a wonderful sale on the first edition; and now let me ask every one how many books will you take if we print another edition ? I might explain here the ten dollars that were sent the Committee on the first edition was to buy the plates. The printing and binding had to be paid for out of the sale of the books. We sold the books at practically the cost of printing and binding and mailing, which was 50 cents each. We got an extraordinary low price on the printing. But now as with everything else, it costs us nearly double. We cannot get the book out and mail it for less than 85 cents, and come out even. But remember the book will be worth it in every way. You figure how many more books you could buy at 85 cents with the price of a day's labor than you could a few years ago for 25 cents. On paper they look high, but in reality not so high as in former years.

Now brethren, write just as soon as you read this and tell me how many books you will take. Send no money, send only your order. I will book you for so many, and when we have enough to justify us we will put the book in the hands of the printer and he will get it out in a hurry. I am sure we will never need another edition; this one will last till the Lord comes. The main thing is to help each other with means of worship till that time. Let your orders come now. Brethren, do not say, "I will not buy because the book does not come up to my ideal"; say it is the best we can do with our means, and is good enough. That person does not live who could get up a book that in every detail would suit everyone. Even the Bible does not do that. Write me today how many you want.

The Committee,
Almus Adams, Chairman,
3944 Hartman Ave.,
Ames Station Omaha, Neb.

The minister was visiting one of his parishioners. He took the small daughter of the family on his knee and facetiously remarked:

"I don't love you, Nellie."

The family laughed, but little Nellie frowned and said:

"You've got to love me. You've got to."

"Got to ? How so ?" laughed the divine.

"Because," said Nellie, stoutly, "you've got to love them that hate you—and, goodness knows I hate you."

OBITUARIES

Sophia Frier was born in Clinton County, Indiana, May 24, 1841. This was in a time that much of the original forest was standing and the swamps were undrained. And in recording the events of her life the memory sweeps back over a period of years that marks the most marvelous advance in the improvements of the country, and the ways of life, of all centuries. Hence her life has been full of innterest. She saw the log hut give place to the commodious home, the ox team succeeded by the modern motor car, and the old reap sickle laid aside for the self-binding harvester.

She was united in marriage to J. U. P. Strawn, June 1859. She was the mother of five children, namely, John, James, William, Howard, and Zora. She was left a widow by the death of her husband, July 5, 1892. She accepted the gospel message and was baptized by Elder J. F. Wagoner in May 1895, and united with the Hillisburg Church of God, where she was a member at her death.

She was married to Samuel B. Halliday, November 21, 1896. He died January 26, 1917, and she, after a few days illnes, passed from life at her home, January 20, 1918, at the age of 76 years, 7 months, and 26 days. She leaves one brother, Thomas Benton Frier, of Kokomo, Ind., three sons, John, of Frankfort; William and Howard, of this vicinity; and one daughter, Mrs. Zora Foltz, of Frankfort; nine grand-children and one great-grand-child, and many other relatives.

Funeral services were held at the Hillisburg Church of God at 10:30 A. M., January 22, 1918, conducted by the pastor, D. E. VanVactor. Burial was made in the Plummer Cemetery, where the beloved sister was laid to rest to await the coming of Christ and his resurrection.

Catherine Thatcher-Graham was born January 14, 1838, in Dearborn County, Indiana. She was the daughter of Harvey and Amelia Thatcher and one of a family of seven sons and five daughters.

She was married to Matthew Graham March 20, 1890, at Connersville, Indiana, where they resided until his death some four years later. She afterwards moved to Scircleville and took up her residence near her sister, Mrs. Frier, in whose association she spent the remainder of her days. After a brief sickness she died at the home of James Frier, January 22, 1918, at the age of 80 years and 8 days.

The departed friend has lived a quiet, unasuming life, discharging her duties to the best of her abilities as she saw them. She was a good woman, of kindly disposition, a friend and a neighbor to those about her. We cannot judge her for we know not the obstacles that lay in her pathway. We therefore commit her life and her works to the hands of the heavenly Father and to the judgment of his compassionate Son. Jesus Christ.

She leaves one sister, Mrs. James Frier, of this place, and one brother, William Thatcher, of Omaha, Neb. Several nephews and neices also survive her.

Funeral services were held at the M. E. church at Scircleville, Ind., at 10:30 A. M., Thursday Jan. 24, 1918, conducted by D. E. VanVactor, and the beloved one was laid to rest to await the call of Jesus in his own appointed time when he shall be pleased to exercise his resurrection power.

Chas. H. Behn was born in Germany, May 21, 1848, and came to the United States at the age of two years, with his mother who located at Xenia, Ohio. At the age of fourteen he enlisted in the Union Army Aug. 15, 1862, in Company E, of the 11th. Ohio Vol. Inf., and served his country through the war and was mustered out July 9, 1865. He united with the Argos G. A. R. Post, June 10, 1887, where he was a member at the time of his death.

He was married to Arilla J. Lowry, in 1873, at Argos. Indiana, where they lived and became the parents of four children, namely, Retta, Ona, Bessie, and Oliver Donald. Their lives were saddened by the death of the three daughters. They removed to Fort Wayne in 1889 where the mother sickened and died, Dec. 15, 1891, leaving but the father and Donald. In 1911 they went to Albuquerque, New Mexico, for Donald's health. After two years stay Brother Behn returned to Argos and stayed until he took up his abode in the Soldier's Home at Marion, Indiana. He found life agreeable in the Home, and his last visit in Argos showed that he was being taken care of and that he was in better spirits than usual. He died after a brief illness, January 25, 1918, aged 69 years, 8 months and 4 days.

He heard and obeyed the gospel and was baptized by Elder H. V. Reed, Feb. 8, 1877, and united with the church of God. In Argos he affiliated with the Church of God and served as Superintendent of the Sunday School during the years 1915-6. In this capacity he took great care to serve efficiently and acceptably.

Brother Behn was a patient, conscientious man, unassuming and full of zeal. He has drank deeply of the sorrows of life, but endured his appointed lot without complaint.

He leaves one sister, Mrs. Rosa Grunder, of Cincinnati, Ohio, and one son Donald, and other relatives and close friends in the household into which he married where he was always considered one of the family.

The body was brought to Argos on Sunday morning and taken to the home of Frank P. Boggs. Funeral services were held from the Church of God on Tuesday, 2 o'clock, Jan. 29, 1918, conducted by D. E. VanVactor. Burial was made in Maple Grove cemetery where we left the beloved brother to await the coming of Christ and his resurrection.

D. E. VanVactor.

Stomach Needs Occasional Rest

The loss of a meal occasionally will not hurt you, and if your stomach "gets out of order" the very best thing you can do is to fast for a day or two or eat only a fruit diet, until your tongue loses its yellow coating.

Memory Verses: Micah 6:8; Titus 2:13,14

Golden Text: 1 Cor. 10:32

Not As I Will

Blindfolded and alone I stand,
With unknown thresholds on each hand;
The darkness deepens as I grope,
Afraid to fear, afraid to hope;
Yet this one thing I learn to know,
Each day more surely as I go,
That doors are open, ways are made,
Burdens are lifted or are laid
By some great law unseen and still,
Unfathomed purpose to fulfill,
"Not as I will."

Blindfolded and alone I wait,
Loss seems too bitter, gain too late;
Too heavy burdens in the load,
And too few helpers on the road;
And joy is weak, and grief is strong,
And years and days so long, so long !
Yet this one thing I learn to know,
Each day more surely as I go,
That I am glad the good and ill
By changeless law are ordered still,
"Not as I will."

"Not as I will"; the sound grows sweet
Each time my lips the words repeat,
"Not as I will"; the darkness feels
More safe than light when this thought steals
Like wispered voice to calm and bless
All unrest and all lonliness.
"Not as I will," because the One
Who loved us first and best has gone
Before us on the road, and still
For us must all his love fulfill,
"Not as I will."—H. H. Jackson.

Words of Wisdom

Wisdom is better than strength, and a wise man is superior to a strong man.

God will not accept any man's person, neither will he stand in awe of any man's greatness; for he made the little and the great, and he hath equally care of all.

A man's life is a ship that passeth through the waves; whereof when it has gone by, no trace can be found, nor the path of its keel in the waters.

A man's life is like a bird flying through the air, of the passage of which no mark can be found, but only the sound of its wings beating the light air, and parting it by the force of her flight; she moved her wings, and hath flown through, and there is no mark found afterward of her way.

A man's life is as when an arrow is shot at a mark, the divided air presently cometh together again, so that the passage thereof is not known.

How beautiful is the chaste generation with glory, for the memory thereof is immortal; because it is known both with God and with man.

We fools esteem the life of the righteous as madness, and their end without honor. Behold how they are numbered among the children of God, and their lot is among the saints.

The just shall live for evermore; and their reward is with the Lord, and the care of them with the Most High. They shall receive a kingdom of glory, and a crown of beauty at the hand of the Lord; with his right hand he will cover them, and with his holy arm he will defend them.

Our Weekly Puzzle

"The Lord shall deliver me from every evil work, and will preserve me unto his heavenly kingdom: to whom be glory for ever and ever. Amen."

By whom written? to whom written? and where found?

Answer next issue.

Answer to puzzle in last issue:

The passage can be found in 2 Cor. 6:1, and was written by the apostle Paul to the church of God at Corinth.

Moral Earnestness Needed

Moral and spiritual earnestness is essential to an effectual prayer. It is useless to try to [illegible] God in prayer when there is sin in our hearts.

The schoolboy who desires to solve some arithmetic example and prays to God for help, but never opens the book and attempts to solve the problem himself, will not arrive at the solution of his example.

We should not ask God to do things for us when we have not done our part. No strong man asks God to carry a burden he can carry.

Some one has said that men are divided into two classes—the leaders and the lifters. Some people are always leading and some seem always to be carrying the burdens. But even the lifters must have something to lean on. They must have faith in God.

Your God is love; love him and in him all men, as his children in Christ. Your Lord is a fire; do not let your heart be cold, but burn with faith and love. Your Lord is light; do not walk in darkness. Your Lord is a God of mercy and bountifulness; be also a source of mercy and bountifulness to your neighbors.

Abraham Lincoln

The sixteenth President of the United States was born Feb. 12th 1809. His early life was one long struggle against misfortune. His father was course, hard, harsh, and improvident, showing little love or consideration for his wife (Nancy Hanks), and absolutely none for his son. Mrs. Lincoln's nature was opposite to that of her husband: hers was fine, tender, considerate, and loving. "Abe"—for Abraham was socalled—followed after the mother, who tried to teach him things necessary for his own advancement. When Abe was nine years of age his mother died. It is recorded that her last words were, "Dear Lord, make my boy honest, gentle, kind and true"—all of which were realized in the character of the future president, America's leading son who, when he had attained the height of earthly glory exclaimed, "All that I am or ever hope to be I owe to my loving mother."

We have remarked that the early life of Abraham Lincoln was a struggle against misfortune; and we wish to emphasize the fact that with him a struggle meant something, for he persevered until he defeated every difficulty, subdued every hindrance, vanquished every obstruction, conquered every obstacle, overcame every encumbrance, and turned misfortune into blessing. It is this trait in the character of Abe Lincoln that we would have you follow. True he conquered a hostile people, but he did more, for he conquered himself; true he gave to many bonded people their freedom, but he did more in freeing himself of anger, hatred, and malice. We in our humble position can do as much by conquering self and freeing self from vain glory. We are in position to accept God's plan of salvation as revealed in Christ Jesus our Lord. And in so doing we shall become princes and kings in the everlasting kingdom of the Most High, a position and honor far higher than any obtained by Abe: for all earthly honors are temporal, but these to be conferred by God are eternal.

Some Sayings by Abraham Lincoln

I have not wittingly planted a thorn in any man's bosom.

I claim not to have controlled events, but confess plainly that events have controlled me.

The people are the rightful masters of both congress and courts, not to overthrow the constitution, but to overthrow the men who pervert the constitution.

Let us have faith that right makes might, and in that faith let us to the end dare to do our duty as we understand it.

When I came of age I did not know much, still somehow I could read and write, and cypher to the rule of three; but that was all. I have not been to school since. The little advance I now have upon this store of education I have picked up from time to time under the pressure of necessity.

Every man has the right to put into his mouth the bread that his own hands have earned, is the equal of every other man, white or black.

With malice toward none, with charity toward all.

OUR CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTORS

Comparatively few conscientious objectors have presented themselve among the drafted men. It is estimated that in the entire country 200 cases have been met with among the 600,000 men brought together by the first draft. A writer in The Congregationalist (Boston), who has investigated the subject, reports that thus far about twenty of them have been sentenced to terms of imprisonment, ranging from six months to twenty years; but in these cases the men failed to report at camp after being drafted, and thus brought themselves under the jurisdiction of a military court martial. The cases studied by the Rev. A. J. Muste, however, were men who went to the camp and when there failed to obey their officers' orders, alleging their religious bias as an excuse. If such a one should chance to belong to a well known anti-war sect, like the Quakers, Adventists, Mennonites, he finds a law exempting him from combatant service, though he is compelled to report with other drafted men at the camp. Other men, says Mr. Muste, find their path more difficult. "The Draft Law does not admit that an individual can have a conscience in this matter . . . nor does any one seem to know certainly whether the Secretary of War's ruling about segregating C. O.'s for the present applies to all C. O.'s or only to such as are members of certain sects." There are instances of such men being sentenced to half a year in the guard-house, he says, or to several years in a Federal military prison: for refusing to obey military orders. "On the other hand, there are a number of instances of such men being recognized as C. O.'s and placed in the separate company." Mr. Muste found among the class of C. O.'s in the camp he visited some Quakers, some Christadelphians, some followers of the late Pastor Russell, some Baptists, one a Stundist from Russia, one a Catholic with radical social ideas, and some Socialists. He interviewed several and gives a good account of their apparent sincerity. He writes:

"What is actually happening in typical cases is about as follows: A conscientious objector gets his notice to report at camp on a certain date. Perhaps he complies with the order. Perhaps he has determined not to comply voluntarily with any military command, in which case he sends word that he refuses to report for service,, but can be found at a certain address. A military policeman is sent to that address and the objector quietly proceeds to camp in his custody.

"Arrived in camp, the objector will be ordered to put on the unform. He may refuse or comply. In any event he will presently be ordered out for drill. Probably he refuses to obey that order. He informs the officer that he is a C. O. The officer will probably laugh and tell him to fall in with the rest. If the objector is firm in his refusal, the officer will report him to a superior. If the objector happens to belong to some well known group like the Quakers, his claim will probably be immediately recognized. He will then be asked to accept alternate service in the hospital or commissary department, for example. If he declines to do this, he will be placed in a separate company with men of like mind and kept there until the President's ruling on non-combatant service is made."

If an objector happens to be a religious man not belonging to the sects described in the Draft Law, we are told, "every affort short of physical violence will be made to induce him to waive his objection and drill." Then:

"If this fails, he will be urged to take alternative service, perhaps in the hospital. If he declines this, he will probably be court-martialed and put in the guard-house for a week or month. If after the expiration of that period he still stands firm, his claim will be recognized and he will be placed in the separate company.

"Naturally much depends upon the objector and the officer with whom he has to deal. Some objectors can make clear in the right spirit just what they stand for, others fail. Some officers can see the point, others can not. I know of only one instance of an objector being beaten by an officer.

"At the moment the interesting question is, What will the President define as satisfactory alternatve service for C. O.'s who stand out absolutely? Will he compel servce under military authority, or accept certain kinds of service under civil authority, such as work in the Friend's Reconstruction Unit in France? It appears from reports now at hand that in the different cantonments there may be a couple of hundred men at least from this first draft who will absolutely refuse service under military authority and who face prison sentence if service under civil authority is not granted.

"On the one hand, the War Department does not desire to persecute the genuine conscientious objector and shows an inclination to investigate carefully any case of seeming injusice reported to it. If it were to persecute, the matter would inevitably gain wide publicity, and this would defeat the Administration's desire to keep the whole matter as much as possible in the background. On the other hand, there is the fear that if any leniency is shown in dealing with objectors, a host of slackers will develop consciences overnight.

"Thus we may well sympathize with our Government in its attempt to deal wisely with a thorny problem. At the same time, as Christians, we shall do well to think sympathetically also about these men who, however mistaken they may be, are fighting for freedom of conscience. It is an intense joy to meet some of them, at least. Their trust in God is beautiful. They live by prayer and the study of the Bible. Their desire to do the will of Christ as they understand it is absolute"—Selected from The Literary Digest, Jan. 26, by Brother Newman Smith.

A PRAYER

Rock of ages cleft for me,
May thy side my haven be;
May thy wing o'er spread the way,
May the night be light as day.

Protect me Lord from doubt and fear,
Ah, all is well if thou art near;
Thy will be done, my prayer shall be.

THE THOUSAND YEARS' REIGN OF CHRIST AND THE SAINTS

BY ROBERT G. HUGGINS*

Pastor of the Church of God, 10623 Lee Ave., Cleveland, O.

I. The Gracious Purpose of Christ's Reign is to Subdue "All Enemies"

The mission of Christ's reign on earth is to extirpate "all enemies" from the earth, which is now "subject to vanity" (Rom. 8:20). The specifications of evil here given as vanquished by his reign are representative only:

(a) All human governments will be abolished (Isa. 24:21-23; Rev. 19:11-20; Isa. 17:13,14; Psa. 2:4,5: 110:5,6; 1 Sam. 2:10; Dan. 2:44; 7:13,14; Psa. 74:20; Rev. 11:15: Psa. 72).

(b) There will be but one kingdom "under the whole heaven," the kingdom of God (Psa. 2:1-12; 72:8; Dan. 2:44, 7:27; Num. 24:17; Rev. 11:15; Zech. 14:9; 9:10).

(c) There will be but one religion, the true one, the religion of Christ and his government (Isa. 45:23-25; 52:1,7-10; 66:17-23; Zech. 14:16; 8:23; 9:7; Rev. 5:9-14; Zeph. 3:9; Mal. 1:11).

(d) All idols and idolators shall be destroyed (Isa. 2:18; 42:17; Psa. 97:7; Zech. 13:2).

(e) War "shall cease to the ends of the earth" (Psa. 46:9; Isa. 2:4; 9:5; Hos. 2:18; Zech. 9:10; Ezek. 39: 9,10; Rev. 20:1-3).

(f) Premature death will exist no more (Isa. 65: 20-23; Zech. 8:4,5).

(g) The land of Israel shall be transformed from barrenness to fertility, being made beautiful, fruitful, and glorious (Isa. 35:1; 41:18,19,20; Amos 9:13-15; Isa. 60:13; 65:17-25; Zech. 8:3-8,12).

(h) The city of Jerusalem will be built again, broadened, enlarged, and adorned by the "precious things" of all nations (Psa. 72:10; Isa. 26:15 Revised Version; Zech. 14:20, Revised Version; Isa. 33:17, Revised Version; Jer. 31:38; Isa. 60:10-18; Hag. 2:6-9; Jer. 3:17).

(i) The Jews and Israelites will become fast friends and a united nation, with whom the Gentiles will join to yield a national and happy obedience to the King of kings, the Lord of hosts and ruler of the whole earth (Zech. 8:22; Jer. 3:17,18; Rev. 15:4; Isa. 25: 7,8; 2:2,3; Isa. 45:14-25; Ezek. 37:21-24).

(j) There will be a sevenfold increase of light, both solar and lunar (Isa. 4:5; 30:26; 60:19; Zech. 2:5; 14:6,7; Rev. 21:11,18,22-26; 22:5).

(k) The earth and its animal inhabitants, to a large extent, will partake of the blessings of the times (Isa. 11:6-9; 65:25; Hos. 2:18; Ezek. 34:25,28; Rom. 8:19-23; Rev. 22:3).

II. The Reign of Christ and the Saints for One Thousand Years Subsequent to the Establishment of the Kingdom of God at the Return of Christ, is a Transitional Period Between the Purely Animal and Purely Spiritual Ages Blending the Elements of Both

The subjects of the kingdom of God, the remnants of the Jewish and Gentile nations who "find grace" (Jer. 31:2) and survive as the "left of the nations" (Zech. 14: 16) at the coming of Christ and the setting up of the kingdom of God, multiply rapidly with the pangs of child-birth mitigated. They soon develop into numerous and strong nations. Some of the people are righteous, and some of them are wicked. Sin and death continue among both classes in a modified form during the reign of Christ (Gen. 3:16; 1 Tim. 2:15; Ex. 1:19; Isa. 66:7-9; Lev. 23:10-20; 1 Cor. 15:23-26: Mal. 3:18; Jas 1:13; Rev. 14:1; 5:10; Ezek. 44:22,25; Isa. 65:20; Zech. 8:4; Isa. 60:21).

III. There is a "Little Season" of Judgment After the Thousand Years Expire

During this "season" the just and the unjust of that age, including both the living and the dead, are judged. The righteous are approved and immortalized, the wicked are rejected and consigned to shame and the second death. Mortality has now been abolished by salvation and destruction, and death, "the last enemy," destroyed (Rev. 20; 21; 1 Cor. 15:24-28).

IV. The Supremacy of Christ Ends with the Abolition of "All Enemies," at which Time God's Direct Supremacy for Eternity Begins

With the abolition of "all enemies" from the presence of the Lord and from the face of the earth, there comes a change in the administration of the kingdom of God. With all the wicked "cut off," none remain but the righteous, who are redeemed, glorified, and immortalized, and who inherit the earth forever. Christ's work as Prophet, Priest, Savior, and King is now finished; and he presents a redeemed earth and a glorified people to his Father, who takes the kingdom into his own hands and reveals himself without mediation (Matt. 5:8; 1 Cor. 11:3; 15:23-28; Eph. 1:10,22; Heb. 2:5-9; Rev. 21:1-7; 22:3).

SYNTHETIC REMARKS ON THE LESSON

I. The Gracious Purpose of Christ's Reign is to Subdue "All Enemies." The kingdom of God is designed for gracious ends. Its establishment means the destruction of the wicked, the salvation of the righteous, and the emancipation of the nations from the thraldom of sin. "All the foundations of the earth are out of course" (Psa. 82:5). The riches of the earth are "cornered" by the opulent and hoarded away in the palaces of a surfeited few. In a world of plenty the masses of humanity, through "man's inhumanity to man," misrule, and oppression, are forced to eke out a miserable existence, weltering in poverty, ignorance, and squalor. "The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof" (Psa. 24:1); but his liberality has been selfishly monopolized by the covetous and fraudulently squandered by the prodigal. The earth is filled with a surplusage of God's goodness which he has lavished upon the sons of men (Psa. 33:5); but his bounty has been rapaciously plundered by pirates and "food sharks" and doled out at exorbitant prices to famishing millions We are sorely in need of a Savior, a Great One; and God has provided him whom he will soon send to deliver us (Isa. 19:20; Acts 3:20). "Jesus is the One." When he comes he will cure the world's ills by setting up the kingdom of God. It is through the kingdom of God and the reign of Christ that "all rule and all authority and all power" are subdued to God. "He must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death" (1 Cor. 15:24-26). So completely will all things be "gathered together in one in Christ" and put under his feet that God alone is "excepted" from the otherwise universal subjugation (Eph. 1:10; 1 Cor. 15:27). "All enemies" includes evils as well as personal adversaries, which is apparent from the fact that "death" is catalogued as one of them, and is said to be the "last" one destroyed. All evil on earth is to be extirpated by the kingdom and reign of Christ. Evils and enemies are literal, and they must be literally destroyed and cured by a literal Judge and Redeemer. They cannot be literalized into times that are past, nor spiritualized into the history of Christianity, nor celestialized into heaven, nor allegorized into the perfect state after the millennium, nor idealized into oriental abstractions. "All enemies" comprehends more than can be computed; but the representative ones definitely specified in the lesson as among the "destroyed" may be taken as an epitome of them all. Synthetic remarks upon them here would be superfluous.

II. The Reign of Christ and the Saints for One Thousand Years Subsequent to the Establishment of the Kingdom of God at the Return of Christ, is a Transitional Period, Between the Purely Animal and Purely Spiritual Ages, Blending the Elements of Both. As the first coming of Christ was followed by the Christian dispensation, so his second coming will be followed by the millennial age. When the kingdom of God is inaugurated and the reign of Christ is in process of administration, adequate machinery will exist on earth for the control and final extermination of evil. In the procedure of extirpating evil from the earth, however, we must let God lead us every step of the way, and depend entirely upon what he has said in lucid and perfect statements. When we read that "many people," "many nations," and "strong nations afar off," which were formerly "scattered" at Babel (Gen. 11:8), now become unified and "flow" to Jerusalem "like a river" (Isa. 66:12), to participate in national and international concerts of prayer before the Lord in Mount Zion (Isa. 2:2; Micah 4:2,3; Zech. 8:22,23; Jer. 3:17; Rev. 15:4; Isa. 25:7,8; 45:14-25), we must recall the fact that these peoples and nations are raised up from a "remnant" which was spared in the conflagration attending the coming of Christ (Micah 4:7; Zech. 8:6; Lesson V). Magnificent, national, international, and millennial statements like "all nations shall serve him," "all nations shall call him blessed" (Psa. 72:11,17), must be qualified in harmony with antecedent advent judgments. They are so qualified in the same chapter where the statements are made. Blasts of judgments: storms, both terrific and destructive, attend the re-establishment of David's throne under Christ (Rev. 4:1-5). These destroy the majority and discipline the "remnant." Psa. 72:6,7 records this element in the case clearly: "He shall come down like rain upon the mown grass: as showers that water the earth. In his day shall the righteous flourish; and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth." "Surely the people is grass" (Isa. 40:7). To mow down the grass means to mow down the people. Observe, then, that "the righteous" are to flourish, not sinners; and that the millennial rain descends "upon the mown grass." All the sons of Belial are "thrust away" like thorns when David's son takes his throne (2 Sam. 23:6). Instead of the Sodomites and others, "lewd fellows of the baser sort" (Acts 17:5), who have lived in the past, and who were so abominably mean when they did live that God killed them for their iniquity (Gen. 18:20;13:12), instead of these being raised from the dead* and given a "chance" as subjects during Christ's reign, as Russellism teaches, the wicked who are living at the time are mowed down like the grass and cast into the oven (Matt. 6:30). At that time "the righteous," and the righteous only, "flourish." It is after the grass is mown that "he comes down like rain" to "strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die" (Rev. 3:2); it is after the storm of judgment at Christ's coming has passed over that "the sun of righteousness" (Mal. 4:2) breaks through the dispersing clouds "like the light of the morning, when the sun riseth, even a morning without clouds, as the tender grass springing out of the earth by clear shining after rain" (2 Sam. 23:4). The adults are "the grass" which is mown; the children are the "tender grass which springs out of the earth," and which is nourished by the copious rains and fructified by the "clear shining" sun after the storms and clouds have disappeared. "He that remaineth, even he, shall be for our God" (Zech. 9:7), and God shall be for him (Zech. 13:9). Like the farmer, God saves a "seed," the fittest and the best, the children of the time, who have not yet formed any bad habits or imbibed any false doctrines (Deut. 1:39); and by mitigating the pangs of child-birth, like the type of Israel under Moses (Ex. 1:12,19), a people "shall be born," another "generation" shall be raised up in righteousness which speedily grow into nations and kingdoms (Psa. 22:30,31,27,28). The "children shall continue" (Psa. 102:28), be painlessly prolific (Isa. 66:7-9; 60:9), enjoy longevity (Isa. 65:20-24), and multiply from a "remnant" and "seed" into "many people" and "strong nations" with amazing alacrity. The reader is asked to note this fact well; for it puts world-burners to shame and at the same time pulls up Russellism by the roots. This scriptural truth may be compared to a two-edged sword: with one edge we slay world-burning, and with the other, Russellism. "All nations whom thou hast made shall come and worship before thee, O Lord, and shall glorify thy name" (Psa. 86:9). These nations are "made," and made in the way here explained.

* Who are raised from the dead, when they are raised, for what they are raised, and many other interesting questions relating to the resurrection are discussed in lessons V and IX.

The first thousand years after the establishment of the kingdom of God will blend the elements of perfection and imperfection, immortality and mortality. Immortality will be displayed in Christ and the saints (Phil. 3:20,21; Luke 20:36); mortality in the subject inhabitants. The millennial reign is not a perfect state. It is during this time that Christ puts down "all rule and all authority and all power and all enemies" (1 Cor. 15:24,25); but if these "enemies" are to be subjugated then, it is surely evident to the reader that they must exist: for that which does not exist cannot be "put down." There are "enemies," then, in the kingdom of God at first. All things that offend and those who do iniquity are to be gathered out of the kingdom (Matt. 13:41). The reign of Christ is a transitional period intervening between the purely animal age of now and the purely spiritual age of eternity. Some have overlooked the composite state of the millennium, the admixture of good and evil, and have reached the conclusion that although the subjects of the kingdom are mortal, yet if they are righteous they shall "live on"—meaning that they shall continue to live to the end of the thousand years, and are then immortalized without dying. The only death they can conceive of during this time is for the wicked, and only for them in cases of contumacy. In contravention of this idea the saints are called the first fruits to God and the Lamb (Rev. 14:1-4). Since Christ and the saints are both called "first fruits" (1 Cor. 15:23; Lev. 23:10-20; Jas. 1:18), analogy requires us to find the nature of the harvest in the first fruits—Christ and the saints. They are "samples" of the harvest. Neither of them "lived on" until they were immortalized. On the contrary, both were faithful and obedient unto death (Phil. 2:8,9; Heb. 5:7; Rev. 2:10). If man's obedience to the gospel should give him immunity from death, ungodly men would rush pell-mell into it from sinister motives—that of present gain and advantage. Probation necessitates a mixed condition of good and evil to afford scope for the exercise of faith. There must be no present visible benefit allotted to those who serve God which seemingly is withheld from those who serve him not. The difference between these two classes will be made conspicuous in the day of recompense (Mal. 3:18). "Without faith it is impossible to please God" in any age (Heb. 11:6). Conditions in the millennial age, therefore, must be such as to give room for faith, which is "the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen" (vs. 1; 2 Cor. 5:7). Then the existence of sacrifice in Christ's reign (Zech. 14:21; Mal. 3:4; Isa. 60:7) points to death as still in operation among those who offer. Again, the fact that the saints exercise the double office of kings and priests also argues that sin and death still exist (Rev. 5:10) or those kingly and priestly functions would be superfluous. Boys, girls, the aged with staff in their hands, and "old men who have filled their days" are all separately and distinctly spoken of (Zech. 8:4,5; Isa. 65:20), showing that there is still the imperfection of birth, childhood, old age, and the completion of natural life without the idea of judicial infliction for contumacy. "The child shall die an hundred years old; but the sinner being an hundred years old shall be accursed" (Isa. 65:20). The word "child" in this text is used in contrast to the word "sinner"; "die" is also opposed to "accursed." The passage means, then, "The child (righteous) shall die," etc.—a positive assertion that natural death continues to prey upon the righteous of that age as well as upon the sinner (Ezek. 44:22,25, 26). And Paul's declarations in 1 Cor. 15:23-26 confirm this conclusion. He says there is a "first," an "afterwards," and a "then" in the "order" of resurrection. According to his understanding there is a resurrection at the "end," a necessity which grows out of the fact that the subjects of the kingdom have been subject to death throughout the reign of Christ. Paul is certain regarding the fact that the reign of Christ results in putting down "all enemies," including "death," which he says is "the last." Add to this the wholesale infliction of death upon myriads at the close of the millennium (Rev. 20:8,9), and the conviction is irresistible that death, "the last enemy," is of common occurrence throughout the millennium. In fact, calling death "the last enemy," implies that all other enemies are abolished before it, and that therefore it lives longer than any of the rest, reaching clear down to "the end."

III. There is a "Little Season" of Judgment After the Thousand Years Expire. This proposition is a logical upshot from the previous thesis. The millennium ends, like all preceding dispensations have ended, in judgment. The theory which requires the righteous to "live on" to the end of that age, and which summarily executes the wicked during the same time, reaches the close of the thousand years with all the righteous alive and all the wicked dead. Such a consummation as this clashes with the divine record in many respects. It logically and practically nullifies all the following events, which John says transpire during a "little season" after the thousand years have ended (Rev. 20:7-15) :

(a) Satan is loosed out of his prison;
(b) He deceives the nations;
(c) Under his leadership war is revived, an army is organized, and Jerusalem, "the beloved city," is surrounded by an army as numerous as "the sand of the sea";
(d) All the belligerents are "devoured" by a downpour of fire from heaven;
(e) The dead, both "small and great," the righteous and the wicked, are raised out of the sea, death, and hell (the grave);
(f) Both classes, the good and the bad, are judged "according to their works";
(g) Those "written in the book of life" are given "the life" which "the book" promises them, namely, immortal life. They are the harvest of which Christ and the saints are the first fruits. The after-fruits or harvest of "them that sleep" must correspond in kind and nature with the immortalized Christ and his brethren. This is just as certain as that law of nature which causes the after-fruits and the gatherings of any given crop or harvest to always be exactly of the same kind and nature as the first fruits; and

(h) "Whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire." The wicked perish forever in this lake of destruction. They are completely blotted out of Jehovah's creation. They suffer an oblivion from which there is no reclaim by resurrection. With these perish the devil, death, and hell (the grave, see the margin in verse 13). When the wicked are no more (Psa. 104:35) there cannot be found upon earth a stain of sin, a foot-print of the devil, or a trace of death and the grave. Mortality is now extinct, and death, "the last enemy," is destroyed.

IV. The Supremacy of Christ Ends with the Abolition of "All Enemies," and Then God's Direct Supremacy for Eternity Begins. During the millennium there are three classes of beings on earth: first, the immortal Christ and his glorified church; second, the Jews restored; and third, the Gentiles, both still in mortality. The relation of these three classes may be compared to the threefold division of the tabernacle, which is declared to be typical in character (Heb. 9:8,9). Christ and his glorified bride represent the Holy of Holies, converted and restored Israel the Holy Place, and the Gentiles who are joined to Israel (Zech. 8:20-23), the Court of the Gentiles. In this comparison the reader must remember that the veil of the Holiest is now rent asunder (Matt. 27:51), so that as the Christocracy triumphantly unfolds itself, all people and all lands are embraced in the light of God's favor. The symbol of the divine presence the cloud was at first confined within the ark in the wilderness; but when the temple of Solomon was dedicated it so filled the house that "the priests could not stand to minister by reason of the cloud" (2 Chron. 5:14); in its final outstretch it will encompass the world with its glory, and then the whole earth will become a Holy of Holies (Psa. 72:19). Distinct steps are clearly marked in this march towards perfection. When Christ returns all the holy angels come with him (Matt. 25:31), to this "innumerable company of angels" the "church of the first born" are added in perpetual ties of love and fellowship (Heb. 12:22-24). After these angels and saints have resided on earth a thousand years (Rev. 20:9) "God himself" takes up his abode on the earth, which is now declared to be the "tabernacle of God" (Rev. 21:3). Pity the people who want to go to heaven! Instead of saints going to heaven, the Father and Son and the holy angels are all coming here! When Christ comes he "sets up" the kingdom: but a thousand years later he "delivers it up" to God (1 Cor. 15:24). "Of his kingdom there shall be no end" (Luke 1:33); but there is a change in its administration at the close of the millennium. Christ and the saints shine like the sun and stars of the firmament (Matt. 13:43; Dan. 12:3); they are the heavens that rule (Dan. 4:26) during this transitional period (1). As the Lamb and bride they are called "the great city Jerusalem" a heavenly polity upon earth; but as the millennium passes into history they are seen "descending out of heaven from God" (Rev. 21:10). As "the holy city, new Jerusalem," they "come down from God out of heaven" (vs. 2) because at this time they vacate the thrones on which they have reigned as kings, priests, and judges on the earth (Rev. 20). "Then shall the Son also himself become subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be all and in all" (1 Cor. 15:28). This change in the headship of the kingdom from Christ to God may be understood and appreciated in the light of Paul's statement, "The head of Christ is God" (1 Cor.3:23; 11:3) (2). Both Christ and his subordinate kings, the saints, now "descend" and "come down"; they abdicate their thrones of absolute and direct sovereignty to make room for the more direct and visible headship of God, who is now "all and in all." Sin is now eradicated from the earth, and "God himself" appears without mediation. "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death" (1 Cor.15:26). All that are sinful, and therefore all that are deathful (Rom. 5:12), are destroyed. Death and hell (the grave) are literally destroyed with them, because there will then be none upon whom either can prey. The earth will pass through many convulsions before she reaches redemption: but sweet will be her final deliverance, and grand the day of her consummate glory. The millennium, which is the bud of eternity, will then bloom in its glory never to fade, and celestial peace and repose will settle upon the new earth never to be disturbed. As God's revelation is drawn to a close we are permitted in his last words to gaze unveiled upon the earth when all the wicked are rooted out of it. We are shown the righteous, its sole possessors, immortal, enjoying forever the celestial blessings to which they had been called by "the glad tidings of the kingdom" (Luke 8:1), even "his kingdom and glory" (1 Thess. 2:12)—both of which they shall enjoy forever in blessed partnership with the redeemed and the Redeemer, the holy angels, and "God himself," as the following Scriptures graphically describe:

"The face of the Lord is against them that do evil, to cut off the remembrance of them from the earth" (Psa. 34:16).

"Let the wicked be ashamed; let them be silent in the grave" (Psa. 31:17).

"Let the sinners be consumed out of the earth, and let the wicked be no more" (Psa. 104:35).

"As the whirlwind passeth so is the wicked no more, but the righteous is an everlasting foundation. . . . . The righteous shall never be removed, but the wicked shall not inhabit the earth " (Prov. 10,25,30).

"He must reign till he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death" (1 Cor. 15:25,26).

"The upright shall dwell in the land, and the perfect man shall remain in it; but the wicked shall be cut off from the earth, and the transgressors shall be rooted out of it" (Prov. 2:21,22).

"As truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord" (Num. 14:21; Isa. 11:9; Hab. 2:14).

" . . . . God himself shall be with them, and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away" (Rev.21:3).

"And there shall be no more curse: but the throne of God and of the Lamb shall be in it; and his servants shall serve him: and they shall see his face; and his name shall be in their foreheads" (Rev. 22:3,4).

OUR DEFENSE

"Our soul waiteth for the Lord; he is our help and shield. For our heart shall rejoice in him, because we have trusted in his holy name. Let thy mercy, O Lord, be upon us, according as we hope in thee."

If we look for mercy, according as we hope in the Lord, we should consider his promises, and follow instructions carefully for making these promises our own.

Paul instructs Christians to "be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God: and they that resist shall receive damnation. For rulers are not a terror to good works, but to the evil. Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power? Do that which is good and thou shalt have praise of the same: for he is the minister of God to thee for good. But if thou do that which is evil, be afraid; for he beareth not the sword in vain. For he is the minister of God, a revenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil. Wherefore ye must needs be subject, not only for wrath, but also for conscience sake. For this cause pay ye tribute also: for they are God's ministers attending continually upon this very thing" (Rom. 13:1-6).

Peter also writes: "Submit yourselves to every ordinance of men for the Lord's sake: whether it be to the king as supreme; or unto governers, as unto them that are sent by him for the punishment of evildoers, and for the praise of them that do well. For so is the will of God that with well doing ye may put to silence the ignorance of foolish men."

We are also told that "no man can serve two masters: for he will hate the one, and love the other." Therefore let us "be subject" "for the Lord's sake," and thereby serve the one Master, our Lord and King, whose authority is over all.

Our one Master requires our all. "With all your heart, with all your strength, with all your mind." And also our bodies: "I beseech you therefore, brethren, by the mercies of pod, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service. And be not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind, that ye may prove what is that good, and acceptable, and perfect, will of God." He who conforms himself to this world, is a slacker in the army of the Lord, trying to serve two masters, willing to rob God of his purchase.

"What? know ye not that your body is the temple of the holy spirit which is in you, which ye have of God, and ye are not your own? For ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body, and in your spirit, which are God's" (1 Cor. 6:19, 20). "Ye are bought with a price: be ye not the servants of men" (1 Cor. 7:23).

Brethren, "the prayer of faith" is a very important factor in these times of trouble. We have been taught "to pray for those in authority, that we may lead a quiet and peaceable life." This prayer is answered in our constitutional laws, if these laws are ministered by men of justice and reason for Paul's exhortation in 2 Thess. 3:1-5 reads: "Finally, brethren, pray for us, that the word of the Lord may have free course, and be glorified, even as it is with you: and that ye may be delivered from unreasonable and wicked men: for all men have not faith. But the Lord is faithful, who shall stablish you, and keep you from evil." The Psalmist also puts the same prayer in our mouth, Psa. 43:1: "Judge me, O God, and plead my cause against an ungodly nation: O deliver me from the deceitful and unjust man." And again: "They that love the Lord, hate evil: he preserveth the souls of his saints; he delivereth them out of the hand of the wicked."

If our prayer for deliverance from the power of unreasonable men is not answered immediately, do not lose courage. God has not forgotten us. Trials work patience. Paul says: "We ourselves glory in you in the churches of God for your patience and faith in all your persecution and tribulations that ye endure: which is a manifest token of the righteous judgment of God, that ye may be accounted worthy of the kingdom of God, for which ye also suffered. Seeing it is a righteous thing with God to recompense tribulation to them that trouble you, and to you who are troubled, rest with us, when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ; who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord and from the glory of his power" (2 Thess. 1:4-9). Then, if not before we shall have rest from laws being misconstrued by "unreasonable and wicked men." Peter gives the same assurance in these words: "Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you: but rejoice inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings; that when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy. If ye be reproached for the name of Christ, happy are ye: for the spirit of glory and of God resteth upon you: on their part he is evil spoken of, but on your part he is glorified" (1 Pet. 4:12-14). "The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation, and to reserve the unjust unto the day of judgment to be punished."

The powers that be are powerful only as they are supported by penalties or rewards. We are thankful that the powers (or laws) of the present day, grant a great degree of Christian liberty to those who are willing to become a cipher to the glory of this world; and yet some fear that as "evil men and seducers, wax worse and worse," that they will deprive us of our present degree of liberty in the service of God. But as the "powers that be" are supported by penalties and the rewards of men, and as the rewards are corruptible, and perish with the using, they should not lure us from the service of God; and if the laws are such that we must transgress them, in order to conform to the law of Christ, if we suffer the penalty, which supports the law, we are thereby subject to the law, as Peter writes: "For this is thankworthy, if a man for conscience toward God endure grief, suffering wrongfully. For what glory is it, if, when we are buffeted for our faults, ye shall take it patiently? but if when ye do well, and suffer for it, ye take it patiently; this is acceptable with God. For it is better if the will of God be so, that ye suffer for well doing, than for evil doing." Therefore let us decide to serve the King of kings whatever be the cost. This monarch gives his servants an "hundred fold" for all they sacrifice in his service, with eternal life. We shall inherit the earth forever. When the wicked are cut off then the laws of the Lord shall go forth from Jerusalem, and all nations shall serve and obey him. Brethren, let us watch and pray always, "that we may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to us, and to stand before the Son of Man."

(1) In political prophecy "heavens" is often used for "the rulers," and "earth" for "the people" ruled (Isa. 1:2,10).

(2) In both the Old and New Testaments the word "head" is often used, as here, to denote master, ruler, chief (Num. 17:3; 25:15; Deut. 28:13; Judges 10:18; 1 Sam. 15:17; Eph. 1:22; 4:15; 5:23; Col. 2:10).

EDITORIAL

The Evangel Publishing Society, of Robbins, Tenn., is agent for "Bible Lessons." We would like to have agents in different parts of the country. Write for terms.

"The Thousand Year's Reign of Christ and the Saints," Lesson VI of the "Bible Lessons" series, is just off the press. It appears in this issue of The Restitution. Just half of the proposed series are now published. Several weeks may intervene before we begin the publication of the remaining issues. We would appreciate orders for the lessons that are already published, as we need the money to use in publishing the next issue of the series, "The Father, Son, and Holy Spirit."

"ABOVE THE AVERAGE"

We have just received and read with great interest "Bible Lessons on First Principles," by Robert G. Huggins. If you are looking for something good, something far above the average, here you surely have it. The lesson on the kingdom of God is the best we have ever read. 5 lessons, only 5 cents each or 25 cents per dozen. Order of the author, Robert G. Huggins, 10623 Lee Ave., Cleveland, Ohio, or of this office.

COMMUNICATIONS

"They shall make known unto you all things which are done here" (Col. 4:9).

Dear Brother:

The point you make regarding Jesus being the mediator of the world and an advocate for the household, seems to be borne out by the Scripture. The Greek word translated "mediator" is found in Gal. 3:19, 20; 1 Tim. 2:5; Heb. 8:6; 9:15: 12:24, and is uniformly so translated. The word "advocate" of 1 John 2:1 is translated "comforter" in its four other occurences (John 14:16, 26,: 15:26; 16:7). In the Revised Version these translations are retained, but at each occurrance in the gospels there is found the marginal note, "Or advocate, or helper"; and in 1 John 2:1 the note, "Or comforter or helper."

In looking up all the occurrences of these two words the former certainly seems to have a broader meaning than the latter, and this is made still more obvious under the definition given in "Green's Lexicon": "Mediator, one who interposes to reconcile two adverse parties": "Advocate, one called or sent to assist another, one who pleads the cause of another, generally one present to render various beneficial service."

Of course you know all this, but I have had the benefit of looking it up.

W. S. Tomlinson.

Dear Reader:

I have thousands of tracts I would like to dispose of. Following is the list and offer that I make to move them quickly:

"The Gospel of Health and Life," 20 large pages; 5 cents each.

"What the Church of God Believes in the Plain Words of the Spirit," 10 pages; two copies for 5 cents.

"Heavenly Realities and Shadows," 20 pages price 2 cents.

"Chasing Shadows," "Russellism," "Law and Sin of All Ages," "The Family of God on Earth," "A Greenhouse World," "Covenants and Promises," large pages; price two copies for 5 cents.

Four page tracts: "Fifty Important Questions," "What and Why," "What is truth?" "Signs of Matthew 24 and the close of Probation," "The Eighth Day," "By What Authority," "Heavenly Rewards," "Law, Sin, and Judgment," "Signs of the Second Coming," etc.

Leaflets and folders, four copies for 1 cent: "Seed Thoughts," "Life Insurance," Pickels and Peppers," "Coveteousness," "Remember," "God's Message to the Sons of Abraham," "The Winepress of the Wrath of God," "Baptism."

Select the tracts you wish from the above list; or I will send one tract of each for 25 cents, five packages for $1 to one or separate addresses. I will appreciate your order. Address, Chas. E. Crowe, St. Paul, Nebraska.

My dear Brother Huggins:

Your "Bible Lessons" received and read with care. Many thanks for same. Will say that for over thirty years we have been a careful Bible student, and must say that your lesson on the kingdom is the clearest, plainest, and cleanest from error of anything ever read. You will notice from marked copy of paper sent in this mail that we have advertized them for sale, so you might make us price on same.

Wishing much of God's blessing upon you, I am, your brother, D. Paul Ziegler,
Editor "Evangel of Hope and Bible Banner."

Dear Brethren in the Faith:

Inclosed find $1.50 for 1918.

How I enjoy reading the dear old Restitution, as we do not often have any other sermons. We have quite a large congregation here but I often wonder if numbers count. When winter comes it is too cold; when it is summer it is too hot or we are too tired to gather together as a whole congregation for one excuse or another. Does it ever get too cold or hot and do we get too tired to go to Red Cross sales or any other worldly gathering? Not by the looks of the crowds there! Oh how my heart aches! Some times we weep to see the condition of the church. The one greatest, grandest thing we should work and strive for the most, eternal life in the age to come, we do the least to obtain. We have the faith but where are our works? "By their works ye shall know them." James says, "Show me your faith without your works, and I will show you my faith by my work." "Faith without works dead." Oh why can we not all realize the time is short, that what we do we must be up and doing before the night overtakes us. Why can we not all come out and help each other and not depend on a few to do the work—not work for man, or the approval of man, but for God and his Son. The Scripture says do not forget the assembling of yourselves together as the manner of some. We do not need to wonder why our young members are not more active when those supposed to be old in the faith are so unconcerned. If we acted as though there was a reality in the religion of Jesus Christ, how much more it would draw others! Our daily lives, our conversation, our business transactions, our every action is a lesson to others. Let us be up and doing. Wishing all well,

Your sister in the faith,
Mrs. Chas. Stedman.

CHRIST'S MESSAGE TO THE THYATIRIAN CHURCH

Editor's Sermon Notes on the Apocalypse

"And unto the angel of the church of Thyatira write: These things saith the Son of God, who hath his eyes like unto a flame of fire, and his feet are like unto fine brass: I know thy works, and charity, and service, and faith, and thy patience, and thy works; and the last to be more than the first. Notwithstanding I have a few things against thee because thou sufferest that woman Jezebel, which calleth herself a prophetess, to teach and seduce my servants to commit fornication, and to eat things sacrificed unto idols. And I gave her space to repent of her fornication; and she repented not. Behold, I will cast her into a bed, and them that commit adultery with her into great tribulation, except they repent of their deeds. And I will kill her children with death; and all the churches shall know that I am he which searchest the reins and hearts: and I will give unto everyone of you according to your works. But unto you I say, and to the rest in Thyatira, as many as have not this doctrine, and which have not known the depths of satan, as they speak; I will put upon you none other burden. But that which ye have already, hold fast till I come. And he that overcometh, and keepeth my works unto the end, to him will I give power over the nations: and he shall rule them with a rod of iron; as the vessels of a potter shall they be broken to shivers: even as I received of my Father. And I will give him the morning star. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the spirit saith unto the churches" (Rev. 2:18-29).

I. History of the Church

1. Its formation, progress, and partial decleusion (Acts 16:6-15; 19:8-10; Rev. 2:19, 20, 21, 24, 25).

II. Things in the Church which Christ Commends

1. Love and service—inseparable duties (vs. 19; Acts 11:29; 1 Cor. 16:15; Heb. 6:10).
2. Faith and patience—interdependant duties (vs. 19; Heb. 11).
3. Last works more than the first growth (vss. 19, 4, 25; 3:11; Col. 2:19; 2 Pet. 2:20; Matt. 12:45).

III. Things in the Church which Christ Condemns

1. Jezebel was a prophetess in ancient Israel (2 Kings 9:22, 30; Jer. 4:30).
2. Ahab's marriage to Jezebel introduced an apostacy in Israel of a deadlier kind than before (1 Kings 16:31; 21:25, 26).
3. When John the Baptist "came in the spirit and power of Elias," he was called Elijah: upon the same principle, when false teachers and seducers became active in Thyatira they are called Jezebel (Luke 1:17; vs. 20; 1 Kings 18:4; 19:2; 21:10).
4. God granted her "space (time) to repent"; and she repented not. Those who think God does not give men a fair chance should notice this (Eccl. 8:11; Isa. 26:10; Rom. 2:4; 2 Pet. 3:9).
5. Judgment is always "according to your works" (Psa. 62: 12; Matt. 16:27; Rom. 2:6).
6. Because the Thyatirians "suffered" Jezebel "to teach" and practice her works of spiritual fornication among them, she became their mother and they "her children"; and upon both Christ passes the sentence of death, "except they repent of their deeds" (vss. 20-23).

IV. The Promise

1. The promise is given to "as many as have not known this (Jezebel) doctrine," that "hold fast till I come"; "he that overcometh" (vss. 24, 25, 26).

2. "Power over the nations" (Rom. 5:17; 2 Tim. 2:12; 1 Cor. 6:3; Psa. 149:2, 9; Rev. 3:21; 20:4. Luke 19:17).

3. "He shall rule (break) them with a rod of iron" (Psa. 2; Jer. 19:11; Dan. 2:40, Rev. 12:5; 19:15).

4. This "power" which Christ delegates to overcomers when he comes he has received from his Father: "Even as I have received of my Father" (Luke 4:5-8; John 16:33; Luke 22:29; Numb. 24:17; Job 38:7; Rev. 22:16; 2 Sam. 23; Psa. 72; Dan. 13:12; Matt. 13:43; Cant. 6:10)

THE WISE SHALL UNDERSTAND

There seems to be an increased feeling af anxiety among those who believe in the soon coming of the Lord to deliver his saints from the dominion of death and the living ones from the terror of the times in which we now live. Our constant prayer is "O Lord, deliver us." Much time and talent has been spent by former writers to determine by years and days the time of the Lord's return to the earth. All such have been of little value to those who are anxious for the coming of our King.

When the apostles asked Jesus if he would at that time restore the kingdom to Israel, they were told it was not for them to know the times and the seasons, which the Father hath put in his power. It was enough at that time for them to konw that it would be restored. The prophet Daniel was anxious to know the times and the seasons, but was informed to shut up the words and seal the book even to the time of the end. There are two expressions that are of vital significance when associated with othere prophetic utterances: these are "In the latter times," and "The time of the end." Both of these expressions are pregnant with meaning to those who give them a careful investigation.

In referring to the above expressions we find that the apostle Paul wrote to Timothy concerning the latter times that certain conditions shall exist. In his charge to Timothy he said: "The time will come when they will not endure sound doctrine. They will turn away their ears from the truth, and shall be turned unto fables." Again Paul wrote: "In the last days perilous times shall come; for men shall be lovers of themselves—lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God." Even the wicked who do wickedly admit that these words apply to these times. One of this class has said of these times, "There is nothing good to think about these days." How true this is of those who have no thoughts above the flesh. To the wise, however, are pleasures of thought untold. It is enough for them to know that they are living in perilous times, for it speaks of the soon coming of him who has our life.

In observing our times an universal unrest, men's hearts failing them for the things coming upon them unawares. The tomorrows are constantly bringing surprises. Some are so thoughtless as to say, "Where is the promise of his coming?" James in the fifth chapter of his letter speaks of these times and then says, "Be patient therefore, brethren, unto the coming of the Lord."

The above conditions speak plainly of the Lord's return. In Paul's charge to Timothy he speaks of the coming of the kingdom in the troublesome times when men turn away their ears from he truth. None but the wise can understand these sayings. The prophet Joel states: "Proclaim this among the Gentiles; Prepare war, wake up the mighty men; let all the men of war draw near; let them come up. Beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruning hooks into spears." Never in the history of the world has there been such times. Everything must give way to war and the manufacture of war implements. Food and fuel conserved that the government may assist the allies against the Central Powers. The desire of one belligerent is to establish a universal democracy; the other to establish a military despotism. It seems that when the war closes that there will be but little left worth claiming. There is one grand truth that when the Lord comes he will have the power of the Father behind him and can and will fulfill the angel's song which was sung at his birth, "Glory to God in the highest; on earth peace, good will to men."

The only conclusion from the above is that when the Lord comes his enemies will lick the dust. They will become ashes under the feet of the righteous. In taking heed to the statements made by Paul to Timothy and comparing them with the conditions of today, we can say truly the day of the Lord is now dawning upon us. These truths are unanswerable. The prophetic words of the prophet Joel regarding the manufacture of war implements and the calling together of the men of war is a remarkable revelation of the times in which we live. We have no doubt passed the "last days," and can truly say we are in the "time of the end" when many things will be revealed to the wise that have been kept within the Father's times and seasons. In considering the above statements how vigilant, watchful, and prayerful we should be who have been made wise through a knowledge of Jehavah's purpose in regard to the creation of the earth and man. These times must grow and strengthen before the end of the times spoken of in Daniel 12:1. There shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation, even to that same time; which will deliver Daniel's people. The wise and vigilant can see that this event is approaching.

To my mind there is but one prophecy that has not been fulfilled and we are now living in the very beginning of this. We wish to call your attention to Haggai 2:6, 7. He states that the Lord will shake the heavens and the earth and the sea and the dry land. He will shake all nations. Are we not living under these conditions? The elements, "heaven, earth, sea, dry land" must constitute this old cosmos or arrangement. The political, industrial, social, and religious elements are being shaken, and as Paul wrote to the Hebrews, these things will be removed, but the things not shaken will remain (Heb. 12:27, 28).

Let us mention a few events that partly constitute the shaking of the elements about us that permits us to determine that we are living during the fulfilment of this remarkable prophecy. I will mention among the first things that of our government becoming one of the belligerent powers. Before this we were living in peace with all nations. We soon discovered that we had neglected a preparedness for war. The cry was, "Prepare war, wake up the mighty men; let all the men of war draw near." The result of this cry was that factories owned by individual companies were required by the government to serve the United States in making implements of war. We were required to make loans to the allies amounting to billions of dollars. Then came the selective draft of nearly one million of the flower of our land. We have gone through two campaigns of Liberty Bonds to secure money to carry on the war. After this came the campaign for the Red Cross and the Y. M. C. A. and other orders necessary to the war. Notice, please, how these things entered into every household. Even the Boy Scouts were made to serve the purpose of the government. Camps have been built as a stopping place for those who are being prepared for war. The food and fuel problem has taxed the minds of thoughtful men. We are in the midst of the fuel problem. Take a thought on present conditions. One man able to have thousands of factories to stop the wheels of industry, and stop the earnings of millions of laborers, and in the midst of winter. This was done without consulting Congress now in session. One hundred millions of citizens of a free republic were stirred or shaken by the fuel order by Mr. Garfield. It seemed that the crisis had come, but the American people were equal to the occasion. it is hardly necessary to say that we are rapidly approaching the end of "The time of the end" spoken of by Daniel the prophet. The above period will carry us forward to the gathering of the nations around Jerusalem. This means that the coming of the Lord is very near.

Some are greatly rejoiced at the capture of Jerusalem by the allied powers. The Zionists seem to be ready to take advantage of present conditions and assert that they will in less than a year have as many Jews in the land as went up to rebuild the temple and the walls of the city at at the end of the seventy years. They purpose to set up a Jewish nation. A stable government must be established in order to protect those who come to settle in the land. As long as the land was under Turkish rule this could not occur. Note that the shaking of the nations spoken of in Haggai is followed by the coming of "the desire of all nations." Thus we see that this is the event in the midst of the prophetic utterance. Study these things.

WORDS AT THE LORD'S TABLE

In Romans 10:13 we read: "For whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord shall be saved." "For of him, and through him, and to him, are all things, to whom be glory forever. Amen."

What a high calling for those who can call on the name of the Lord, to testify the gospel of the grace of God. Matt. 24:14. "And this gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations." Mark 16:16: "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved."

What is the gospel of the kingdom, the good news, the glad tidings which Jesus preached about? "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth on him might not perish, but have everlasting life." All those that believe the gospel and have been baptized have put on the saving name of Jesus. These are the ones that have been called by God to do his work. Therefore we have this grand privilege to call on the name of the Lord, for we trust in him and we ask him to keep us and guide us in the narrow way of life, and to keep us from all evil.

To be called by God is wonderful, for it is a high calling. There is none greater. Brethren and sisters, we are a chosen people called by God to do his will. May we pray earnestly to God to overcome all evil and keep steadfast unto the end, and when Jesus comes, who is heir of all things, to set up his kingdom on this earth, may we be ready to be joint heirs with him. What a glorious morning when he comes! Matt. 16:27: "For the Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels, and then he shall reward every man according to his works." May we be ready and have a good report at his coming, and hear him say, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant: thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things: enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

It says, "Thou hast been faithful over a few things." That does mean that we should stop where we are, and be satisfied with what we know. No; if we want to be a ruler in God's kingdom we must practice daily every opportunity we get, no matter where we are, no matter where we go, we can always take the spirit with us, and keep his name in our hearts that we may not sin against him, come to these meeting to build each other up, and be well rooted in love to overcome all that is in the world. In Matt. 16:26 we read: "For what is a man profited if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" Matt. 24:50: "The Lord of that servant shall come in a day when he looketh not for him, and in an hour that he is not aware of." So we want to be always ready and looking for him, for it means everlasting life in his kingdom for those that are ready when he comes. And what a re-union it will be for those that are ready to enter in the joy of the Lord, to see Jesus as he is; and not only to see him as he is, but to be made like him and reign with him in glory for ever. "Of his kingdom there shall be no end." There we shall see our faithful father Abraham, also Isaac, and Jacob, and all the holy prophets since the world began, and all the brethren and sisters from far and near that have fought the good fight of faith. May none of us be left out when he comes. It is a high calling to be called by God, to be rulers in that everlasting kingdom, where there will be no more death, weeping, sorrows, tears, nor pain. Brethren and sisters, let us be workers for the Lord and have fellowship with one another more than we have had in the past; and may we yet gain someone who is willing to have this grand privilege of calling on the name of the Lord. Heb. 4:16: "Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace that we may obtain mercy and grace to help in time of need." Heb. 10:20: "By a new and living way which he had consecrated for us through the veil." Heb. 10:23: "Let us hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering, for he is faithful that promised."

FORGET IT!

If you see a good fellow ahead of the crowd,
A leader of men, marching fearless and proud,
And you know of a tale whose mere telling aloud
Would cause his proud head in anguish to be bowed,
It's a pretty good plan to—forget it.

If you know of any skeleton hidden away
In a closet and guarded and kept from the day,
In the dark, and whose showing, whose sudden display
Would cause grief and sorrow and lifelong dismay,
It's a pretty good plan to—forget it.

If you know of a spot in the life of a friend,
(We all have such spots concealed, world without end).
Whose touching his heart strings, would play on the rend,
Till the shame of its showing no grieving could mend.
It's a pretty good plan to—forget it.

If you know of a thing, just the least little sin,
Whose telling would cork up a laugh or a grin,
Of a man you don't like, for the Lord's sake, keep it in.
Don't, don't be a knocker; right here stick a pin—
It's a pretty good plan to forget it.

George Washington

The first president of the United States was born February 22, 1732, and died December 14, 1799. He was born in wealth and reared in luxury. Some say his leanings were toward aristocracy (but following the advice given in "Forget It" we will say nothing further on the subject). One thing is known beyond a doubt, and that is, his patriotism toward his country was most sincere. Had he desired it he could have been crowned king, but this honor he refused with bitter words to those who suggested it. He even refused to accept any salary for the eight years he served as commander-in-chief of the army; also for the same number of years he served as president of the country.

Of Washington's early life little is known, probably because there was little unusual to tell. The story of the hatchet and the cherry tree and similar tales are quite apocryphal. The boy's life is thought to have been about the same as any other boy of his day. His education was but elementary and very defective, except in mathematics, in which he was largely self-taught. It has been said that Washington's writings have been edited as to spelling, grammar, and rhetoric, to such an extent that their value as evidence has been destroyed. His diaries show comparatively little reading, and no strong indication of "greatness." As in the case of Lincoln, he was educated into greatness by the increasing weight of his responsibilities and the manner in which he met them. He always was known as a deep thinker with but little to say—a trait that is looked upon as the foundation of wisdom.

George Washington died childless. Said the people of his time, he was father only of his country. Having no descendants none can share his honor or disgrace his fame. His estate has practically been public property since 1858, as at that time an association formed for the purpose of preserving it, acquired title.

While time lasts and language is spoken Washington will be remembered and revered, for truly he was a man of deeds.

We have been given an outline of what one American boy made of his life, and we take the liberty of asking you what ambitions and hopes you have regarding your? Remember this, that whatever your ambitions are, you can accomplish them, providing you have grit and perseverance. We trust your ambition is to be a meek and lowly follower of the Lord Jesus Christ, a worker with God; a bestower of blessings on all those about you! so that when the Son of God comes to award his saints he will invite you to enter with him into the everlasting kingdom of our God. Then you not only will be revered and remembered throughout time, but also throughout eternity: an heir of God, a joint heir with Jesus Christ, a priest and a king carrying out the blessings of God.

The Power of Love

Nothing is grievous or burdensome to him who loves. They are not grievous, because love makes them light; they are not grievous, because Christ gives strength to bear them. Wings are no weight to the bird, which they lift up in the air until it is lost in the sky above us and we see it no more and hear only its note of thanks. God's commands are no weight to the soul, which through his spirit he upbears to himself; nay, rather, the soul, through them, the more soars aloft and loses itself in the love of God. "The commandments of God are not grievous" because we have a power implanted in us mightier than all which would dispute the sway of God's commandments and God's love, a power which would lift us above all hindrances, carry us over all temptations, impel our listlessness, sweep with it whatever opposes it, sweep with even the dulness or sluggishness of our own wills—the almighty power of the grace of God.

Wise Sayings

To read, without reflecting, is as if you ate without digesting.

He who makes quick use of the moments is a genius of prudence.

Little duties are the golden pins that fasten the mantle of God's love securely about us.

People seldom improve when they have no model but themselves to copy after.

Our happiness in this world depends on the affection we are able to inspire.

We mistake the gratituitous blessings of God for the fruits of our own industry.

The success of the greater part of things depends upon knowing how long it takes to succeed.

What you keep by you may change and mend, but words once spoken never can be recalled.

There is in every true woman's heart a spark of heavenly fire, which beams and blazes in the dark hour of adversity.

What Is Your Object in Going?

Some go to church for a walk,
Some go to church for a talk,
Some go there to gain a friend,
Some go there their faults to mend,
Some go there to see the fashions,
Some go there to calm the passions,
Some go there to seek a lover,
Some go there their faults to cover,
Some go there to doze and nod;
And a few go there to worship God.

Our Weekly Puzzle

"We have not an high priest which can not be touched with the feelings of our infirmities, but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin. Let us therefore come boldly unto the throne of grace, that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need."

What is a priest?
Who is the high priest mentioned above?
Who is it that bestows mercy and grace?
Where can this passage be found?

EXODUS HAS BEGUN

Jewish Refugees in Egypt Return to Holy Land

New York, Jan. 21.—The first to return to the Holy Land after the British recognition were the Jews who went into Egyptian exile; who sat by the waters of the Nile and waited, with confidence, for the hoisting of the Union Jack over Jerusalem and Jaffa—those Jews, who rather than become Ottoman subjects, fled to the protection of the British in Alexandria. This word has been received by the Provisional Executive Committee for general Zionist Affairs.

They did not have long to wait, all things considered. It is just a little over three years ago, when shortly after the outbreak of the war, Turkey gave to those Jews in Palestine who hailed from Entente countries the choice of Ottomanizing or departing—and close to 10,000 took the latter course, reaching Alexandria with the aid of the U. S. S. Cruiser Tennessee, after suffering many hardships in Jaffa. Now, a repatriation committee has been formed, in Alexandria, with Dr. Gluskin at its head, and with branches in Cairo and Port Said, and possibly by the time that this is published the repatriation will have begun.

The British military authorities at Alexandria took these harried refugees under their special care, and Hadassah assumed the responsibility of caring for the health of the camps in which they found shelter. It was in this work that Rose Kaplan spent the last days of her life, without regard to the fact that the work was actually killing her.

"Few of the refugees are likely to stay in the land of refuge when once the gate to Palestine is opened. If they have not sat down by the waters of the Nile and wept, they have never let their hearts forget Jerusalem, and, with scarce an exception, they are eager to return," says the bulletin of the Copenhagen Zionist Office.—The Jewish Independant.

PRUDENCE

The rainbow is radiant, gorgeous, supernal,
The bauble of pleasure entiseth man on:
Yet it leaves no boon lasting, eternal,
When the glitter of wealth and fame is gone.

Then weigh well each problem that meets you,
In the scale of prudence, wisdom, and right.
If temptations persistently greet you,
Pass them all by like a dream in the night.

Make God's word your constant guide and companion,
Be honest, industrious, faithful and kind;
Pray the Lord to guide, keep, and protect you,
Then will be no sting of remorse left behind.

THE HOLY SPIRIT

Prove All Things: Hold Fast That Which Is Good

Comments in reply to remarks by the Editor in criticism of an article which appeared in the April issue of "The Student."

First of all I would thank the Editor for calling attention to the importance of the subject. Few subjects in Scripture require more study, but few, however, so amply repay for the labor expended.

As a young man, I was brought up in the so-called "orthodox" faith, and it was not without severe suffering both mentally and circumstantially, that I came to renounce, one by one, many of the fundamental doctrines which are supposed to be the pillars of the traditional belief.

I have to thank God for an early training which inculcated an implicit faith in the word of the living God. Many times in the early years of my life was I puzzled by the teaching of godly men, which seemed to be utterly at variance with the plain statements of the Bible. I could never see why reason and common-sense should not be as amenable and as necessary to true religion as any other calling in life—business or profession. No business, no profession would countenance for one moment such self-contradictory tenets as abound in modern theology. Little wonder pulpit and pew are today out of sympathy and the mass of people perplexed beyond measure.

True Christianity is a religion of facts, and were it not possible to fully demonstrate the great fact of its foundation St. Paul could never have uttered the ever memorable words "Prove all things: hold fast that which is good."

The very fact that any doubt at all exists regarding the personality of the Holy Spirit is to my mind a considerable argument against the popular view. No such doubt exists respecting God the Father, or Jesus Christ the Son.

The Editor in the opening paragraph of his friendly criticism makes some exceedingly important admissions, which at the very outset overthrow the proposition which he sets himself the task of upholding, viz., the personality of the Holy Spirit,

(1) He admits the "Holy Spirit" and Spirit of God are one and the same; (therefore what is true of one is true also of the other), so that certain passages such as Genesis 41:38; Exodus 31:3; Job 27:3; Joel 2:28, etc., which prove the impersonality of the "Spirit of God," prove the same regardiing the "Holy Spirit," for no person can be "in" another. Has the Editor noticed that Christ identifies the "Comforter" with the "Holy Spirit," and that the admission that the "Holy Spirit" and "Spirit of God" are the same, goes against his own argument? The promised Comforter or Helper was to come, whereas the "Holy Spirit" or "Spirit of God" was already present, for Christ testified that by it he cast out demons (Matt. 12:28). This the disciples must have known, so how could the "Holy Spirit" be another (personal) Comforter? Are there two spirits? Paul distinctly says, No. (See 1 Cor. 12:13, and note carefully the preposition "in" and the verb to "drink.")

(2) He admits the omnipresence of the "Holy Spirit" and correctly quotes Psa. 139:7 in support, which quotation is in itself an additional and significant proof of the first mentioned admission. It is, however, a self evident fact borne out by abundant Scripture testimony, that no person can be omnipresent. Christ himself, though Son of God, being no exception as the very incident under discussion proves, for he was to send the Comforter (or Helper) because he himself could not be present!

(3) While contending in the body of his remarks that the personal pronouns point to the personality of the Holy Spirit, the Editor actually uses the neuter pronoun in his very first allusion to the subject! Here certainly is an unconscious admission. No good grammarian will allow that it is ever correct to use the neuter pronoun with reference to personality, more especially in such an instance as this. It seems clear, however, Mr. Weir recognizes that "stronger evidence" is necessary than the mere support of the use of the personal pronoun. Mr. Weir quotes some of my remarks, but omits to notice the two preceding sentences which emphasize a most important fact that requires a definite answer.

His remarks re "hear" and "speak" are brought forward as the "stronger evidence," and the question is asked "Could this Comforter both 'hear' and 'speak' if he were not a person ?" Many professing Christians, such as Dr. Dowie, Mrs. White, Mrs. Eddy and others have claimed to "hear" the Spirit "speak," but I feel assured our Editor would not accept their testimony, especially if in the sense indicated by his remarks. Mr. Weir would, I am sure, prefer to "listen" to what the word of God has to "say." If the Editor still persists on laying an undue emphasis on these words, it is but a fair question to ask, "Has he, or has anyone since the promise of the Comforter was given, heard the Spirit speak"? I think not, and have much doubt if he would push his argument to some of its logical conclusions. Prov. 6:13 and Heb. 12:24 might aptly be studied in this connection.

My contention that the New Testament is the promised manifestation of the Spirit, the Editor characterizes as "absurd," and says such "can easily be shown in a variety of ways." Then why not attempt a task so easy, and why not reply to the facts enumerated, especially No. 10, which has particular reference to the points he mentions. Moreover, why does he completely ignore a "straight answer" to the three (3) very important questions at the conclusion of my article ?

The remarks re Gabriel are certainly novel, and it seems almost incredible that nearly 2000 years should elapse before the identity of the Holy Spirit should become known. Does the suggestion accord with facts ? Were not all manifestations of Gabriel actual and recorded as such ? In view of this can it be truly said he has "come" as the Comforter ? Why should Gabriel be better able than Jesus, apart from bodily presence, to comfort the people of God ? Is there in the history of the Church any record that any person has come to take the place of the Lord Jesus during his absence from the earth ? None whatever! All true Christianity is founded on fact. Can Mr. Weir produce the facts ?

(1) Does Gabriel or does the word of God guide us into all truth, and bring all things to our remembrance ?

(2) Does Gabriel, or does the word of God testify of Christ ?

(3) Does Gabriel, or does the word of God show us things to come ? The answers surely are evident ! !

Space forbids more, though much could yet be said. Just a word to some who may ask the question "What is the Holy Spirit ?" A Scriptural answer is the answer we want, is it not ? Let me give one, brief and to the point—see Luke 1:35. Here we find the Holy Spirit referred to as the "Power of the Most High." Christ said the Holy Spirit "proceedeth from the Father."

Written in love, with the sincere hope each reader will truly give the subject "careful study."

Your affectionate brother in Christ,

R. H. Judd.

P. S.—How could Gabriel be the Holy Spirit, when in Luke 1:35 he announces the facts concerning the virgin birth ? If Gabriel was and is the Holy Spirit, then surely Jesus is the Son of Gabriel, and not the Son of God !

Reply to Brother Judd's Article
by The Editor of "The Student"

Our critic, after his introduction, charges us with having admitted in our first paragraph that "Holy Spirit" and "Spirit of God" are "One and the same"; and he remarks: "Therefore what is true of one is true of the other." This we regard as a false deduction on his part, from our words which had reference to Psa. 139:7—"Whither shall I go from thy spirit ? or whither shall I flee from thy presence ?" We took it for granted that he would know and acknowledge that while the Spirit of God is One Spirit (Eph. 4:4) there are "diversities of its manifestation" (1 Cor.12:1-30).

God is the Eternal Spirit. By his Spirit all creatures were created (Psa. 104:30) and all are dependent on it for their continued existence (Job 33:4; 34:14). Paul writes: "There is but one God, the Father, out of whom are all things" (1 Cor. 8:6). But we all know, to our cost, that many of those "things" are anything but "holy"; for without exception, all are included; the meanest and vilest, as well as the holiest and most lovable. It will be seen, therefore, even by our critic, we believe, that his method of dealing with the "Spirit of God," and "Holy Spirit," will not work out satisfactorily. For this reason, an effort has been made in past years, to distinguish between "Holy Spirit and "free spirit" (Psa. 51:12); the latter, generally speaking, applying to the physical universe, while the former had to do with the moral and religious. We cannot do more than notice this at present. It shows, however, that thinkers have recognized the need for such discrimination; and that, in studying this mysterious subject, the eye has to be kept on the "manifestations" of the Spirit's working, in order to form a correct judgment as to the bearing thereof.

In opposing our plea for a personal "Holy Spirit," our critic logically commits himself to the idea that all operations of the "Spirit of God" are directed by the Father himself; said "Spirit" being an effluence from his Person. But the evidence already adduced by us of angels being made God's representatives on earth, with authority to speak and act as God (Exo. 3:1-15; 23:20), besides the Pauline teaching in 1.Cor. chap. 12, completely nullifies such contention. We are also informed that "The angels are all ministering spirits sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation" (Heb. 1:14). They, of course, are beings not only created and sustained by the "Spirit of God," but their duty is to go forth as spirit messengers or media to do service for God—each is a "holy spirit."

In 2 Cor. 3:17, after discussing various phases of Spirit manifestation in the foregoing verses, Paul concludes: "Now the Lord is that Spirit: and where the Spirit of the Lord is there is liberty."

At the time that Paul wrote these words Jesus Christ was glorified, at the Father's right hand; but while he was on earth striving for that position, he was "filled with the Spirit of God," and so was "Comforter" or "Helper" (Paraclete) to his disciples. Personally, he was going away to leave them, but promised to send them "another Paraclete" or Comforter," who could not come until Jesus had departed.

On this point, Kitto says: "Comforter (Paracletus). The word thus rendered is applied to Christ in 1 John 2:1. Indeed, in that famous passage in which Christ promises the Holy Spirit as a paraclete to his sorrowing disciples, he takes the title himself: 'I will send you another paraclete' (John 14:16), implying that he himself was one, and that on his departure he would send another. The question then is, In what sense does Christ denominate himself and the Spirit sent from him and the Father, paraclete ? Origen explains the term where it is applied to the Holy Spirit, by 'Consolator,' while in 1 John 2:1,he adopts the signification of 'Deprecator.' Others would translate it 'teacher.' But as both of these renderings are open to serious objections, the balance is in favor of a third sense, which is that of 'assistant,' 'helper,' 'advocate' (intercessor). This view is supported by Rom. 8:26 and, which is still more to the purpose, is appropriated by all the passages in the New Testament where the word occurs. The Authorized Version renders the word by 'advocate' in 1 John 2:1, but, in other places (John 14:16, 26; 15:26; 16:7) by 'comforter.' How much better, however, the more extensive term 'helper' (including 'teacher,' 'monitor,' 'advocate') agrees with these passages than the narrow term comforter may be shown by a single instance. Jesus says to his disciples, 'I will send you another paraclete' (John 14:16), implying that he himself had been such to them. But he had not been in any distinguished sense a 'comforter' or 'consoler,' because, having him present with them, they had not mourned (Matt. 9:15). But he had been eminently a helper, in the extensive sense which has been indicated; and such as he had been to them—to teach, to guide, and to uphold, the Holy Spirit would become to them after his removal."

Kitto here makes some very valuable comments bearing on the nature of the Paraclete, the object, and also the time of his coming. He very neatly and clearly points out that Jesus in using the phrase "another Paraclete" teaches by implication that he had been himself their "Paraclete" or "Helper" in the past, and would be while he remained; but, on leaving, would send another to take his place: "I will not leave you comfortless" (John 14:18). No such interval as would be required to accomodate our critic's theory—that the New Testament is the "Paraclete"—is possible here—a century at least intervened between Christ's ascension to the Father, and the appearance of the first New Testament: but apparently, the "Holy Spirit" came, in the sense promised, a few days thereafter: "Jesus charged the apostles not to depart from Jerusalem, but to wait for the promise of the Father, which, said he, ye have heard of me: for indeed John baptized with water: but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Spirit not many days hence" (Acts 1:4). "And when the day of Pentecost was now come, they were all together in one place. And suddenly there came from heaven a sound as of the rushing of a mighty wind, and it filled the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them tongues parting asunder like as fire; and it sat upon each one of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Spirit, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance" (Acts 2:14).

The baptismal formula—"Baptizing into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit" (Matt. 28:19), is very suggestive. The Father and the Son are real "persons"; and it seems reasonable to think that the Holy Spirit, joined with them in this solemn form of induction into the church of Christ, is also a person, and not an abstraction—a mere power or influence. We are not baptized into the name of power or influence but into the name of the "Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit"—three personal agents, we contend. But if the third agent be impersonal—an "effluence which proceedeth from the Father," and with which the Son is "filled," why name it at all, seeing that it is fully represented in the Father and the Son, being common to both ?

The form of words used in the apostolical benediction (2 Cor. 13:13) strengthens this plea—the Holy Spirit (as a person apparently) is associated in the same way with the Father and the Son, thus: "The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Spirit be with you all." In this uniting of the three there is the recognition of the distinct personality of each, in the separate gift which is appropriated to each; besides, how could an impersonal "power or influence" hold "communion" with the believers ? Such communion however, would be most natural were a personal Spirit, as representative of the Faher and Son, placed over the Christian Church corresponding with the "angel" appointed by Jehovah over his people in the previous dispensation, to which we called attention in "The Student" of April, page 58.

Before our critic can accept this line of thought, however, his mind will have to be cleared of a lot of impedimenta which is now in possession of it, and which, judging from his free use of the exclamation mark, he considers very important.

He asks, "Has the Editor, or has any one since the promise of the Comforter was given, heard the Spirit speak ? I think not and have much doubt if he would push his argument to some of its logical conclusions." It seems to us that this is fairly met by Acts 13:2: "As they ministered to the Lord, and fasted, the Holy Spirit said, Separate me Barnabas and Saul for the work whereunto I have called them." See also Acts 16:16; 20:28; 21:11; 15:28.

These passages and many similar ones furnish evidence which most professing Christians will accept, who are not entirely given over to materialism. It is clear that the Apostles and the churches of their day held the belief in a personal "Holy Spirit," to whom their interests had been intrusted in the absence of their Lord and Savior; and it is quite appropriate that the three names—Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, should join in the baptismal formula, notwithstanding that the third is an appointee. Regarding the doubt expressed by our critic, we wish to assure him that our desire at all times to "push our arguments to their logical" conclusion, that truth alone may prevail; but the less we talk about our "logic," and our "grammar," the better.

ARE WE PREPARED TO MEET THE MASTER ?

"But as ye which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation" (1 Pet. 1:15).

Do we attain to this standard of perfection ? I fear most of us would fall far short under God's inscrutable examination. Paul was most emphatic in his exhortation to his brethren; he was continually urging them to be prepared for the coming of the Lord: we have much more reason for the same attitude. We have seen so many of the prophecies fulfilled that had not materialized in his day: and we are now positively certain that the end is at hand and that Christ may appear to his saints at any moment. Do we thoroughly realize this fact ? Are we practicing all the virtues mentioned in 2 Pet. 1; because it is absolutely necessary if we are to make our calling and election sure. What a fearful thing if we should fail in this ! Beloved, there is much food for thought in these things.

The times that we are living in now are trying God's people and sifting them out as it were. There are so many wrong channels at present that we can easily and unsuspectingly drift into. For instance, the Red Cross. Many of our people, I believe, are uncertain about the merits of this organization; but this question should be clear to us all. Does it belong to the church of God or to the world ? Jesus, speaking of his disciples, said: "They are not of the world, even as I am not of the world" (John 17:16). Therefore if we are to be his followers we must not participate in things of the world; and anything that does not belong to the church of God is naturally of the world.

Then, again, there are Liberty Bonds, and many other things that look perfectly good and harmless. It is these harmless looking things that we should be extra cautious about. Peter tells us. "Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake, whether it be the king as supreme: or unto governers, or unto them that are sent by him for the punishment of evildoers and for the praise of them that do well" (1 Pet. 2: 13, 14). This Scripture may easily be misapplied. To submit oneself to anything is to do something under compulsion: therefore, if you are compelled to buy Liberty Bonds or subscribe to the Red Cross, it is scriptural that you should do so; but bear in mind. only in case of compulsion. If we are not forced into these things we should abstain from them.

Prominent actions we can easily guard against if we take care; but it is those trifling things (or at least the things that appear trifling) which are most dangerous. Jesus said: "And take heed to yourselves lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares" (Luke 21:34). "The cares of this life" —what harm is there in these insignificant things ? Beloved, they are our greatest danger, because being small and apparently unimportant we do not pay them sufficient attention. We can so easily let the business or pleasure of this life get too great a hold on us, that we are drifting away before we realize it. And even if we succeed in always keeping Christ and his kingdom the uppermost thought of our mind, does the spirit of our text obtain with us ? "Be ye holy in all manner of conversation." How much that means, and what a broad statement it is ! Can we look into our own hearts and find ourselves in this condition ? These are very serious thoughts, for we are so prone to pass over the little cares of life which detract from our spiritual uplift simply because they are little.

Paul said, "Let no man deceive you with vain words" (Eph. 5:6). How easily we can be led astray by commendation from the brethren. We are always willing to hear our good points extolled, but we shun a just rebuke, which shows up our human frailty. Paul, after exhorting the brethren in his first epistle to the Thessalonians, says, "Abstain from all appearance of evil" (1 Thess. 5:22). This is very far reaching. We are not only commanded to be "holy in our conversation," but when we succeed in living close to God, we must do nothing which will have an evil appearance even if we are entirely free from any evil thoughts. How careful we ought to be, in everything we say and do. Remember the Lord's injunction: "Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven" (Matt. 5:16). And Paul says: "That ye may be blameless and harmless the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world" (Phil. 2:15).

Beloved, if we are to fulfill these Scriptures we must not only act in accordance with these commands, but also give no cause for evil thoughts to arise in others. Truly a Christian's life is full of pitfalls, and it behoves us to keep in mind constantly Christ's words, "And what I say unto you, I say unto all, Watch" (Mark 13:37). Above all, let us watch ourselves; for only by a close scrutiny of our own hearts can we hope to keep ourselves undefiled from the world and ready for the Master's use when he comes.

A. E. Griffiths.

THE DECEITFUL BALANCE

A false balance is abomination to the Lord (Prov. 11:1). Webster gives as one of the definitions of balance an impartial state of the mind in deliberating. Deceitful he defines thus, "Tending to mislead." Thus I take it, a deceitful balance as applied to the system of Bible truth would be the unbalancing of the scales of truth, destroying the impartial state of the mind in regard to it.

Let us look at some of the ways in which God's scales may be thus overbalanced, making of them false balances, which is abomination to the Lord. God's word outlines a system of truth which must be understood and affectionately believed and obeyed; the doing of which will bring eternal life to the doer if he continues in the faith till the Lord comes. This system of truth is denominated "the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 8:12). We can truly say all these things are centered in Christ, the Son of God. He (Christ) shall save his people from their sins (Matt. 1:21). The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David (Luke 1:32, 33). There is none other name under heaven whereby we must be saved (Acts 4:12). And the Lord shall be King over all the earth (Zech. 14:9). Man that is in honor and understandeth not (system of saving truth) is like the beasts that perish (Psa. 49:20). The soul that sinneth it shall die (Ezek. 18:4). He that heareth (accepts) my (Christ's) word has passed from death unto life (John 5:24). I give unto them eternal life (John 10:28). This life is still hid with Christ to be given at his appearing (Col. 3:3, 4).

From these Scriptures we see that all things of the truth, forgiveness of sin, eternal life, rulership, etc., are comprehended in "the name" of Jesus Anointed; and the right dividing of the word of truth clusters around the holy name forming a true balance in which alone is safety. If one takes out of this system a part of truth—say the return of Israel, the reign of Christ upon the earth, the coming of the King— and continually teaches the rest of the truth, will that save him ? No; because if he does not receive the truth that his eternal life is still with Christ, but believes and teaches that he has it already, inherent in himself; that he will never die, but pass from earth instantly into heaven and stand in the presence of God; does not this nullify and make void the truth he has ? Is not the balance in which he is weighing the truth deceitful, one scale being empty ? Supposing one believes and teaches all the system of truth—as a system—but still says the natural traits of a man, if he is loving, kind, doing good to his neighbor, will outweigh all else: are not the scales made void and false ?

Another may group together all parts of this system of truth; and yet teach a thing destructive of all truth, namely, that as a man thinks so is he. If he "feels" that he is right, that makes it right unto him, even though he comprehends not the "good news of the kingdom of God." What a complete upsetting of God's balance is this ! The natural man cannot receive the things of God, for they are spiritually discerned through the words of the spirit, the written word of God (1 Cor. 2:14; 2 Tim. 3:15).

Perhaps the most unequal balancing of the scales of truth, and that which takes away the life from the faith (doctrine), is what James calls "faith without works" (Jas. 2:26). If a brother or sister be destitute and one professing the faith says, "Be ye warmed and filled," giving only words, James asks the question, "What does that man's faith profit him ? and answers it thus: The doctrine to that man is just as empty of salvation as his words to the destitute are of warmth and nourishment. To very few in the church of God can these words of James be applied. From the days of the apostles to the present time the body of Christ has been peculiar in that they have lovingly and liberally ministered to the poor saints (Acts 4:32, 34; 11:29, 30). But there is also a right balancing of God's scales in things spiritual. As the life that now is is but as a watch in the night compared to eternal life, so is the meat that perisheth compared to the bread of life.

Do we, as brethren, always give of this bread to the hungry brother ? "How oft shall my brother sin and I forgive him ?" still seems to be a question, the answer to which some of us may have "let slip." Brethren, if any of you do err from the truth, and you turn him (again) to righteousness, you shall shine as the stars forever and ever (Jas. 5:19; Dan. 12:3). On one side love, mercy, truth; on the other, eternal life. "Forgive us our sins as we forgive those who sin against us." On one side, our sins taken away, if we put out of our heart our brother's sin against us. These things are God's even balances. How does God forgive our sins ? Does he continually dangle them before our eyes, then keep us doubtful, sad and sorrowful ? Listen to his own answer: Your sins shall not be mentioned to you (Ezek. 18: 22). "Thou hast cast all my sin behind thy back" (Isa. 38:17). "Thou wilt cast all their sins into the depths of the sea" (Micah 7:19). On one side repentance, sorrow, confession; on the other, complete blotting out of sins. These are God's ways. Would we be workers together with God ? Then must we work in his way. "A just weight and balance are the Lord's" (Prov. 16:11).

PROPHECY RIGHT ON OUR HEELS

In 1866, Rev. M. Baxter, founder of The Christian Herald, published a book on the "Forty Future Wonders" predicted in Daniel and Revelation, and in accord with that book of a half century ago so much of the biblical prophecy is fulfilled in our times that it is mighty interesting.

The First Wonder, which is to come off between the years 1906 and 1919 is of European wars and revolutions. European convulsions will extend from France to the Rhine and cause a political earthquake so mighty and so great "as was not since men were upon the earth" (Rev. 16).

The Second Wonder is Revelation's "drying up of the Euphrates," or the Turco-Mohammedan Empire, between the years 1917 and 1919.

Third Wonder, 1917 to 1919: Formation of the ten-kingdom confederacy by division of all countries of Caesar's original Roman empire. This resulting from a victorious war of France against Germany, or a revolution in Germany (Dan. 2 to 8).

Jerusalem is to be restored and the temple rebuilt in 1922 to 1929.

After the great wars and revolutions, somewhere between 1925 and 1927, a black famine; and between January 1927 and May 1928, widespread, terrible pestilence.

Remember, it is not Rev. Baxter prophesying. He is merely scientifically discovering the probable dates of the biblical predictions' fulfilment. Considering what is happening and likely to happen, you have to feel interested in this old book by the reverend gentleman.—Editorial from the Terre Haute Post. Selected by Sister Amy Weaver.

EDITORIAL

At the Eighth Annual Meeting of the Directors of The Restitution which was held the first of the year, it was proposed that in view of the continued increase in the cost of all commodities affecting the publication of the paper, the subscription price should be proportionately increased to meet the increased cost of publication. While all were reluctant to advance the cost of The Restitution, the motion was finally proposed and carried. Therefore until further notice the subscription price of The Restitution in the United States will be $2.00 per year; in Canada and other countries $2.50. As we look forward to the installment of a press soon, we think the advance in the price of the paper will only be temporary. In cases where there is not the ability to pay the advanced cost of The Restitution, provision for them will be duly made; and, as heretofore, the poor will be supplied through the Helping Fund.

CHRIST'S MESSAGE TO THE SARDIAN CHURCH

"And unto the angel of the church in Sardis write: These things saith he that hath the seven spirits of God, and the seven stars: I know thy works, that thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead. Be watchful, and strengthen the things which remain, that are ready to die: for I have not found thy works perfect before God. Remember therefore how thou hast received and heard, and hold fast, and repent. If therefore thou shalt not watch, I will come on thee as a thief, and thou shalt not know what hour I shall come upon thee. Thou hast a few names even in Sardis which have not defiled their garments; and they shall walk with me in white: for they are worthy. He that overcometh, the same shall be clothed in white raiment; and I will not blot out his name out of the book of life, but I will confess his name before my Father, and before his angels. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the spirit saith unto the churches" (Rev. 3:1-6).

I. Christ's Fulness Versus the Emptiness of the Church

1. By the seven spirits and seven stars is meant that Christ has "the spirit without measure," and absolute power over the eldership of the church (vs. 1; Matt. 7:11; Jas. 4:3).

II. Things in the Church which Christ Commends

1. How they "received and heard" the truth at the first. This may mean:

(a) The subject matter of the gospel (Col. 2:6; 2 Tim. 1:13, 14); or

(b) Their hearty reception of it (1 Thess. 1:5-10; Gal. 4:13-15; 2 Pet. 1:9).

2. "A few names in Sardis" are commended because their garments were unspotted by the world (vs. 4; Jas. 2:27; Gen. 18:25; 2 Pet. 2:6-9; 1 Kings 14:13).

3. Garments of white are easily soiled; the garments of grace are easily corrupted (vs. 4; Isa. 61:10; Gal. 3:27; Eph. 5:27; Jas. 3:6; 2 Pet. 2:20; 2 Cor. 7:1; Rev. 19:8).

4. "White" as used in this connection means worthiness: "They are worthy" (vs. 4; Matt. 10:10; 22:8; Luke 20:35; 21:31; 2 Thess. 1:5, 11; Rev. 16:6; Rom. 1:32; 6:23).

III. Things in the Church which Christ Condemns

1. They had a "name" or reputation of being alive (spiritually), but were, in the judgment of him who has "the seven spirits and the seven stars," dead! (1 Tim. 5:6; Matt. 8:22; Luke 15:24; Rom. 6:13; 11:15; Eph. 2:1; Heb. 6:1; 9:14; Jas. 2).

2. Just a "few names in Sardis," a remnant, and they were so "weak and sickly" they were "ready to die" (vss. 2, 4; 1 Cor. 11:30; Psa. 51:12, 13; Ezek. 34:4).

3. Their works were not "perfect (complete) before God" (vs. 2; Eph. 2:10; Matt. 3:15; Rom. 13:8, Rev. 11:10).

IV. The Promise

1. "White raiment:" immortality with which the saints are "clothed upon" at the return of Christ (1) (vs. 5; 1 Pet. 1:4; Rev. 21:27; 2 Cor. 5; Matt. 13:43).

2. "I will not blot out his name." Observe concerning the "book of life" that

(a) Some men are not written in the book (Rev. 13:8; 17:8; 20:12, 15).

(b) Some are written in the book (Esther 6:1-3; Mal. 3:17; 2 Cor. 3:3; Dan. 12:1; Luke 10:20; Phil. 4:3; Heb. 12:22; Rev. 21:27).

(c) Some who are written in the book are afterwards blotted out on account of sin (Psa. 51:1; Acts 3:19; Deut2 .9:20; Ex. 32:32, 33; Psa. 69:28; Rev.22:19).

---

(1) It is important to notice and make plain in presentation that the "white raiment" of this promise is immortality whereas the "few names in Sardis" were already in the mortal state, walking in undefiled garments. This explanation, which is scriptural and logical, avoids all seeming redundancy in the text.

COMMUNICATION

Dear Brethren:

I have a little package of over one hundred letters which I keep by themselves in my desk. I read them all and answered all of them over a year ago and laid them away. I have never felt that I could take them out of the desk until tonight. I had a longing to read them again. I have read many of them, and each letter I have laid down with tears in my eyes and a prayer that God would bless the writer and let none go away from our Lord or doubt his lovingkindness: but be ever watching with joy for his coming for his saints. I just put down the last letter I read and felt that I must write to you once more.

I have said over and over again to myself, how good God's people are. I wonder that some little wrong doing can ever take our eyes off the perfect body of Christ. But we are still in the flesh, and the things that we would not we do, and this is what causes us sorrow. I said "perfect body," not in ourselves, but in Christ. You know what the apostle says, "Present you blameless before God." That is, God sees the righteousness of Christ covering us; and so ought we to look upon every member of the body seeing in it only our Lord's image.

I have been trying tonight to remember what I have written in all these years for The Restitution. I wonder if I have ever written anything that was harsh or unkind or grieved any of God's little ones. If I have I am very sorry. Brethren, there is no doubt but the Lord is at the door. How necessary that we get ready to meet him. I think the Lord will come for us next fall, perhaps before. Jesus is our passover, and his blood was shed for us at the passover time. He was the anti-typical wave sheaf, the first fruits from the grave, and he was glorified on the fiftieth day—the day of Pentecost. Now the fiftieth year was a year of jubilee and restitution. All slaves were set free, and all lands restored to the original owners. this jubilee was ushered in by the blowing of trumpets. If this was typical, why may we not look for him to come at the jubilee time, as he did at the passover and the day of Pentecost? He is the great restorer of all we have lost, and he is the one who is to free us from the bonds of death.

I have a little Jewish paper which some one sends to me (I do not know who sends it), but I want to tell you some things which the Jews said when they heard of the possession of Jerusalem by the British, which I read in this paper. Perhaps you have not all read it. Here are some of them: These were spoken in Philadelphia, "The first real joy of Chanukah" (I think this is a Jewish festival commemorating the victory of Judas Maccabee over the Greeks in 165 B. C.). Mushyiachizeiten: the time of the Messiah. Amen. The Messiah is coming soon. Jerusalem is fallen that we may rise, never to fall again. Next year in Jerusalem we are coming to the coming of the Messiah in Jerusalem."

Are not these things very significant? How much more do we rejoice who are to meet our Lord for whom we have waited so long!

Dear brethren, let us lift up our heads and rejoice, knowing that our redemption is nigh. As I read these letters tonight I wonder if our great enemy had overtaken and claimed any of the writers. None shall go before them who are asleep. God has assured us of this that we might not be afraid he would forget us. Some of the names of the writers are familiar to me through The Restitution; many of them I never saw before. I thought as I read them, "They are all written in the Lamb's book of life; and I hope my name is among them."

It is now eleven o'clock. You know I live all alone. I am not exactly afraid, but I do not like to wake up in the night and think I am all alone in the house. So I read or write until I think I am tired enough to sleep. Was there ever a people like the little band that the world knows not? Chidren of God, brethren of Christ, members of one household. How I do rejoice here alone tonight that God in his infinite mercy has called me to be one among them, and that Jesus has made a way whereby we may come. Brethren, we do not speak to one another as often and as much as we should, of these things. Exhort one another so much the more as you see the day of Christ's coming approaching. May God bless you all, dear brethren.

Your sister in the Anointed One,

Flora A. Wood.

PREPARATION FOR THE LORD'S COMING

Lesson at Sister's Meeting, Jan. 17, 1918

At the beginning of a new year we usually take a retrospective view of what we have done during the past year and make resolves for the coming year. I have felt that I have done very little in the Master's service, and yet I hope that the work that has seemed to be allotted to me will add some stars to my crown.

I often think of what Sister Neil-Jeffrey said once, that unless what was allotted to us was done cheerfully and willingly, we would lose all the blessings that would otherwise come to us. So let us do cheerfully whatever our hands find to do.

I have been thinking of late, if during the coming year we should hear the cry, "Behold, the bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him," would we be among the wise virgins? Have we our lamps trimmed and burning, and are we letting our light shine to the glory of God? These are serious questions, but it is time we aroused ourselves and bent every energy to make our calling and election sure.

Jesus said, "If ye love me, keep my commandments." I am sure we all love him; but are we sure we keep his commandments? Jesus also says, "Love your enemies; bless them that curse you; do good to them that hate you; and pray for them that despitefully use and persecute you." Why? "That ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven" (Matt. 5:44, 45). He also says, "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect" (Matt. 5:48).

These are high standards, dear sisters, and are surely tests of our faith, because by so doing we must humble ourselves; and I think that is one of the hardest lessons to learn. We must humble ourselves under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt us in due season, for he resisteth the proud, but giveth grace to the humble (1 Pet. 5:5, 6).

We have some hard lessons to learn and often are obliged to pass through severe trials in order to bring us to a position where we can feel that we are really ready to meet the bridegroom when he calls. Although the road is often beset with trials and difficulties which at times almost overwhelm us, yet if we can only look beyond, and take a glimpse of what is in store for us at the end of the journey, it surely will fill us with fresh strength and courage to press on to the marriage of the Lamb. Think of becoming the bride of Christ! In this life we always see a bride and bridegroom full of love and joy and happiness, ready to start out on life's journey, with never a thought that anything can ever happen to mar their happiness. But how quickly the trials begin in one form or another, until often they lead to the divorce courts and a separation takes place. Not so if we are found worthy to become the bride of Christ. "Blessed are they which are called to the marriage supper of the Lamb" (Rev. 19:9). Then our joy will be complete in him. We will sit at his right hand and see his approving smile and hear the welcome plaudit, "Come ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." "Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him."

Never before in the history of the world has the coming of the bridegroom seemed so imminent; and while we know neither the day nor the hour, it behoves us to be on tip-toe of expectation, with oil in our lamps, that we may be among the wise virgins and enter into that rest prepared for the people of God. Let us resolve, dear sisters, to be among that happy number, who have their lamps ready, that we may enter in whenever the cry greets our ears.

Mattie Tomlinson.

Daily Thought

Time was when a Christian used to apologize for being happy. But the day has always been when he ought to apologize for being miserable. —Drummond.

IS REV. 20:5 SPURIOUS?

"In Rev. 20:5 the words, 'But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished,' are spurious. They are not found in the oldest and most reliable Greek manuscripts, the Siniatic, Vatican Nos. 1209 and 1160, nor the Syriac manuscript. We must remember that many passages found in the modern copies are additions which do not properly belong to the Bible. Since commanded not to add to the word of God, it is our duty to repudiate such additions as soon as their spurious character is established. The words indicated probably crept into the text by accident, in the fifth century; for no manuscript of earlier date (either Greek or Syriac) contains this clause. It was probably at first merely a marginal comment made by a reader, expressive of his thought upon the text, and copied into the body of the text by some subsequent transcriber who failed to distinguish between the text and the comment" (Plan of the Ages, Vol. 1, pages 288, 289, note).

The statement that there are "many passages" in "modern copies" of the Bible which do not "properly belong" in the inspired record is a claim similar to that put forth by that modern phase of infidelity known as the "Higher Criticism." The tendency of all such statements is to cast suspicion upon the Word, and weaken faith in the Bible as an unerring guide.

It is necessary to impeach this witness, else the fable of a future probation for the dead is revealed. But there is no authority for discrediting the inspiration of the text, unless it be the statement of the author of the book from which the preceding extract is taken; and this is hardly sufficient. The English edition of the Revised Version makes no reference to this text as being "not found" in ancient Greek manuscripts. The American Revised Version, which is admitted by the ripest scholars in the land to be the best translation of the Holy Scriptures extant, does not give the slightest hint that a part of the text is omitted in the "most reliable Greek manuscript." Rotherham's translation, another excellent work, though noting elsewhere "doubtful" rendering, says nothing about this text being spurious. The Interlinear translation also puts this text on the same basis as other portions of the Holy Scriptures. It is found in Young's translation also, without any hint of its being some "marginal comment." Sawyer's translation contains it, also the Twentieth Century New Testament. In the translation from the Greek text of Von Tischendorf it is found unquestioned. The Emphatic Diaglott based on Griesbach's text gives this verse, and in foot note says: "These words ('the rest of the dead lived not again till the thousand years were finished') were probably omitted by oversight in Vatican manuscript (No. 1160) as they are found in A. B. C., though not in the Syriac." By "A" is meant Codex Alexandrinus; by "B," Codex Vaticanus, No. 2066, of the seventh or eighth century; by "C," Codex Ephraemi Rescriptus. Finally, the best Greek text, that of Westcott and Hort, contains the passage, and neither have the Revised Versions nor any of the critics, so far as we know, even questioned it. The revisers adopted for their revision the text "for which the evidence is decidedly preponderating," and when that differed from the Greek text "from which the Authorized Version was made," the rule was that "the alteration be expressed in the margin." (See Preface to Revised New Testament, Division II, Paragraph 4). But there is not even an inclination of doubt over Rev. 20:5.

Neither Drs. Adam Clark nor Bliss, in their comments on this Scripture offers any objection to its genuineness. They had access to these Greek manuscripts, and had some opportunity to know if these words were only a "marginal comment" which got mixed in accidently. All these, and scores of other good scholars, who have had opportunity for the most extended research, pronounce the text genuine. The clause in question is considered spurious only by those who have a doctrine to prove which the text condemns.—Geo. B. Thompson.

THE PROMISES OF GOD

Dear Brother:

What general promise is given to the overcomer? He that overcometh shall inherit all things, and I will be his God, and he shall be my son (Rev. 21:7). What is it to overcome? To conquer, to be victorious (Webster). What must be overcome to realize the promises to the overcomer? Be not over come of evil, but overcome evil with good (Rom. 12:2). Whatsoever is born of God overcometh the world (John 5:4).

What is meant by overcoming the world? Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin (1 John 3:9). What then must we exercise in order to claim the promise of inheriting all things? Godliness is profitable unto all things, having promise of the life that now is, and of that which is to come (1 Tim. 4:8). Who alone can overcome? Who is he that overcometh the world but he that believeth that Jesus is the Son of God (1 John 5:5)? By what means are we enabled to overcome? This is the victory that overcometh the world, even our faith (1 John 5:4). Who gives us strength to overcome, and through whom is it bestowed? But thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ (1 Cor. 15:57). In all these things we are more than conquerors through him that loved us (Rom. 8:37).

What is one important purpose of the promises given in the Bible? Whereby through the knowledge of God, and of Jesus our Lord, are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises, that by these ye might be partakers of the divine natnure, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust (2 Pet. 1:2, 4). What is one of the greatest promises given to the overcomer? And this is the promise that he hath promised us, even eternal life (1 John 2:25).

Name some of the precious things promised to the overcomer? He shall eat of the tree of life (Rev. 2:7). He shall not be hurt of the second death (vs. 11). He shall eat of the hidden manna, and receive a white stone, and in the stone a new name written which no man knoweth saving he that receiveth it (vs. 17). He shall have power over he nations (v. 26). He shall be clothed in white raiment, and his name shall not be blotted out of the book of life, but shall be confessed before the Father and the angels (Rev. 3:5). He shall be a pillar in the temple of God forever, and Christ will write upon him God's name, and the name of the new Jerusalem, and his own new name (vs. 12). He shall sit with Christ on his throne (vs. 21). He shall receive the crown of life, which the Lord hath promised to them that love him (Jas. 1:12).

Have any of those in the past received the promises? And these all (those fathers of old, Heb. 11) having obtained a good report through faith, received not the promise (Heb. 11:39). When will these promises be realized? Ye have need of patience, that after ye have done the will of God ye might receive the promise. For yet a little while, and he that shall come, will come, and will not tarry (Heb. 10:36, 37).

What manner of person ought we to be as we see the time approaching when the promises are to be realized? Wherefore, beloved, seeing that ye look for such things, be diligent that ye may be found of him in peace, without spot, blameless (2 Pet. 3:14). What will be the condition of those who realize the promises? God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away (Rev. 21:14).—Selected by a Berean.

ISN'T THIS JUST LIKE A BOY?

I wish the summer time was here,
  I wish it was vacation time!
I'm gettin' crazy pretty near
  To get out where trees are and climb
Upon the tippyest top limb,
  An' wrop my legs around an' swing;
And, ah, gee whiz-! I want a swim,
  And want to fish like anything!

I wisht that I could live to be
  As old as old Methuselum!
You bet it wouldn't bother me
  In that case when September come,
I wouldn't have to go to school
  Till I was 'bout a hundred then,
I'd camp right by the swimmin' pool
  An' swim an' swim an' swim again!

A feller's boyhood goes so soon
  He hardly has it till it's gone!
When school takes in until it's June
  The time just seems to be so drawn

Out that each day is a year,
  And each one full of study, too,
Before vacation time is here,
  Before the study time is through.

And then, when the vacation comes
  Each day just comes and slides along!
Each week of playtime fairly hums!
  Vacation's shorter than a song!
An' then you're back again in school,
  An' all your fun is past an' did—
Three months yet till the swimmin' pool!
  Gee, but it's tough to be a kid!

"Try Your Luck!"

This is what a fakir with one of those cheap swindling games of chance said to a young man who stopped to watch the game. This is a very significant phrase, characteristically American in its flavor, dash, and disregard of consequences. "Try your luck" confronts the young man at every turn in life. He can try it by investing his money in one stinker of a cigar and take his chance of the lucky turn of the wheel which will give him two stinkers. He can "try his luck" at spending his money as fast as he earns it and take his chance—almost a dead sure thing—of being buried by charity. Or he can "try his luck" at loafing. drinking, and deviltry, and take his chance on the penitentiary. Or he can "try his luck" at good, honest, hard work, self denial, and manly living, and take the chance—we might say certainty—of being of some use in the world and of not having any hired mourners at his funeral. It is all right to "try your luck," my boy, but try in sensibly and intelligently. Sel. by Brother E. W. Knapp.

Who is Brother E. W. Knapp?

As an introduction I am going to quote a few passages from a letter recently received from our worthy brother:

"My home is in Oregon on a wheat ranch, but am raising cattle also." "Have had the severest drought in forty years, but this is one of the signs of the last days. So is famine. I hope we escape that, and I have a firm faith we shall, as individuals."

"I am glad you have a wife to comfort and cheer you in your journey through life. I am deprived of such help, but I do so long for it." "Hope you may not see death, but be one that will be changed in a moment. The time is so short that I hope I may not taste of death, although I am seventy-four years old. You see I expect the Lord very soon."

Our brother is not seventy-four years old: he has lived seventy-four years, but is not old in any sense. He is full of life and ambition with a well balanced sense of humor, and such men never grow old. Notice the class of articles he has selected for your edification. Isn't he just a great big boy with a heart full of love? We never have seen Brother Knapp, but we know him and we love him. We trust his heart's desire will be granted him, and that he and every other reader of this page, will live to see the King come in his beauty and hear him say, "Come ye blessed of my Father; inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

Receive with meekness the engrafted word	Jas. 1:21.

That Boy of Yours

"A boy should be kept in a barrel and fed through the bung until he is twenty-one years of age."

Thus said Mark Twain.

And of course Mark exaggerated his statement for the sake of humor.

A boy is a boy, always will be a boy until he is a man; cannot help being a boy all the time and everywhere. You cannot put an old head on young shoulders.

An incident:

He comes home from school, drives in the front door like a catapult, raises an Indian war-whoop, throws his books on a chair and his cap into a corner and dives into the depths of a friendly couch.

Whew! And the protests—"Don't!" "Don't yell so!" "Don't crush the cushions!" "Don't come in with such dirty shoes!" "Don't be so careless with you cap!"

Whereat the boy, who has come into the house with heart full of boisterous gladness, grows sullen and savage. He goes out, slamming the door behind him, with a grievance against his home folks.

The effect of that is dangerous on the boy, who cannot be barreled up and fed through a bunghole.

The boy is naturally rough and boisterous. He is built that way. If he is ever to be much of a man he must be loud and full of vitality—with a vent. And the boy prides himself on his roughness. It is his natural method of expression. What are to us his faults are in his eyes virtues—such, for instance, as teasing his sister to show his love for her.

Now what must be the effect of constant scolding and nagging on a boy thus constituted?

Under his jacket are keen sensibilities. Reproof for mere blowing off steam offends him. Constant hostility by his household frets and hurts him to the core. And in order to "get even" he is likely to go wrong.

There is a better way.

It is sometimes difficult, but be gentle with the boy. You can lead him, but cannot drive him—successfully. Drive him and you get sullen obedience and inward rebellion.

Appeal to the boy's manliness. He has a lot of it in him. Trust him and he will gratefully respond.

Utilize his surplus energy by giving him a task or an errand. And be sure to thank him when he does well. That warms his heart.—Sel. by Brother E. W. Knapp.

The Right Spirit

The thing to seek is not the good time, but the spirit which can make good times out of common time, the spirit of good cheer that is the spring in the hills whence laughter runs.—Sel. by Brother E. W. Knapp.

Things Worth Remembering

How much wiser to take action once, than to trust to uncertain time.

Let a man but be as earnest in praying against a temptation, as the tempter is in pressing it, and he need not proceed by a surer method.

There is such a thing as acquiring so great a momentum of faith, hope, and joy as to carry one readily over the hard places of life that are encountered by so many so often.

It must never be forgotten that everywhere and always growth is an invariable and inseparable concomitant of life. To be stationary is to be dead—dead as a mummy or statue.—Sel. by Brother Knapp.

Moral Duty

We live too much in a sort of gray moral twilight. The light needs to be let in so that men may see clearly and discern exactly between those things which are right and cannot be wrong, and those things which are wrong and cannot possibly be made right.

So also is there great necessity for clear conviction as to duty. Those things which it is right for me to do it is my duty to do. It is not a matter about which I have option or may have preference or choice. Duty is a grim word, but it is also a great one, and no man whatever may be his personal predilection can ever attain to real greatness who does not feel the constraint of unescapable obligation. It is a high and final test of men. That man alone is worthy of final approval in the court of public opinion who, knowing his duty, faithfully does it.

Our Weekly Puzzle

"Him that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out; and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is new Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God; and I will write upon him my new name."

Who wrote the above? To whom was it written? Where can it be found?

Answer next week.

Answer to puzzle in last issue:

A "Priest" is a mediator between man and God.

This particular high priest is Jesus Christ, the Son of God.

Mercy and grace is bestowed by God the Father.

This passage can be found in Hebrews 4:15, 16.

Follow Jesus

Since our way is troublesome and obscure, he commands us to mark his footsteps, tread where his feet have stood, and not only invites us forward by the argument of his example, but he hath trodden down much of the difficulty, and made the way easier and fit for our feet.

Half Men, Half Goats

Satyrs are mentioned in Isaiah 13:21 and 34:14, where the prophet predicts the desolation of Babylon. In the passages cited it probably refers to demons of woods and desert places, half men and half goats (see Lev. 17:2; 2 Chron. 11:15).

Fire From a Slab of Ice

Take a smooth, clear, curving piece of ice, one not too thick, and hold it in the rays of the sun so that it will bring the light to a sharp focus just as will a lens in a reading glass. The ice will not last long enough to burn a piece of paper, but if the focus rests on a speck of gun cotton it will cause combustion and a flame will result. Arctic explorers have built fires often with this experiment when matches were absent and flint and rock not handy.

Liberty of tha Lawmakers

Members of both houses of congress have the privilege of freedom of speech and debate in their resepctive houses. That is, only the house itself can call members to account for their utterances in that body. A senater or a representative cannot be prosecuted in the courts for libel or slander on account of any utterances in the house to which he belongs, or for the official publication of it.

Egypt Celebrated for Wheat

Egypt in ancient times was celebrated for the growth of its wheat. The best quality was all bearded. The seven-eared quality was described in Pharaoh's dream (Genesis 12:22).

A PAPER REPRESENTING THE CHURCH OF GOD, AND DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF THE THINGS CONCERNING THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND THE NAME OF JESUS CHRIST" (ACTS 8:12)

VOLUME 70 CLEVELAND, O. MARCH 5, 1918 NUMBER 9

FOR MY SAKE

Selected by Auntie Wince

Three little words, but full of tenderest meaning;
Three little words the heart can scarcely hold;
Three little words, but on their import dwelling,
What wealth of love their syllables unfold!

"'For my sake' cheer the suffering, help the needy;
On earth this was my work; I give it thee.
If thou would'st follow in thy Master's footsteps,
Take up my cross and come and learn of me.

"'For my sake' press with steadfast patience onward,
Although the race be hard, the battle long;
Within my Father's house are many mansions;
There thou shalt rest and join the victor's song.

"And if in coming days the world revile thee,
If 'for my sake' thou suffer pain and loss,
Bear on, faint heart; thy Master went before thee;
They only wear his crown who share his cross."

A SIGN OF HIS COMING

This question is just as interesting now as when the disciples came to Jesus as he sat upon the Mount of Olives, saying, "What shall be the sign of thy coming, and of the end of the world" (Matt. 24:3)? Luke, in his account of the same subject, informs us that certain things must transpire about Jerusalem; that "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled" (Luke 21:24).

The question, then, of supreme interest is: When do the times of the Gentiles end? They are to end. They had a beginning. When? As our Savior in answer to the disciples' questions was talking of the Jewish land and people, Gentile times must be understood in contrast to Jewish times. This being so Gentile times began when Jewish times ended. The God of heaven sent a message by the prophet Ezekiel to the last king of Judah that he would permit the king of Babylon to overthrow his kingdom on account of his wickedness, and it would be no more "until he come, whose right it is" (Ezek. 21:25-27). Here, so to speak, God handed over the government of this world to the Gentiles, by the subversion of his own typical kingdom for a long period of time, prophetically "seven times." This we say on the authority of Lev. 26:18, 21, 24, 28. According to the generally accepted method of reckoning prophetic time, a time is three hundred and sixty days, representing three hundred and sixty years, on the principle of a day for a year (Ezek. 4:6; Numb. 14:34). Therefore seven times represent two thousand five hundred and twenty years.

On a careful reading of Lev. 26 we find that God promised a blessing for obedience and a curse for disobedience for a period of time, and then if still disobedient, he would punish them yet seven times more. And such as been their history. With a good king they were blessed, and with one that followed not the Lord they were chastened. Then with the overthrow of their kingdom their long punishment of seven times began.

But their overthrow did not take place at one time; rather it took place in stages which date from 606 B. C., when Daniel and his companions were taken captive, to 587 B. C., when Jerusalem was laid waste and the temple burnt. During the interval between these two dates the kingdom of Judah was passing under the condemnation pronounced upon them by the prophet Jeremiah: "And the Lord said, I will remove Judah also out of my sight as I have removed Israel, and I will cast off the city of Jerusalem which I have chosen" (2 Kings 23:27). This being so we may reasonably look for a corresponding period of returning favor. And what do we find? The above prophecy was given 623 B. C. (although not in the time previously given), and has a significant ending. Two thousand five hundred and twenty years from 623 B. C. takes us to the year 1879 A. D. This was the year of the Zionist movement when the then president of the society Dr. Heizel, said that was the first time since the dispersion the Jewish nation showed signs of national life. From 604 B. C. the beginning of the seventy years' captivity brings us to 1914 A. D., the year of the beginning of the great war, which to date has been the cause of bringing freedom to three million Jews in Russia, and the wresting of the city of Jerusalem from the hand of the Turk.

Another important date is 598 B. C., when king Jehoiachim surrendered to Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, and the great mass of the people were taken captive; and we read "All the mighty men of valor . . . . none remained, save the poorest sort of the people of the land" (2Kings 24: 14). Figuring from this date we reach the year 1922. What that year may make manifest we do not know. No doubt it will be another important stage in the emancipation of the people of God.

We will now consider our final date, 587 B. C. when was fulfilled the prophecy of Ezekiel concerning Zedekiah the last king of Judah: "And thou profane wicked prince of Israel, whose day is come, when iniquity shall have an end. Thus saith the Lord God, Remove the diadem, and take off the crown; this shall not be the same: exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high. I will overturn, overturn, overturn it and it shall be no more, until he comes whose right it is, and I will give it him" (Ezek. 21:25-27). As this was the last captivity date it is the last year from which we can reckon the long period of seven times; and stretching our measuring line from that date we reach the advance date of 1934. We have sound reasons for concluding that that time will witness the full return of God's favor to his people; the overthrow of Gentile powers; the establishment of the divine kingdom of Israel under the leadership of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ, whose kingdom will extend until it embraces the whole world.

In endeavoring to indicate the ending of Gentile times, we wish it to be understood that we set no date for the second advent, believing as we do that the exact time is withheld for a wise purpose to encourage watchfulness and stimulate godly living. It is as true now as when spoken by our Savior, "Of that day knoweth no man" (Mark 13:33). But from multiplied evidences we believe his advent near, and desire to be found ready for him and encourage others to do the same. We rejoice to know that the closing of the Gentile times is introductory to "the times of restitution of all things" for which we wait in hope and patience. To the church scattered abroad we say, "Watch ye therefore, and pray always, that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man."

THE LIFE OF SACRIFICE

"Gather my saints together unto me; those that have made a covenant with me by sacrifice" (Psa. 50:4).

Dear Brethren:

I think we who have made this covenant with the Lord will agree that we are living in a great and wonderful age. Even thought the clouds are dark around us, we know that the sun of righteousness will soon arise and shine forth, and dispel all this gloom. With this glorious hope within us, we can rejoice that earth's day of weeping will soon be over. But the world does not rejoice in this glorious hope, for on every hand we see "men's hearts failing them for fear of the things that are coming on the earth." Why? Because they are not ready to meet the Lord. If they were they would be glad and rejoice for joy at the prospects of the coming kingdom which Christ is soon going to establish in the earth. Prophecy is fast being fulfilled and the time of his coming draws near.

The church surely has a glorious hope to look forward to; that of beholding the King in his beauty. What a blessed privilege that we are called to suffer with Christ, that we might reign with him. In Psalms 51:16, 17 we read: "For thou desirest not sacrifice, else would I give it; thou delightest not in burnt offerings. The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit: a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise."

It seems that we should be able to tell those of the true faith by the spirit they manifest. The Bible tells us to try the spirits and see if they are of God. Let us examine the Catholics, because they have been the most cruel people who ever professed to be Chriseians. Are they Christlike? Let us see. Do you think a people who butchered and tortured in every conceivable and unconceivable manner, millions of human beings, is the true church of a broken and contrite heart; the bride of Christ that he is going to present to the Father without spot or wrinkle? It seems to me that a people like this would have their garments so spotted with the blood of martyrs that they could never be recognized in any way as the bride of Christ who had kept her garments unspotted.

We will pass from the harlot to one of her daughters. When I was in Los Angeles the Presbyterians found that their congregation was very small as most of their members were attending the Sunday night theatres and other places of amusement, so they decided to give some inducement to get people to attend church, and they announced through the papers that they would teach dancing in the church and would, commence with the "Fox Trot." Is this Chritslike? Would the dance be any better than the theatre? They are all worldly, and the Bible says, "And be ye not conformed to this world: but be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind" (Rom. 12:2). When we seek after worldly amusements are we not fulfilling the lusts of the flesh?

I recently saw in a Denver paper an announcement of the activities of one of their churches. It said that Mondays would be given to Red Cross work, Thursday evenings to Boy Scouts, and Friday evenings to moving pictures. Are these the kind of activities to have in the church? If the church would spend their evenings in spiritual activities how much better off they would be in the day of judgment. These things are worldly and let the world take care of them. The church should be kept sacred, a place in which to worship the true and living God; but instead we find the church committing fornication with the world. Surely this is Babylon (confusion) and the admonition is "Come out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues." Blessed is he that heeds the admonition.

Brethren, let us remember our consecration to the Lord. Let us walk after the spirit and not after the flesh. "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, longsuffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance" (Gal. 5:22, 23). May we do all things to the glory of God, giving thanks to him in all things.

Let us say with Habakkuk: "Although the fig tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines: the labor of the olive shall fail, and the fields shall yield no meat; the flocks shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls: yet will I rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation" (Hab. 3:17, 18).

HOW TO BECOME A FOLLOWER OF JESUS CHRIST

We read in God's holy word that we must believe the things concerning the kingdom of God to become a disciple of Christ. First we must know the meaning of the word disciple. A great many people get the meaning of the words disciple and apostle confused. The Bible clearly teaches there are but twelve apostles and gives their names. It also teaches that the word disciple means simply a follower or one that does the will of Christ. In order to be a follower of Jesus we must have a guide. What is our guide? Is it just to take for granted some man's word? I say No. Then what is it? Why, the blessed Book is the only book that gives us life in time to come. Let us then follow it. Paul the apostle of Christ says in Eph. 5:1, "Be ye therefore followers of God, as dear children." In Heb. 6:12 we read these words, "That ye be not slothful, but followers of them who through faith and patience inherit the promise."

We are now trying to follow Christ. First, in order to believe something we must hear it. To be able to hear anything we must pay attention to that which is spoken. In Acts 30:31, Philip in hearing the eunuch reading the prophet Isaiah, said unto him, "Uuderstanest thou what thou readest? And he said, how can I except some man should guide me? And he desired Philip that he would come up and sit with him." The eunuch did not understand what he was reading without hearing and having the word taught by Philip. Is it necessary, then, that we hear in order to believe? Belief, says the guide, comes by hearing, and hearing by the word of God.

Now that we have heard the word we must believe. Believe what? The things concerning the kingdom of God. Let us now learn some of these things. We must believe that God is a true God and that he will do exactly what he has said and promised those that are faithful. What has he promised? Read Gen. 13:14-18. He has promised Abraham and his seed after him that land which he saw for an everlasting possession. When? When Christ comes. Who was Abraham? He was one after God's own heart or a disciple. Who are his seed spoken of here? They are the ones which are born after him, those who do the will of the Lord. Now since God has promised Abraham the land, how can Abraham or any other man inherit heaven? In one place we find these words, "The heaven, even the heavens, are the Lord's but the earth hath he given to the children of men." Dan. 2:44: "And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed, and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, (meaning the kingdoms of today) and it shall stand forever." What does this teach us? It teaches that God will set up a kingdom, that it will always exist, that it will not be ruled by the kings of today who are wicked and sinful; and that these kingdoms will be destroyed. A righteous king with kings that are full of error would not work well together; therefore we must have but one king. In a kingdom there is but one king. Of course there are subordinate rulers. Is this not a literal kingdom? Read Isa. 9:6-7. It is to be set up on the earth. Its beauty will fill the whole earth. It will be a righteous kingdom and will stand forever. Is this not good enough for you? One place in the Bible tells how beautiful things will be, that nothing will hurt. The lion will not even hurt the little child when playing with him. Do we believe these things; that Christ himself, will literally set up a kingdom on this earth? If so, let us go on.

The next thing for us to do is to repent. What does the word "repent" mean? It means to turn from the evil way and walk in the righteous way. Isa. 55:6, 7: "Seek ye the Lord while he may be found; call ye upon him while he is near. Let the wicked man forsake his ways, and the unrighteous man his thoughts; and let him return unto the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him, and to our God for he will abundantly pardon." Luke 13:3: "I tell you, Nay; but except you repent, ye shall all likewise perish." Acts 3:19: "Repent ye therefore, and be converted, that your sins may be blotted out; when the times of refreshing shall come from the presence of the Lord."

The most essential part is the last, which is baptism. Leaving this out is impossible to please God. By this act we seal our belief and follow Christ's example. It says if any man try to climb up any other way than by entering in through the door (which is baptism) the same is a thief and a robber. As I said, without this act of baptism it is impossible to please God. We have an example given in Acts 10 1. Cornelius was a devout man, one that feared God with all his house, which gave much alms to the people, and prayed to God always. But, says Peter in Acts 10:47, 48: "Can any man forbid water, that these should not be baptized, which have received the Holy Spirit as well as we? And he commanded them to be baptized." What is meant by baptism? Simply to be immersed or plunged under water (Rom. 6: 4, 5). We are to be buried or planted in likeness of his death, then we shall also be in the likeness of his resurrection. In what form was Christ or anyone today buried? Are we buried three times and face downwards, or are we buried once and face upwards? If we are buried but once and with the face upward, then this is the example to follow when we are baptized.

We hear people say, "I have been baptized and I believe I am all right." It is not what I believe about it, but it is what God says about on the subject. Let us examine Acts 19. Paul found certain disciples and said unto them, "Have ye received the Holy Spirit since ye believed? And they said unto him, We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Spirit." And he said unto them "Unto what were ye baptized?" And they said, "Unto John's baptism. Then said Paul, John verily baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying unto the people, that they should believe on him, that should come after him, that is on Christ Jesus. When they heard this they were baptized in the name of the Lord Jesus." Here the trouble was not in John's baptism, but in the people. When they were baptized they did not understand the gospel and therefore to be scripturally baptized they must be immersed again after knowing the truth. We find in Eph. 4:5 that there is but one Lord, one faith, and one baptism. There are certain things we must believe to be scripturally baptized. We must believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God; that he died and rose again for our justification; that he ascended up to heaven and will come again in the future to set up his everlasting kingdom. In John 14 we find the Christ comforted his disciples with these words. First, where was he when he uttered these words? On the earth. "I go to prepare a place for you" (which means his ascension to heaven). Here are the comforting words. "And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am there ye may be also." Where will he be when he comes again? He is now in heaven and will come to this earth.

If we desire to become a follower of Christ we must, if necessary, leave our dearest friends. These may be our father, mother, husband, wife, sister or brother, and cleave unto him. Christ says if we do not do these things, if necessary, we are not worthy of him. The question now is, Is it necessary to be born of the water (baptism)? If so, cannot we have all worldly things and follow Christ's footsteps, which leads us through baptism? But says one, "I will wait awhile, I am going to enjoy a few of these things that are in the world." But suppose we wait until it is too late. Suppose death should overtake us, or Christ should come and leave us out? What would be our doom? Christ would say these words, "Depart from me; I never knew you." Now that we have been planted in the watery grave, we rise to walk the new life, ready to begin life's journey, ever pressing forward to the high calling ready to hear his words, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joys of thy Lord." Then everything will be made beautiful. Where thorns are growing today we will see roses blooming; where sorrow, sickness, pain, and death, shall be for ever wiped out: where we can sing the song, "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" No wonder Paul says, it cannot enter into men's minds the things which God has prepared for them that love him.

Just one more thought on baptism. In Mark 16:15, 16 we have these words, "And he said unto them, Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned" (or condemned). John 12:48: "He that rejecteth me, and receiveth not my words, hath one that judgeth him: the word that I have spoken, the same shall judge him in the last day." Are you who are out of Christ satisfied to stand before him when he comes without putting on his name? If not, why then cannot you say as the eunuch did to Philip when he understood the word, "See, here is water; what doth hinder me to be baptized? Philip answered him saying, If thou believest with all thine heart, thou mayest. And he said, I believe that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God." They both went down into the water and the eunuch was baptized. Do we want to be saved? If so, let us follow Christ by being baptized. He will lead us in the narrow path that leads to everlasting life.

THE LATTER YEARS

S. H. Thomas

Thank God for the privilege we enjoy of living in the latter days. Without doubt the Lord is coming very soon. A very few years at most; but I do no expect him today, nor tomorrow. A dear sister says, "Why don't you expect him today? I see no reason why he should not come this very day, and I am looking for him every moment." This is a joyful frame of mind, but I will try to explain why I cannot feel that way.

The word has clearly described certain conditions that must prevail when the Lord comes that do not exist today. Turn with me to Ezek. 38th chapter. Here we have one of the clearest and most comprehensive prophecies to be found in the entire word, descriptive of the events leading up to the coming of the Lord. Here we have God's message to Gog, of the land of Magog (Russia) and his allies, including Persia, Ethiopia, Libya, Togarmah, and Gomer (Germany). These nations we are told, will come against the mountains of Israel, a land of unwalled cities, whose people have been brought forth out of the nations and have gotten cattle, and goods, and dwell in their homes safely, without bars or gates. The object of this hostile invasion being "to take a spoil and to take a prey; to turn thine hand upon the desolate places that are now inhabited, and upon the people that are gathered out of the nations, which have gotten cattle and goods in the midst of the land."

At this point enters an opposing force; Sheba, Dedan, and the merchants of Tarshish (Britain), and all the young lions thereof (British colonies) shall say unto thee, Art thou come to take a spoil? Hast thou gathered thy company to take a prey? To carry away silver and gold; to take away cattle and goods; to take a great spoil?"

Now comes the question, When does all this happen? The answer is found in verse 8, "In the latter years." Again in verse 16 we are told positively, "It shall be in the latter days." I understand Ezek. 38 and 39 chapters to be a graphic pen picture of the battle of Armageddon, during which the Lord will come with all his saints around him; and by using fire, brimstone, great hailstones, and a flood of rain, destroys the armies of Gog. They shall fall on the mountains of Israel. Before all this can happen, a part at least of the Jews must return and be in the enjoyment of peace and prosperity. They must be in possession of silver and gold, cattle and goods sufficient to excite the cupidity of Gog and his allies. Germany must then be an ally of Russia. They are enemies now.

It has been suggested that these two chapters of Ezekiel will reach their fulfilment after the coming of the Lord; that soon after he comes the Jews will be regathered, and prospered as peaceful subjects of the kingdom that Christ will have set up; and that sometime during the thousand years these two chapters of Ezekiel will reach their fulfilment. But the word says, "It shall be in the latter days." And as "the latter days," or "latter years," always mean the last days or years of Gentile times, and never any portion of millennial times, this Scripture alone must settle the question with me.

In Zech. 14th chapter. we read of this same gathering of all nations against Jerusalem to battle, and this prophet adds some details not given by Ezekiel: "The city shall be taken, and the women ravished, and the houses rifled, and the half of the city shall go forth into captivity;" and just at this point "The Lord my God shall come, . . . And his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives." And "then shall the Lord go forth and fight against those nations:" Then comes the glorious proclamation, "The Lord shall be King over all the earth," followed by a vivid pen picture of the means our Lord and his saint will employ to bring the nations into subjection to his rule.

The prophet Joel also describes the same event (Joel 3:9-21): "Prepare war; wake up the mighty men. Beat your plowshares into swords: let the weak say I am strong Come up to the valley of Jehoshaphat: there will I sit to judge all the heathen. Multitudes, multitudes, in the valley of decision." At this point the Lord shall roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem, and the heavens and the earth shall shake, but the Lord will be the hope of his people, and the strength of the children of Israel. Then follows a picture of peace in the kingdom which Christ and his saint will set up, after the destruction of Gog and his allies.

But dear ones, let us not grow weary with waiting. Patience is a becoming virtue, events are moving rapidly, and one comforting thought sustains us when courage weakens;When he comes to destroy the hosts of Gog and Gomer, the saints will come with him. Praise ye the Lord! At some previous time they will joyfully hear his summons and go forth to meet him, and he will hide them in his pavillion until the set time comes. Just how long a period must elapse between the going forth of the bride to meet her Lord, and her return with him to the Mount of Olives, no man may know. But no doubt much may be done to fill the prophetic mold during that interval. When I see a lull in this present whirlwind of wars, and a Jewish state established in Palestine, under British protection, then on that very day I will look for the summons to go forth to meet the Lord; and shall entertain this hope every succeeding day until he comes. May God speed the day, is my prayer.

Remarks

During the month of January we have been handicapped in our meeting by the extreme cold. However, some very intereseting and profitable meetings were held while visiting at my old home in Iowa. I held three meeting by request, and the people were so interested they are asking me to come back, and I am now preparing to go back and give them a few meetings. My brother is with me and both of us will visit our aged father. He will soon be eighty-eight years old. We realize that it is but a short time when we will have no earthly father. We are hoping for the great reunion in the future. I wonder if we realize what it means to be worthy of a place in the kingdom, when broken ties are renewed? It is wonderful when we consider it closely. When I think of the many I have met whose asociations have become dear to me whom I cannot hope to meet again in this age, the hope of the kingdom is so much more inviting. May the time soon come when we can enjoy the full fruits of our hopes.

EDITORIAL

We have been gratified lately by noticing that many orders for "Bible Lessons" come from people who do not believe many things which are taught in them. They are being used in Bible classes and other studies by people who are not in the truth themselves. This is very remarkable. As accounting for this unusual thing one correspondent writes: "The lessons are thinking machines. Right or wrong they send thoughts surging through the heads of people; and believing that they are sometimes wrong, as I do, yet I find that even in these points they instantly change a 'dry' and dead Bible study into a meeting of life, discussion, and animation."

February 24th, after a most satisfactory confession of faith, the following were baptized into the name of Jesus Christ: Miss Mildred Tubbs, formerly Catholic-Seventh-day Adventists. Sister Mildred's first introduction to the truth was about three years ago. Inimical influences, however, diverted her attention from it for a time, but the seed of the kingdom had been planted in her good and honest heart, and it began to show itself some time since, and has now moved her to full obedience of the gospel. Another case of interest is Miss Clara Freydi, formerly Lutheran-Methodist. Sister Clara's attention was first directed to the truth by a visit from members of the Megiddo Mission, Rochester, N. Y. They left with her literature on the gospel which was helpful to her, and having been started in the investigation of the truth by this means, she soon perfected her knowledge in the gospel by weekly lessons. These two sisters have begun their obedience in a most excellent understanding of the kingdom; and now we pray God most earnestly to keep them daily and hourly in the way of life until the King comes.

Brethren A. N. Durham, J. H. Pack, and others have written enquiries concerning the draft law. To all such we reply that there seems to be a misunderstanding with many about the law of exemption. Exemption does not apply to religion in any case. That is no ground for exemption. The government claims the right to hold all who are within the draft age for military service of one kind or another. Still it has kindly considered and made provision for all non-combative religious people. There is no use demanding exemption on religious grounds. File with the Local Board The Restitution of May 15th, 1917, marking the article by Brother A. L. Corbaley entitled "The Civil War Resolutions," and ask them to class you as a non-combatant. You will find that your request will be granted immediately. The government will never ask you to do combative service, but they expect you to assist in non-combative work. For this you are held and classed, and are subject to call. Objections to this are futile, as we are all in the war as non-combatants. Thus if you stay at home and you make one thousand dollars a year, if you are single, you must pay the income tax. This makes you a participant in the war as a non-combatant. Everything considered, the arrangement is as good as we can hope for until the King returns.

COMMUNICATION

"They shall make known unto you all things which are done here" (Col. 4:9).

Dear Brother Thomas:

In accordance with your wish to transfer our correspondence to The Restitution, I am writing you through its columns. In answer to your last letter, there is just one question I wish to ask you, and I hope you will answer. You say in regard to the lines of prophecy as given through the yearday time, we are left to uninspired dates as to when these times begin. Now the question with me in this, Why did God give those lines of prophecy, and of what use are they to us, and how are we to know where we are in Gentile time if there is no way to get a beginning for them because man has mixed the time, making deserepencies in their figures?

Yours in a desire for light,

Flora A. Wood.

DEAD HEROES ARE STILL WATCHING

An earnest and touching memorial service was conducted in Parkdale Presbyterian Church on Sunday morning by Rev. Andrew Robertson, for the men from that church who had fallen in action up to the end of 1917. Dr. Robertson said it would have been more fitting that the pastor, Rev. A. L. Geggie, should have preached such a sermon, but owing to the fact that his son had been killed at Passchendaele, it would be hard for him to conduct such a service.

"A memorial service seems to me to be a very private affair, a sort of family affair," said Dr. Robertson. "Forty families here are bound together by the forty vacant seats this morning."

He said the prophets in Old Testament days feared death and had to live by faith, but since the resurrection of Christ, death had lost its sting and had no terror. Those gone before were still interested in their loved ones here and the hopes of earthly relations bound them closer to their dear ones. "Your fortune or your victory here means something to them there and they are watching," he said. "Where in Toronto do you think the progress of the war is watched most eagerly? I believe it is by the boys who used to sit on the corner of Younge and College for the men over here are fighting on old familiar ground to them. So the loved ones, gone, are watching your struggles here, fellow soldiers as it were, on grounds over which they have fought."

Dr. Robertson said the unfinished endeavors of the boys who were gone could only be crowned by the prayer and sacrifices of those at home. The boys at the front yet were dreading that those at home should fail them in this respect. He quoted Gilbert Muray to show what the sentiment was regarding those in the homeland. One soldier had written: "I found the country when I went back to be a very different country from the one I went out to fight for, and very indifferent." Dr. Robertson urged the people for the sake of those who had given their lives, to keep praying and striving for the crowning endeavor of the allied arms.—The Toronto World.

The Clergyman Answered

Editor World: May I be allowed the courtesy of a little space in your columns to comment upon the remarkable utterances of Rev. Dr. Robertson concerning "the dead," as reported in your issue of 31st ult.?

I am myself a strong believer in the Bible, and have, for many years been an earnest student of its pages, but I am glad to be able to testify that God's word does not contain any such contradictory rubbish as that advanced by the learned divine.

The gullibility of some of these ministers is amazing, and the varied tenets they are able to assimilate is indeed astounding.

Paul, the Apostle, admonished that we "prove all things," but where can Dr. Robertson bring forward one particle of proof that dead men are alive, and can see, hear, and actually participate in the events of the war after they have been "killed," as the account states? Certainly not in the Bible, for the Old and New Testaments are both agreed that man can die, does die, and cannot live again apart from resurrection of the dead.

Were I not so seriously deaf, I would gladly challenge Dr. Robertson to open debate. I am, however, quite willing to meet him through the columns of any newspaper or public magazine. I make one stipulation only, whether his argument be from a scientific viewpoint or a Biblical one, and that is, that proof must be absolute, not in any way obtained by inference, or from Biblical or other quotations that are open to more than one legitimate interpretation. I trust you will publish this, so that such a subject of interest and importance in these times, may be fairly faced, and not bolstered up by the "cloth" that a man wears, or the desk that, I am sorry to say, too often deserves the name of "Coward's Castle."

A little incident which actually occurred this New Year's morning, may help relieve the severity of the aforesaid remarks:

A friend and myself were discussing the doctor's words, and we presumed they would apply equally to Saxon or Teuton. We thought of the possibility of Dr. Robertson going to the front (as so many brave ministers have done) and handling a gun. He shoots a German, and says: "I have killed him, but he is not dead." Quick as a flash the prompt retort comes: "What did you kill him for then?" Voices rang with laughter, orthodox and unorthodox joined in; the force of the question was apparent to all.

OVERCOMING

By Grace Lawrence

Dear Brothers and Sisters in Christ:

I will try and write a few thoughts which have been trying to formulate in my mind.

I believe that there are a great many people who call themselves Christians, yet who think that they may go on in almost the same road, just a little straighter perhaps (or what they might be pleased to call straighter) than the worldling. But to my mind he true Christian life lies in an entirely different channel than they of the world. John says, "Love not the world, nor the things in the world. If any one love the world the love of the Father is not in him: because everything in the world the desire of the flesh, and the desire of the eyes, and the pomp of life, is not from the Father, but is from the world. And the world is passing away, and its desire: but he who does the will of God, abides for the age" ((Dia). No half way ground here, is there? "And now dear children, abide in him, so that when he shall appear we may have confidence and not be put to shame by him in his presence. If you know that he is righteous, you know that every one practicing righteousness (or right ways-ness) has been begotten by him." And John says, "He who practices sin is of the enemy."

It does not seem so hard after all when we come to understand the difference in practicing right ways-ness, and practicing sin. But here is another thought: Are we to keep on practicing the right way and not reach some degree of perfection? I can hear some one say, "But does John not say also, 'If we say that we have not sin, we deceive ourselves, and the truth is not in us'"?

I do not make the claim that we can life without making mistakes, at least I am not ready to make such a claim myself; but I do hold that one can, with God's help, keep from doing those thinks which they know to be wrong. And we know that we are not abiding in him when we commit sin, for says John, "Every one who abides in him does not sin."

Now where the hard part comes in for me is to be always sure whether we are on the right side or not. Can we trust to our conscience as a safe guide? No, says one; for Paul was just as conscientious when persecuting the Christians as when following his Master. I will agree with you in the case of him who is of the world (as Paul was at that time); but for those who are constantly seeking the Spirit's guidance, I cannot but feel that they may be sure when spoken to by "the still small voice," though some might rather think, at times, that it is just their imagination. But this can only be when their will is opposed to the Father's.

Oh to what heights we might attain, if we would always heed that voice! For I think that the Master just leads us step by step as we are able to overcome.

And this brings my mind to another thought: When are we to do our overcoming? I really believe that there are some who think that they can just live along, we will say, without really committing what one would call any act of sin, but as to what they might call little faults and which they might acknowledge was hardly proper. At least they would never imagine their Master or Paul would do such a thing, but then we will lay all that aside when we are changed or given immortality.

O brother, O sister, that is not overcoming. I think that our nature must be conformed to his or made like his right here in this life, or we will never experience the change to immortality when he comes. It is only our mortal nature that will undergo a change in that day. The fleshly must give place to the spiritual right here in this life. I am very much afraid that some who expect to be made perfect and like him in that day instead of being as he admonishes, "overcomers, even as I overcame," will hear the words, "Depart from me; I never knew you."

"A narrow way," you say. But is it any more so than the way our Master trod? Did he not overcome everything? Is the prize worth it, my brother, my sister? Yes, or else it is worth nothing, and we had just as well go into he world, and as they say, "have a good time while we can." But I hear someone say we are not under bondage now but "where the spirit of the Lord is, there is freedom." True indeed, and such freedom as only those who have experienced can realize. When we have reached this stage nothing is hard; there is no such thing as sacrifice, for all is for our Master, and our love is so great that anything we may do or may not do, is only a joy to us, for it is as the Master (who ever holds our hand) would have us do.

But I cannot stop without mentioning one more thought on this freedom in Christ. Paul says, "Now brethren, you are invited to freedom: only take care lest this freedom become an occasion for the flesh." Again, "The flesh desires the contrary of the spirit, and the spirit the contrary of the flesh: for these are opposed to each other: but if you be led by spirit you are not under law." No, we need no law but to do God's will, and this we will do if we are led by the spirit. Then, as with John, Favor, mercy and peace from God the Father and from Jesus Christ the Son of the Father, shall be with you in love and truth.

A BAPTISMAL SERVICE

The church of Salem, Ohio, was made to rejoice again on Sunday evening, Feb. 24th, because of the obedience of one of our young people, Wilber Coy. He is a son of our Brother and Sister Coy, and is the fourth one of the family to renounce his alienship and become a fellow citizen with the saints and of the household of God. Wilber has been interested for a year in the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ. It was the writer's privilege as well as pleasure to instruct and examine him in the things needful for one to know in order to become a subject worthy to receive the ordinance of baptism into the name of the Lord Jesus. He was formerly a member of the Church of Christ. Wilber is a very bright and progessive young man.

The services were held at our home, and a large part of the church was present. Before baptism Brother Pottorf read the sixth chapter of Romans, and based his remarks on the first six verses. The importance of baptism was made very plain. He showed that if baptized into Jesus Christ, then we are are baptized into his death. If planted in the likeness of his death, we shall be also in the likeness of his resurrection.

After the ordinance of baptism had been administered, the writer read and explained the charge given by Paul to his son Timothy as recorded in 2 Tim. 4:1-8. This charge was given just before the apostle was put to death because of his faith. We stated that this charge was as appropriate to believers today as in the days of Timothy. The charge is: "Preach the word. Be instant in season, out of season; reprove, rebuke, exhort with all longsuffering and doctrine." The apostle announced that he had fought a good fight, he had finished his course, he had kept the faith. He also announced that there was laid up for him and all who loved the appearing of the Lord Jesus, a crown of righteousness. This reward will be given to every person according as his work shall be.

We wish to add that Sister Coy never tires in the gospel work. All things else are made to occupy a second place in her daily work. She was the means in God's hands of teaching her aged mother, Sister Godward, the gospel. She rejoices in the promise of eternal life in the kingdom of God. Our prayer is that our young brother may add to his faith the seven graces spoken of in 2 Pet. 1:5-8. These will assure him an entrance into the kingdom of our Lord.

Your brother,
D. C. Robison.

BEREAN COLUMN

Edited by National Berean Society
Leota B. Hanson, Editor,
5622 Vernon Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Dear Bereans:

I have been requested by a dear sister in Christ to write a few lines for your column. I must say I have been living for some time where I have not heard the word of God preached. I do not feel as though I could write to do others any good. I go to hear the M. E. preach but there is a longing to hear something I do not hear the truth. We are not of this world. "If ye were of the world the world would love his own; but because you are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you." And then again we read, John 17:33: "These things I have spoken unto you that in me ye might have peace. In the world ye shall have tribulation. But be of good cheer; I have overcome the world."

When our trials are oppressive, we can find peace in Christ. We have so many things to overcome if we become like Christ. He is our example He was pure so must we be pure. That means so much—pure in hought, wordst, and actions. We must at all times keep our minds on him. Putting away evil thoughts, which are of the world; letting our words go forth for the good of others; and by our actions show to others we are not of this world.

Let us pray to him for help and guidance. May he keep us from going astray, and at the last of this world may he present to us our deeds sealed with the stamp of purity. A word of cheer to those that used to know me. Hoping we will all meet in the kingdom,

Your sister in Christ,
Florence Sellick-Wheeler.

Obedience

Dear Bereans:

I have been asked to write a short article for your column in The Restitution, and I have chosen for my subject, "Obedience." By reading Daniel 11th and 12th chapters we notice God gives his people, the Israelites, certain rules to govern their lives, and he sets before them a blessing and a curse: "A blessing if ye obey the commandments of the Lord your God, and a curse if ye obey not the commandments of the Lord your God." Now we are God's children and heirs to the same promises, have the same blessings and curses before us. Have you ever noticed that before we receive a blessing there is an act of obedience on our part? In the first place, in order to become God's children we must repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus, for the remission of sins (Acts 2:38). Then we are in truth God's children, and can call him "Father," and are glad to obey his commands. Then having believed the things concerning the kingdom we have the faith, and our work must begin, for faith without works is dead (Jas. 2:17-25). When Naaman the leper, following the advice of the little captive maiden, went to Elisha to be healed, Elisha told him to dip seven times in the river Jordan. When Naaman came up the sixth time he was as much a leper as when he came asking to be healed, and would have died a leper if he had not dipped the seventh time. Was it not the act of obedience on his part that caused God to heal him? When we stop to think that our future life depends upon our being obedient to God's commands, it behoves us to find out what those commands are. But God has not left us in doubt, for he has given us his holy word as a guide.

In these times of trouble there are so many things that "seemeth right" at first sight, but when we look at them in the light of God's word we know that we as his people must have no part in them. We must keep ourselves clean in God's sight no matter what man may say of us. Listen! "Wherefore come out from among them, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you, and will be a father unto you, and ye shall be my sons and daughters, saith the Lord Almighty" (2 Cor. 6:17, 18). If we obey his commands we must expect to suffer, but let us ake our Bibles and turn to 1 Pet. 4:12: "Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you. But rejoice inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings: that, when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy."

Let us live such lives that when he comes, who is to be King of the earth, we may have on the wedding garment. We have seen how the Jews through their disobedience have received the curses: let us through obedience strive to receive the blessings.

Mrs. Minnie Rogers.

Sowing the Seed

Having read and reread Brother Russell Zeller's articles on "Sermons for the Isolated" and "Libraries of Tracts for the Local Berean Societies," I wish to say that the National Berean Society has a big supply of tracts on hand that we would like to see distributed to all parts of the country.

Some of these tracts are fine sermons, others are simple helps to Bible study. Each one has its place and serves its purpose. Please save the paper that has the list of tracts so that at any time you need something you can look over the list and send for the ones that will best answer your purpose. Do not be afraid of exhausting the supply, for the tract work has recently received a very generous donation from friends of the work both in money and books. These are highly appreciated, as it comes at a time in almost the beginning of the year when it enables the committee to offer for distrbution, and for Tract Libraries much that it could not otherwise have done. Wherefore let us sow the seed, the good seed of the gospel of the kingdom, and trust that it may germinate and grow and bring forth fruit, some even to an hunded fold.

This would be worth while brothers and sisters, for "he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death, and shall hide a multitude of sins."

Christian Spirit

I do not ask, O Lord, that life may be
A pleasant road;
I do not ask that thou wouldst take from me
Aught of its load;
I do not ask that flowers should always spring
Beneath my feet,
I know to well the poison and the sting
Of things too sweet;
For one thing only Lord, dear Lord, I plead,
Lead me aright.
Though strength should falter and though heart should bleed ,
Through peace to light.
I do not ask, O Lord, that thou should shed
Full radiance here;
Give but a ray of peace, that I may tread
Without a fear;
I do not ask my cross to understand,
My way to see:
Better in darkness just to feel thy hand
And follow thee.

Information Regarding The Bible

The first division of the divine arrangement into chapters and verses is attributed to Stephen Langton, Archbishop of Canterbury, in the reign of King John, at the end of the twelfth or the beginning of the thirteenth century. Cardinal Hugo, in the middle of the thirteenth cetury, divided the Old Testament into chapters as they now stand in our translation. In 1661, Athais, a Jew of Amsterdam, divided the section of Hugo into verses. In 1561 a French printer divided the New Testament into verses as they now are.

The Old Testament contains 39 books, 929 chapters, 23,214 verses, 592,439 words, and 2,738,100 letters.

The New Testament contains 27 books, 270 chapter, 7,931 verses, 132,253 words, and 938,380 letters.

The entire Bible conains 66 books, 1,199 chapters, 31,145 verses, 724,692 words, and 3,676,480 letters.

The name of Jehovah, or Lord occurs 6,855 times in the Old Testament.

The word "and" occurs in the Old Testament 35,543 times.

The middle book of the Old Testament is Proverbs.

The middle chapter is the 20th of Job.

The middle verse is the 17th verse of the 26th chapter of 2nd Chronicles.

The middle book of the New Testament is 2nd Thessalonians.

The middle chapters are in Romans, the 13th and 14th.

The middle verse is Acts 11:17.

The middle book in the Bible is Micah.

The middle chapters are Psalm 121 and 122.

The longest chapter is the 119th Psalm.

The shortest chapter is the 117th Psalm.

The middle verse in the Bible is Psalm 18:9.

The least verse in the Old Testament is 1 Chronicles 1:25.

The least verse in the Bible is John 11:35.

The 19th chapter of 2nd Kings and Isaiah 27th are identical.

The entire alphabet (I and J being considered as one) is contained in Ezra 7:21.

The Apocrypha (not inspired, but sometimes found between the Old and New Testaments) has 4 books, 183 chapters, 15.081 verses, and 158,185 words.

The preceding facts were ascertained by a man in 1718, also by an Englishman residing in Amsterdam in 1722; and it is stated that it took each nearly three years to complete the investigations.

The library of the University of Gottingen has a Bible written on 2,470 palm leaves.

A shekel of gold was $8.09.
A talent of silver was $516.32.
A talent of gold was $13.800.00.
A piece of silver or a penny was 13 cents.
A farthing was 3 cents.
A gehrem was 1 cent.
A mite was 1½ cents.
A homer contains 75 gallons and 5 pints.
A hin was 1 gallon and 2 pints.
A firkin was 7 pints.
An omer was 6 pints.

Not So Popular

A prominent clergyman when asked, "Is the Bible more or less popular in the home today ?" made this reply:

"Much less popular. There is a decline in family worship. The family altar is not as popular as in the days of our fathers. Many of the maids in our houses taught at home to open and close the day with prayer continue it here, and they are much more to be respected than the women who sit in drawing rooms all dolled up and neglect their religious duties.

Think upon me, O my God, for good Neh. 5.10.

The Bible

This book contains—the mind of God, the state of man, the way of salvation, the doom of sinners, and the happiness of believers. Its doctrines are holy, its precepts are binding, its histories are true, and its decisions are immutable. Read it to be wise, believe it to be safe, and practice it to be holy. It contains light to direct you, food to support you, and comfort to cheer you. It is the traveler's map, the pilgrim's staff, the pilots compass, the soldier's sword, and the Christian's charter. Here paradise is restored, heaven opened and the end of the wicked disclosed. Christ is its grand subject, our good its design, and the glory of God its end. It should fill the memory, rule the heart, and guide the feet. Read it slowly, frequently, prayerfully. It is a mine of wealth, a paradise of glory, and a river of pleasure. It is given you in life, will be opened at the judgment, and be remembered forever. It involves the highest responsibility, will reward the greatest labor, and condemn all who trifle with its sacred contents.—Gospel News.

The Wrong Learning

A man may know all about the rocks, and his heart remain as hard as they; he may know all about the winds, and be the sport of passions as fierce as they; he may know all about the stars, and be as a meteor, whose end, after a brief and brilliant career, is to be quenched in eternal night; he may know all about the sea and his soul resemble its troubled waters, which cannot rest.

A man may know how to rule the elements, yet not know how to rule his own spirit; he may know how to turn aside the flashing thunderbolt, but not the wrath of God from his own guilty head; he may have all the knowledge of a Newton, a Laplace, a Watt, he may know many mysteries and understand many hidden things, but if he has no personal knowledge of the love of God, brought near to sinful men in Christ, what shall it avail ?

"For what shall it profit a man, if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul (life) ? or what shall a man give in exchange for his soul (life ?" (Mark 8:36, 37).

The Scottish Poet Burns, Said:

Deep this truth's impressed my mind,
Through all his works abroad;
The heart benevolent and kind
The most resembles God.

Our Weekly Puzzle

In the Bible there are but three passages containing the words "boy" or "boys," "girl" or "girls."

Where can they be found ?

Answer in next issue.

Answer to puzzle in last issue:

The passage was written by John to "the angel of the church in Philadelphia," and may be found in Rev. 3:12.

The Consolation of the Bible

There is no source of hope and consolation for these vexed days equal to that of the Scriptures. The confirmation of your best resolutions, the succor of your hearts, the upbuilding of your manhood, may be obtained by Bible-reading, Bible-loving. Called upon, as you are, to encounted perils which have humiliated Christendom and disrupted the fabric of well-being, will you not turn to prayer, with the book before you as you pray ? Everything you lack is here. When I am tempted to falter in my trust in an over-watching care which we cannot create nor escape, I think of the Bible, of its past, its present and its power, and give thanks to the God who inspired and guarded it.

The Bible Not a Superstitious Charm

We read occasionally some patheic and sentimental story about a young man going away to war with the Bible or Testament his mother gave him in his breast pocket. A bullet, which would otherwise have found his heart, strikes the Bible is deflected and thus his life is saved. The story may be true. But, the superstitious inference as to the value of the Bible is wholly false. Such inferences only degrade the Bible. Any other article in the breast pocket would have done just as well.

Daily Strength

Every day this lesson heed—
Daily strength for daily need;
Chase foreboding cares away;
Eat the manna of today.
O, to live exempt from care,
By the energy of prayer,
Strong in faith with mind subdued,
Glowing, yet with gratitude.

His Fears Realized

"You refused me ten years ago." "I remember," said the heiress. "You said it would wreck your life." "It did. I have had to work for a living ever since."—Life.

SIGNS OF THE MORNING

The morning is breaking, the night is far spent,
  The nations are waking with warlike intent;
The "Classes" and "Masses," in battle array,
  Are facing each other 'tis dawn of the day.

Awake, O Italia! on Tripoli's shore,
  The Turk and the Papist are striving once more;
It is Jacob and Esau, their flags have unfurled—
  'Tis the question of ages, to envelop the world.

Will the Esau of Turkey his birthright despise?
  Will the blessing of Cyrene be small in his eyes?
Shall not El-Senusi, the world to o'erawe,
  Raise the green flag of Jehad the dread Holy War?

Will Jacob of Christendom ever find rest?
  He has marked Laban's cattle and taken the best;
With the Laban behind him, and Esau before,
  The queston of ages is with us once more.

Pass over the Jabbok! cross over the seas;
  With ships or with camels thou art not at ease.
Thou art Jacob—supplanter, 'twas for power and greed,
  To the "white man's hard burden" thou gavest much heed.

Thou art Jacob—supplanter, but wilt thou prevail?
  Wilt thou wrestle with God and become Israel?
Then call on thy God and pray for thy band,
  For the night is far spent, the day is at hand.

Ho, Muscovite prince, within Russia's bond!
  The squadrons of Magog art at Trebizond,
And ready to fall on the Turk as he flees,
  And drive him to cover between the "two seas."

And wouldst thou, Italia, for Palestine wait,
  And present to Pope Benedict a temporal estate?
Beware! For when satan from prison goes forth,
  The nations go "up on the breadth of the earth."

Dried up is Euphrates, for Turkey is weak,
  While Japan and China as powers now speak;
Now is India awak'ning, and Persia's still spared,
  And "the way of the kings of the east is prepared."

The nations are hastening God's word to fulfill While the "Classes" and "Masses" are doing his will;
The war dogs are waking, to hear the peace call,
  And the church is asleep in the midst of them all.

Awake, slumbering virgins! No—let them sleep on!
  'Tis the watchman who first needs to know of the dawn.
Go up to thy tower, O Watchman, and cry!
  Let the world hear no more of thy soft lullaby.

The nations are waking, North, South, East and West;
  Society throbs with a fearful unrest;
Creation travaileth to her great, second birth—
  Christ is coming! and "will he find faith on the earth?"

THE SUCCESS AND FAILURE OF THE REFORMATION

Dear Restitution:

Enclosed clippings from "The Sunday School Times" give such remarkably, unexpected views that I take the liberty to call your attention to them.

Is W. L. Pettingill related to our J. H. Pettingill, author of "The Uuspeakable Gift"? They certainly have the same views.

What an article that one by Haldeman is! I did not believe "The Times" would publish it. How pleasing the truth is from such unexpected quarters!

Yours truly, J. J. Nagel.

The Reformation was a revolt against sacerdotalism, against the outward vices and the increasing political tyranny of the Papacy. It liberated the conscience. It enfranchised individual faith. It sent the people back of Church canons, councils of priests and the words of man to the Word of God. It brought spiritual light, quickened and enlarged spiritual understanding. It gave liberty to the operation of the Spirit and developed spiritual character. It placed faith and works in right relation. It made faith fruitful in works, but demanded that the works should be a revelation and proof, not only of conviction, but an emphasis of character, character in accord with the Spirit, with the holiness of love which the Spirit when unhindered evokes. It restated justification as the work of Christ and on the basis of the once-for-all sacrifice. It exalted faith as the exclusive instrument by which it must be appropriated. It set aside human merit, even in the exercise of faith, magnified the cross, proclaimed grace as the distinctive principle of this age, and gave hope to the farthest swept, the most sin-blackened soul among the sons of men. It took the gag out of the mouth of those who would witness for Christ. It gave the preacher the ordination and authority of Paul, "I believed, and therefore have I spoken." It brushed away the intervening priesthood set up by man and brough into full vision the one and only priesthood of Christ. With the intercession of Christ in heaven and the co-ordinate intercession of the Spirit in the heart, the presence of God became a personal experience instead of a dramatic, mechanical, and ritualistic pretense. God was no longer an expressions of symbols, but an accent of consciousness.

All this the Reformation did.

On the political, the purely governmental and social side it appeared to be an unqualified success.

It struck a far consequent blow against absolutism in the Church, and by so much made for individualism in government. It repudiated autocracy in matters religious, and in doing so opened the door to democracy in matters civil. Viewed alone politically, the Reformation was an ever enlarging victory.

Viewed alone spiritually, the Reformation was not a complete triumph. Its shortcoming is foreannounced in the letter of the risen Son of God to the angel of the church at Sardis (the church which stands symbolically for Protestantism), "I have not found thy works perfect (complete)." It started well, but did not go all the way.

It is true, sacerdotalism was rejected and the final deposit of authority committed, not to the church but to the Bible. The continued Presence was denied in the emblems, but recognized in the Spirit and the word. The church as a body and the Christian as an individual were made dependent on a "thus said the Lord." The written Word and not the church became the revelation of Christ doctrinally, Christian character his revelation and demonstration experimentally. All this the Reformation accomplished.

There was one supreme and vital thing it did not do.

It did not deliver the church from the deception and thraldom of the Kingdom fallacy.

The Error of Telescoping Two Dispensations

From the hour when Charlemagne became the official transition from Rome Pagan to Rome Papal; from the moment when the son of Pepin was crowned by Pope Leo III, on down through the succeeding centuries to the Reformation era, the doctrine that the church is the kingdom or Christ upon earth had steadily seized the imagination, stifled the conscience, and laid hold of the ambitions of men. The Emperor was the divinely ordained instrument by which the Church should control the nations. The Empire was the domain of the Church. As the Emperor ruled the world, the world was, necessarily, the domain of the Church. The Roman Empire and the Roman Church were merged together. They were looked upon and accepted as one. The Church eventually through the Papacy subordinated the Empire. It removed kings and rulers. It consecrated emperors. When it pleased it excommunicated them. One great emperor hesitated, and then held the Pope's stirrup; another stood shivering barefoot in the snow waiting till a Pope should pardon him. To outward appearance the Holy Roman Empire was the Church. The Church was the Empire. It was the kingdom of Christ come upon earth.

The Reformation rejected this claim of the Papacy. It denied its temporal and political sovereignty.

It did not deny the idea that the Church was the kingdom of Christ; on the contrary, it intensified it. It did so by spiritualizing the idea.

The Church was still a kingdom, heavenly and not earthly, spiritual and not political. Its area was to be measured not geographically, but morally, not on land nor sea, but in the hearts and lives of men. The throne should be neither in Aachen, nor in Rome, neither in Germany nor in Italy, but in the conscience and character of man. The Emperor was no longer to be enthroned with sword, with globe and golden crown, but with love, with holiness and adoration of soul. He was no more to be seen in trappings of scarlet and purple, sustained by battle axe and spear. He was to be no more visible to the gaze of men, but invisible, clothed with the mantle of the Holy Spirit and ruling with a sceptre whose name and strength should be—omnipotence. This Emperor, this supreme ruler, this King of kings should be the invisible but all potent Son of God, the indwelling and abiding Christ.

But men are still on earth. They are visible to one another. They live in tabernacles of flesh. They are intimately related to the political and social system. Their responsibility to these constituencies affects their moral attitude and governs their physical acts. The church if it would be a kingdom must see to it that the systems of the world, whether political or professedly moral, do not undermine nor overthrow its authority. To fulfill its function it must dominate, it must be superior to the operative methods and principles of any or all of these world systems. It cannot afford so to dominate that it becomes an enemy and is met by antagonism. It will therefore seek to become a partner. The political and social forces will be used as agencies to assist in the expansion of the moral and spiritual kingdom.

The Error Responsible for a False Slogan

Inexorably the kingdom idea, working along these very lines, forced the Church to identify itself with the political and social, as well as the moral forces of the world.

The rallying cry of Protestantism was sounded out, "The World for Christ." The one concept, to bring the world under rule to Christ. The method, so to enter into the practical things of the world, its legislation, its civilization, its art and science, its governmental and social development; so to interpenetrate it spiritually, as Rome had done politically, until little by little the world and the Church like the Empire and the Papacy should seem as one, a oneness in which the church should be the undisputed and all-controlling power.

More and more the Church grew tolerant toward civilization. More and more civilization, while rejecting the fundamental doctrines of Christianity, accepted its ethics.

The Church and civilization seemed to be working to one end—the subjection of the world in righteousness. This concept of the Church as a moral and spiritual kingdom has had its logical outcome, its unavoidable consequence. It has led the Church in the spirit of a necessitated conservatism, in the inevitable desire to win the support of civilization, to set aside the doctrinal and dispensational side of Christianity. It has led the Church to descend to the plane of the purely ethical. The Christ it preaches is not so much the Christ who died upon the cross, but rather the Christ who lived among men. Its aim is not to impress men that Christ died as a sacrifice for our sins, but lived as an example for our lives.

The Church has become a society for competitive morality. It is in spite of itself competing with every effort of man to make the world better for the natural man to live in, and the natural man better to live in the world. It is occupied with physical as well as moral sanitation. It is making an increasing endeavor to clean up Sodom and comfort men who like Lot vex their "righteous" (not spiritual) souls with its unlawful deeds. It is more and more seeking to save men socially rather than individually. If it can get society right, it is confident the individual will be right. Give man an environment in society and government where righteousness rules, and the individual will yield to righteousness.

Never was there a time when this self-same word, "righteousness," was so frequently and so glibly on the lips; but on investigation it is found to be, not the righteousness which comes by the way of the cross, but the righteousness evolved from the natural and unquickened conscience. It is the righteousness, indeed, of "good" works, but works with all their goodness unclarified by the crimson of the blood. In short, it is human righteousness and not divine. It is evolution and not regeneration.

More and more it is being affirmed, and the effort insistently made to demonstrate and prove, that man has an inborn, natural sonship with God. In our pulpits men are preaching a system of faith which, since it repudiates all the fundamental, all the basic doctrine of salvation, might be preached in the name of Buddha as well as Christ; a system of so-called Christian faith which would be just as effective without the name of Christ, a Christianity which has no need of Christ at all.

A Concept that Blurred the Blessed Hope

This kingdom concept has led the Church to repudiate the pre-eminent hope set before it in Holy Scripture—the hope of the second coming of the Lord. And this is in the nature of the case. The coming of Christ in judgment, the lightning-like revelation of his majesty at this moment, would seriously interfere with the scheme of social and political redemption so much upon the heart of men who feel themselves called to mend, to paint and decorate a world-system God has doomed. The coming of Christ tomorrow would be like a deathblow for enlarging and bettering the earth. To tell the Church in the face of all its humanitarian energy that the end of the age is to be as it was in the days of Noah, the same materialism and lustfulness, a world filled with violence to the end, with evil in the thoughts of men continually, with indifference to, and open rebellion against God; a world in which anti-Christ and not Christ shall be supreme; and that the coming of the Son of God will be as the wrath-smiting rush of the down-breaking and merciless waters of the flood, would seem as nothing less than monstrous, as almost perversely unrighteous, to those who are seeking to build on the principle of the gradual, spiritual awakening of the world. Good and sincere men in the Church repudiate it. In order to set it aside they are driven to define the apostolic committal to the doctrine as a mistake. Step by step they are led to expurgate everything which makes the years ahead of us catastrophic and cataclysmic. To some earnest men the announcement that Chris is coming, and particularly that this coming is imminent, is worse than folly; it is treason to the accepted and would-be orthodox optimism that the world is growing better and the kingdom of Christ expanding.

In thus turning the back upon the miraculous re-entrance of Christ to the world, all the eschatological side of the New Testament is necessarily rejected or treated as of negligible value. To be taken up with the consideration of the hereafter, to let the mind ravel beyond the region of time, is judged as the useless occupation of impractible and profitless speculation. As a consequence of this logical attitude all the resplendent tomorrows of God's promise are shut out from the vista of faith. Doctrinal and dispensational truth and all prophecy are classified as so much unutilizable theological lumber.

The kingdom idea has not been excluded these truths, it has widened the door of the Church for the entrance of material philosophy, fleshly energy, and self-satisfied human endeavor.

The kingdom idea has utterly failed. The Church has not conquered the world. The world in large degree has conquered the Church. Instead of making men spiritual it has at the best only made them religious (and between spirituality and religiousness there is an Atlantic Ocean difference). Instead of setting eternity on their horizon, it has extended time and made it more interesting, more desirable.

After four hundred years of the reformed kingdom idea, what are the conditions confronting us? A whole world at war!

The leading factors in the war, the nations which have called themselves "Christians," and specially those nations which once constituted the Holy Roman Empire; two of them the nations which repudiated the Papacy and stood for the spiritual kingdom of Christ on earth.

Modern civilization with all its boasted culture in the welter and sickening red mire or fractricidal war. It is there because modern civilization is nothing more than a receiver of stolen goods, It stole the ethics of Christianity, then attempted to build itself with these stolen ethics without using their only foundation, the Sonship of Christ as the eternal rock and the blood of the cross as the unfailing cement.

Materialism and unbelief in the world. Materialism and unbelief in the professing Church. More unbelievers and idolaters than at the beginning of Christianity!

He who faces the indifference in the world, the indifference in the Church, the mere religiousness and open infidelity, sees no evidence of a Church winning the world for Christ. Amid the roar of battle, the cynic utterance of professed leaders of Christian thought, and the denial of doctrine, the most vivid optimist finds no hint of the purple and gold of millennial days.

Has the Church failed? No!

The kingdom idea has failed. It has failed because there never was a foundation for any such idea. There is no such thought in the New Testament.

The Church is not a kingdom. It is in no sense a kingdom. It has none of its characteristics. It has none of its nomenclature, office bearers, nor organization.

There is such a thing as the kingdom of heaven. The kingdom of heaven in its original intent was a kingdom whose source was in heaven, its area on earth, and its king from heaven.

The King came and was rejected. The original kingdom was postponed. The kingdom of heaven on earth today is an altogether different thing. It is the profession of a rejected king, now offered of God as a sacrifice for sin, a redeemer and savior of men.

The Church is in the world as a company of witnesses. It began officially with tongues. It is to witness with tongues. It is here to lift up the voice and witness against this system of satan and man called the "world," that world which is "not of the Father." It is to witness against it as did the ark of Noah when it was abuilding. It is here to reject, and uncompromisingly reject, the vain hope of human evolution Godward. It is here to testify to the necessity for a new and spiritual humanity; to confess that Jesus Christ is the one and only Savior, and to walk in fellowship with him as a still rejected, but surely coming king.

To talk of a kingdom while the king is in exile! To talk of the Church reigning and ruling over a world which has rejected the Lord and increasingly does so! To accept a kingdom from the hands of a world which refuses to own and surrender to him would be as strangely inconsistnet as it would be for a queen to accept a kingdom from the hands of men still red with the blood of her husband. It would be evident that she had failed to apprehend her husband or had far departed from the principles which led to his death. To talk of the Church reigning and ruling in a world over which there still falls the shadow of the cross and the unavenging murder of its victim, would be a witness that the Church had either never apprehended him who died for her, or had turned away from the principles which led to his death.

There can be no kingdom of Christ on earth till he himself shall come. Not till he comes in the clouds of heaven will the world fall at his feet. Not by preaching of the Gospel is the world to be won and the kingdom established, but by the appearing of the King. He is coming, not softly as when morning light breaks through the dawn; not gently as when a lover's kiss is laid on upturned lips which welcome and respond to desire; not with unwrinkled brow, with gladsome smile and olive branch of peace. Nay! he is coming as when the storm's sword-gleam is thrust from east to west. He is coming as when the thunder peals in splintered echoes from crag to crag. He is coming as a man of war with a rod of iron to put down all rule, all authority and power, trample all opposition beneath his feet, set up the everlasting kingdom whose peace shall be based on law and justice, on infinite might, on unchanging righteousness and abiding truth.

Till he comes the kingdom is in abeyance; and we who are his are to be foreigners and travelers, simply visitors here, waiting and witnessing while we wait, till he does come.

As Christians we are commissioned of truth to recognize the greatness of the Reformation. We are to recognize Luther as raised and called of God; and he lived up to the measure of his spiritual light, met his opportunity, loosed the Church from the shackles of superstition and the villany of priestcraft, set the gospel free and brought the individual soul into intimate, conscious contact with God and Christ.

But when we own all this and give unstinted thanks to God for his dispensational interference; while we encourage our hearts in contemplating the courage, the loyalty to conviction, the unswerving faith and unselfish devotion of Luther, accepting with profound gratitude the man and the movement, we are in no wise to deceive ourselves into any gratulatory belief that the Reformation carried Christianity forward as the kingdom of Christ or opened the door to the world's conversion by any preaching of the gospel. We are to be as fearless as was Luther himself, and without hesitation to stand for the truth that with all the good it did, the Reformation bequeathed and intensified the same fallacy which made Rome apostate and leads it today with unchanged purpose to stretch forth its hands as the so-called kingdom of Christ for the sovereignty of the world; the fallacy which is leading Protestantism with Rome's inherited error to lose sight of the King in the false vision of the kingdom, and to forget that till he comes as King there can be no kingdom.—I. M. Haldeman, in "Sunday School Times."

IS THE LORD NEAR?

To one who is uninstructed in the word all things continue as they were from the beginning. True there is a mighty war on in the earth, but says this one. "There have always been wars. Day and night, summer and winter, seed time and harvest succeed each other as they ever have, everything is as it has been from the beginning; and so we believe it will continue to be." One who has become wise, one who is of the day, one who is not in darknesss as to the teaching of God's word knows that the above reasoning is false and misleading, bringing destruction to such an one because he knows not the time of God's visitation.

Has God ever poured out his judgments on the earth without giving warning that destruction was coming? And did he ever send punishment without providing a way of escape if men would seek it and escape? We read that God made man out of the dust of the earth, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul. God looked upon all that he had made, and pronounced everything very good. But alas, when this man was placed on probation to test him he yielded to the motions of sin which were in his flesh, and was led away from goodness. Adam being the father of the whole human race, all were born with this same sin in the flesh, and as generation after generation arose, each generation yielded more and more to sin, until God again looked upon creation and behold, the whole earth was filled with violence, and all flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth. One man and his family out of the multitude found favor with God. Through him God sent a warning of the flood and instructed him to build an ark for those who would seek safety in it. At the time appointed the flood came.

Going farther down the stream of time we find man again corrupt. This time God sent an angel with a warning that those who would might flee from the wrath to come. We read that the same day that Lot went out of Sodom, God's judgment fell upon it. Coming to our Savior's time we find him warning his disciples of the impending destruction of Jerusalem, and telling them how they might know when the time of judgment was come, that they might escape out of the city. History tells us that the Roman army encompassed the city. The disciples saw and remembered the Master's words. How could they escape? History tells us that for some unaccountable reason the army fell back. The disciples came out and fled to the mountains; and it is said that not a Christian perished in the seige which followed. An eminent man once said, "I know of no way of judging the future but by the past." And this is true of God's written word. Seeing all things fulfilled as they were written, and at the set time, we may with reason have faith to believe fully that all things which are spoken of this present time will be literally accomplished at the appointed time.

Is the coming of the Lord near? How may we know? From God's dealings in the past has he given us warning. Here are the signs. As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be when the Lord is near. In the days of Noah we read that the whole earth was filled with violence. Do the same conditions prevail now? There can be but one answer. Violence and destruction are everywhere. Again, as it was in the days of Lot, so shall it be in the day of the Lord's coming. Every paper all over the land is daily filled with the crusade against vice, and it seems a losing battle, too. There shall be earthquakes in divers places, pestilences, famines, and men's hearts failing them for fear of those things which are coming upon the earth. No one denies that all these things have come. What do they mean? Listen to our Lord himself: "When ye see all these things, know that it (his coming) is near, even at the door." God's word has never failed in the past, and we believe it is still truth, and can say with confidence, Jesus is at the door. The day and the hour has not been revealed. We know not how soon he may pull the latch string and enter, but we know that he is at the door, and that our meeting is close at hand. The saints saw these things beginning to come to pass years ago, and lifted up their heads with rejoicing; but now is our salvation nearer. The body must be nearly complete. It is time the wise are awake, losing not the oil they have in their lamps, nor suffering their light to grow dim; but trimming their lamps anew that the radiance may increase as the darkness that covers the earth becomes more dense.

It has been suggested that extra meetings be held by the brethren that they may encourage and help one another to be ready. When I read this I thought who is to speak to those alone, isolated from all of God's children? Brethren, you who are strengthened by numbers, hold your light high that its cheering rays may fall upon the lone one groping his way feebly through the darkness. You who can meet often together may speak if you will across the wastes to those you cannot see. The columns of our loved paper are ever open to those who will "speak often one to another." Let those who are blessed with the near fellowship of brethren, write at least to the isolated. To whom much is given much is required. Much more is given to those who sit continually under the teaching of God's word, to those who live and move in the light and love of God's children, than to the one far from home alone in the barrenness of the world. The Lord is near. He is even at the door. Are we ready? Have we from the heart forgiven our brother his trespass against us? Are we lifting the fallen and holding forth the water of life to a thirsty soul? "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto the least" is what gives a place at Christ's right hand: Faith (doctrine) made living by works.

"Yes, by your fruits the world is to know you,
Walking in love as children of day;
Follow your guide, who passed on before you,
He is the life, the truth, and the way."

CHRIST'S MESSAGE TO THE PHILADELPHIAN CHURCH

"And to the angel of the church in Philadelphia write: These things saith he that is holy, he that is true, he that hath the key of David, he that openeth, and no man shutteth; and shutteth, and no man openeth: I know thy works: behold, I have set before thee an open door, and no man can shut it: for thou hast a little strength, and hast kept my word, and hast not denied my name. Behold, I will make them of the synagogue of satan, which say they are Jews, and are not, but do lie; behold, I will make them to come and worship before thy feet, and to know that I have loved thee. Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptaton, which shall come upon all the world, to try them that dwell upon the earth. Behold I come quickly: hold that fast which thou hast, that no man take thy crown. He that overcometh will I make a pillar in the temple of my God, and he shall go no more out: and I will write upon him the name of my God, and the name of the city of my God, which is New Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God: and I will write upon him my new name. He that hath an eat, let him hear what the spirit saith unto the churches" (Rev. 3:7-13).

I The Key of David

1. This is not the key of knowledge, but the symbol of power (vs. 7; Mal. 2:7; Luke 11:52; Rev. 1:18; 20:1; Matt. 16:19).

2. Shebna ("to lead captive") and Eliakim (ail-yahkim, "God shall set up"), are names symbolic of Israel in two states (Ezek. 34:23, 24; Isa. 22:15-25; Gen. 22:17; Isa. 9:6; Luke 1:32).

3. 'An open door." Fields of opportunity for publishng the gospel are God-given, and should be diligently cultivated (vs. 8; 1 Cor. 16:9; 2 Cor. 2:12; Acts 14:27; Col. 4:3; Rev. 4:1).

4. "I will keep thee from (ek, "out of," not exempt from) the hour (horas, "time" 1 John 2:8) of temptation" (vs. 10; Deut. 4:34; 7:19; 29:3; Rev. 9:20, 21; 16:9, 11, 21; Isa. 26:20, 21; Dan. 12).

5. "Worship ("pay homage," Diaglott) before thee" (vs. 9; Isa. 49:23; Mi. 7:16, 17; Isa. 60:12, 14).

II The Promise

1. A pillar in the temple of God (vs. 12; Gen. 28:11-22; 1 Tim. 3:15).

2. "He shall go no more out." The church in two states; mortal and immortal:

(a) Militant (as brass) (Ex. 27:9-17; Cant. 3:7; Jer. 1:18, 19; 2 Cor. 10:36).

(b) Peaceful (as gold) (Ex. 26:31, 32; Gal. 2:9; Matt. 25:10; Luke 13:25; John 8:35; Isa. 22.23).

THE BEAST WITH TWO HORNS

Brother Huggins:

I cannot see how Charlemagne can represent both the Little Horn of Dan. 7 and the two-horned Beast of Revelation 13:11. What was the mission of the Little Horn, and what mission does John assign to the two-horned Beast? By contrasting the two, I think you will certainly see that your position is untenable.—A Friend.

Editor's Reply

Our friend's difficulty in interpreting the Apocalyptic Beast is all caused by presuming that there exists a "contrast" between Daniel's visions and John's. So long as this contrast is in mind, you will not be able to understand Revelation. For while Daniel reclined upon his bed and dreamed, John stood upon the sand of the sea and saw things in vision bearing such strong resemblances to Daniel's revelations, that the reader is at once impressed with the identity of their statements. It was stormy in Daniel's visions; "the four winds of the heaven strove," he says. In Rev. 13 John says, "I stood." John's standing is equivalent to Daniel's storminess of situation. Our friend lives in California. As this state is bounded on the west by the Pacific Ocean, we presume he has stood upon the seashore. The first time we were permitted to look upon the ocean was at Long Beach, Cal.; and while we had never supposed that the ocean was still as a pond, still we were surprised to see how the waters "strove"—how noisome and restless they were in an ocean that is so peaceful and placid that it is called "Pacific." The roar of the waters is incessant. If the sea was quiescent as a pond, to stand upon its beach would be to experience the silence and solitude of a Kansas prairie. Such a standing would be symbolical of times of tranquility and peace. No political ecclesiastical organization, such as John saw come up from the sea and land, could ascend to a position of power in halcyon days undisturbed by storms of war and conquest. So as John "stood" on the ocean beach, the roaring of the waters at his feet implies that he was situated like Daniel when he had his visions—a spectator of the storm. Instead of "contrasting" the two prophets, we identify them.

The reason why our friend cannot see how the Little Horn of Daniel can be the two-horned Beast of Revelation is because he ignores the different phases of the Roman dominion. Daniel's fourth Beast commences its career with the foundation of Rome, B. C. 753, and does not finish it until after the advent of Christ. During this long time it is the same beast, but it changes, has phases. As the moon, for instance, has different phases, called new, half, gibbous, full, etc., yet is the same moon through all of its changes, so Daniel's Fourth Beast has its phases and changes, but remains the same "dreadful and terrible" Beast through all its constitutional manifestations. To fully appreciate this one must have more than a smattering knowledge of Roman history and a compendious grasp of the truth in all its recondite details.

All agree that Daniel's and John's ten horns represennt the same European powers. Daniel says that "while he was considering these horns, there came up among them another Little Horn." From John we derive the same intelligence; for while he was looking at the two-horned Beast, he saw "another beast come up out of the earth." The only marked diversity between Daniel and John is, that what John styles "another beast," speaking like a Dragon, Daniel designates a "Little Horn." This difference between the two prophets in words is very instructive. A horn represents a dynasty—a succession of potentates. The two horns there represent the dynasty of the Medes and of the Persians; and for two years, both of them contemporary in the same Beast. Now John's description of the Beast shows that the dominion of the earth has two contemporary dynasties, both of which are dragonic. Both prophets are showing the same things, only in a different way and by the use of different language. That the Little Horn is imperial, ruled by emperors, is shown by saying the power should subdue three of the ten horns that had existence before it. As it ruled three conquered kingdoms beside its own, it was a dominion under two contemporary successions of potentates; the Little Horn represented the succession of temporal emperors; the Eyes and Mouth represented the succession of pontificial emperors, known as "Popes." Notice there are no independant eyes and mouth for each horn. If there had been eyes and mouth for each horn, there would have been a pope for each kingdom; ten contemporary popes as well as ten contemporary kings. One pope was deemed sufficient for the whole ecclesiastical requirements of the beast, both of the earth and the sea. One pope, one emperor, seven independent, and three vassal kingdoms, south and west of the Rhine and Danube, represented by John's two beasts, is the politico-ecclesiastical and Apocalyptical constitution of modern Europe.

Returning to Rev. 13:11 we notice that the Beast there described is likened to a lamb, that is, its two horns are, yet it spake like a dragon. Christ is "the Lamb" of God; here then, is a wicked power pretending to all humility and meekness of the Lamb of God; yet when it speaks it "speaks like a dragon." Quoting from "Rome in the 16th Century," Dr. Keith says: "There is a peculiar sort of blessing given to two lambs on Jan. 21, at the church of St. Agnes without the walls; from the sainted fleeces of which are manufactured, I believe, by the hand of nuns, two holy mantles called palls, which the pope presents to the Archbishops as his principal shepherd."Now it is a remarkable historical fact that this is just the kind of a dominon Charlemagne founded in the eighth, and beginning of he ninth centuries. This was the time of the Roman bishops, as the eleventh and twelfth centuries were the time of the popes. The position of Charlemagne was military, civil, and ecclesiastical. He was head of both the church and the state. Hallam says: "The sovereign who maintained with the greatset vigor his ecclesiastical supremacy was Charlemagne. Most of the capitularies of his reign relate to the discipline of the church. Some of his relations are such as men of high church principles would, even in modern times, deem infringements of spiritual independence." Though outwardly he appeared like a lamb, inwardly he was a wolf. His dragonic speech is apparent in his arrogating to himself a legislative power over the church which he did not have in temporal affairs. He forbade the reading of any books in the church except the canonical ones, and ordered that no saint should be honored whom the whole church did not acknowledge. His mandates were not passed by a synod of bishops but enjoined upon the church solely by the authority of Charlemagne.

INVENTIONS

No. 4

Mr. Barlow gives the true definition of the words, "mortal," "immortal," and "immortality" thus, "mortal—subject to death," "immortal—not subject to death," "immortality—the undying condition" (page 102). On page 104 he continues "We have found that immortality means that which knows no death." So far good, Mr. Barlow;

but now for your definition of eternal life. "Eternal life is the present possession of the righteous, and of them alone" (page 36)). Explaining the difference between eternal life and immortality, he says, "Eternal life is the present possession of the righteous, and of them alone. It is the life which is the outcome, and inseparable attendant of the new birth. How can it be put on at the resurrection? Immortality is then to be put on, hence a plain difference between immortality and eternal life." It seems to your scribe that the gentleman is here treading upon holy ground; for if because immortality is not to be put on till the resurrection proves it not to be eternal life, eternal life when entered into at the resurrection is proven also not to be eternal life, hence a contradiction of terms. We read, "And these (the wicked) shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into eternal life" (Matt. 25:46). "There is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my name's sake, and the gospel's, but he shall receive an hundred fold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers and children, and lands, with persecutions; and in the world to come eternal life" (Mark 10: 29, 30). "Who will render to every man according to his deeds: to them who by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, honor, and immortality, eternal life" (Rom. 2:6, 7).

Here are three positive statements, plainly declaring that eternal life is to be "entered into," "received," and rendered as a reward at the judgment, and not only that; but it is rendered to those who seek for immortality, or incorruption "by patient continuance in well doing," or rather the righteous, as Jesus declares: and proves that eternal life is the future possession of the righteous, and of them alone, and hence "immortality—the undying condition." The terms are proven synonymous. An undying condition could only be an eternal living condition, which would be eternal life.

But now for Mr. Barlow's definition, "And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent" (John 17:3). He then says, "Thank God for this divine definition" (page 109). But is this a definition? Let us examine a few similar statements: "Jehovah thy God is thy life, and the length of thy days; that thou mayest dwell in the land" (Deut. 30:20). 'And he said unto them, set your hearts unto all the words which I testify among you this day, which ye shall command your children to observe to do, all the words of this law. For it is not a vain thing for you; because it is your life: and through this thing ye shall prolong your days in the land, whither ye go over Jordan to possesss it" (Deut. 32:46, 47).

Here are two statements from the Old Testament, one declaring that God is Israel's life, and the other that the law is their life, and both showing that life is prolongation of days in the land of Palestine, or the condition of their existence there. How then can we understand these passages unless they teach that both Jehovah and the law must be obeyed if Israel's days should be long in the land granted them? Disobedience to either would shorten their days in the land and bring death. With this thought in mind let us read, "And I know that his commandment is life everlasting" (John 12:50). Here, in contrast with Mr. Barlow's so-called definition, is a statement from the same speaker—Jesus of Nazareth—declaring that he knows "that his commandment is life everlasting." Now suppose we take this passage thus, his commandment is life everlasting if obeyed, or in other words, obedience to God's commands brings to the obedient everlasting life; and so with our so-called definition, one must know both Father and Son if he would gain eternal life. Paul most beautifully explains: "And to you who are troubled, rest with us when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ" (2 Thess. 1:7, 8). Here both knowledge of God and obedience are essential to keep us from everlasting destruction, and hence are conditions leading to everlasting life.

If knowledge of God is eternal life then Paul did not possess it when writing to Titus; for he says, "Paul a servant of God . . . . in hope of eternal life" (Titus 1:1, 2). This same Paul also declares, "But if we hope for that we see not, then do we with patience wait for it" (Rom. 8:25). This would make Paul waiting for knowledge of God. The disciple whom Jesus loved would also be in the same boat with Paul; for he says in a letter to the church, "And this is the promise which he has promised us, even eternal life" (1 John 2:25). The word "us" here includes both John and the church, and hence if eternal life is knowledge of God it leaves the apostle and apostolic church in ignorance of God; but if a knowledge of God and his Son is a condition leading to eternal life, all is plain: we can have the one in actual possession, and the other in promise; and that is how we must understand the statements which speak of eternal life as though we possessed it now; for the Bible is not contradictory. We have seen that life in the natural sense is the condition of conscious existence, and when it is destroyed those who possessed it lose all natural function, and know not anything; while living they know, while dead they know not; and hence eternal life must be the condition of eternal conscious existence, and one who fails to gain eternal life will cease to exist. David speaking prophetically of Christ declares, "He asked life of thee, and thou gavest it him, even length of days for ever and ever" (Psa. 21:4). This shows that he that fails to obtain the life for which Christ asked, fails to have length of days for ever and ever, and proves that life is a condition of existence, and that the life the Father gave his Son carries with it the idea of endless days, leaving no room to dispute the meaning of the word. But will God put the wicked out of existence? Speaking of the king of Tyre he says: "All that know thee among the people shall be astonished at thee: thou shalt be a terror, and never shalt thou be any more" (Ezek. 23:19). To be means to exist, and to never be is never to exist; and never to be any more is never to exist any more, hence this wicked king will cease to exist. Again, "Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire" (Matt. 3:12). When chaff is burned up it is no longer in existence; and as chaff is here used to represent the wicked, and its destruction their destruction, we must conclude that they will be literally destroyed as the chaff which is burned up, and that is complete: no more chaff there.

OBITUARIES

Mrs. Wm. Railsback

Melissa Brown, second daughter of Charles and Lucy Conner Brown, was born Feb. 8, 1832, in Jefferson Co., New York, and departed this life Jan. 31, 1918, at her home in Argos, Ind., aged 85 years, 11 months, and 23 days.

When but five years of age she with the parents moved to Marshall County, Ind., and settled on a farm three miles east of Argos.

She was married to Wm. Railsback Feb. 3, 1853. To this union were born six children, two sons and four daughters. The husband preceded her in death a little more than two years ago and one daughter several years ago.

Mrs. Railsback united with the Church of God when nearly thirty years of age and was one of the charter members of the Argos Church.

She lived a long, useful life and leaves the following children to mourn her loss: Simon, Mrs. Diantha Bryan and Mrs. Jane Taber of Argos, Ind.. John of Keyline, Wyoming, Mrs. Christian Walter of Menasha, Wisconsin, and Mrs. Ada Sinks of Rialto, California, to whom she was a mother from the age of two years. Also two sisters, Mrs. Kesiah Newhouse, who lived with her, and Mrs. Sarah Leak of Lake Odessa. Michigan, one brother, Sylvenus Brown of Spring Valley, Wisconsin, sixteen grandchildren, twenty-three great grandchildren, and other relatives and friends. Her hospitality will be missed by all who knew her. She now sleeps in Jesus, awaiting the summons to come forth into life eternal to be with Christ and his people for ever more.

The funeral was held Monday at 2:30, Rev. H. V. Reed of Chicago, preaching the funeral.

Mrs. Bethany Humphrey 75 years old died at 11 o'clock Wednesday night Jan. 16, 1918, at the home of her son, Dan. Humphrey, on Morton Ave.

Funeral services will be conducted from the residence at 2 o'clock Friday afternoon. Mrs. W. J. Hunter teacher of Blair Chapel will read several chapter from the Bible and render a prayer. Burial will be in Edgar cemetery.

Seven children are left to mourn the loss of their mother, viz: Mrs. Charles Young, Mrs. John Bratzler, Mrs. Taylor Riggins, Mrs. George Babb, Mrs. J. M. Cassady, John Humphrey of Colorado, and Daniel Humphrey, who resides at home. The daughters are all residents of the city. Three brothers survive, all residents of Paris. They are John Elkin, George Elkin, and Martin Elkin.

Dear Ones of Like Precious Faith:

Recently the "Daily Beacon" was sent us from our old home, Paris, Ill., which contained the above notice. It saddened our hearts, for Sister Humphrey was dear to us. As much as forty years ago my dear father, J. S. Hatch, baptized her into the all-saving name of Jesus. She lived the Christian life to the end. From her daughter, Mrs. Charles Young, who is of the one faith and a life-long friend of mine, came a letter telling me of her mother's intense suffering, and how she prayed for death to relieve her; how she admonished her children to live the Christian life and meet her in the kingdom, then bade them good-by many times. I have gone with my father to help him fill his appointments in Illinois, and ever found a welcome in Sister Humphreys' home. She was always interested in the meetings. She had many relatives in the faith, some of whom are also asleep in Jesus.

Calm is thy slumber as an infant's sleep,
But thou shalt wake no more to toil and weep;
Thine is a perfect rest, secure and deep;
Good night, good night.

In the morning of the resurrection we will meet this dear one, but bereaved children, she will come forth with the bloom of health on her cheek—not the pallid face you saw as you bent over the casket for the last lingering look at the face of your loved one. Dear children, I know and love all of you, and want to meet you in the kingdom. I point you to our heavenly Father who so loved us that he gave his only begotten Son, that through him we might have life, if we will come to him. He loves us and knows our sorrows and is ever ready to comfort us.

Does Jesus care when I have said "good-by"
To the dearest on earth to me,
And my sad heart aches till it nearly breaks—
Is this aught to him? Does he see?

O yes, he cares; I know he cares,
His heart is touched with my grief;
When the days are weary, the long nights dreary,
I know my Savior cares.

In hope of life when Jesus comes,

Azorah M. Scroggs.

THE GREATEST POWERS—SILENT

Silence makes the working of the greatest forces of life. No ear hears the sun draw up into the sky the countless tons of water that fall in rain. No man hears the groaning of the oak's fibers as it grows to its strength and height. Noise is usually an after-effect, and does not often accompany initial power. Sounding brass and tinkling symbals are noisy, but not powerful. So the will reaches its decisions in silence, but it does not need much shouting to know when a man is in earnest. Love grows without a sound. The great Fisher of men worked quietly, as fishers usually do, and, as Isaiah said, "not crying nor lifting up his voice in the streets," yet he was doing his Father's work every minute.—Selected by H. H. Hawkins.

MAY GOD BLESS THE BABIES

Baby faces, like flowers sweet,
Are seen aplenty in our street,
They nod, and smile, and coo at you
With roguish eyes of cherub's hue,
Lisping sounds like rippling brook,
Gurgle from car, and step, and nook,
While dimpled fists wave to and fro
As down the street they see you go.

'Tis mother's garden on our street—
Each babe a bud, a blossom sweet,
With rosebud mouth—a lure to kiss—
To thrill your heart with tender bliss.
A gift of love— each baby mine,
Sent to mother from God divine,
To make grim life so dear and sweet—
God bless the babies on our street!

"O Lord our Lord, how excellent is thy name in all the earth! who hast set thy glory above the heavens.

"Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hast thou ordained strength because of thine enemies, that thou mightest still the enemy and the avenger."

Youthful Service

By Brother E. W. Knapp

"Blessed is the man that trusteth in the Lord, and whose hope te Lord is."

"Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not."

"Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth; and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes; but know thou, that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment. Therefore remove sorrow from thy heart, and put away evil from thy flesh, for childhood and youth are vanity."

The youth who strives to win God's praise,
  Will faithfully serve him many days;
Will try to keep the path worn bright,
  That leads unto eternal light.

Then we should try with all our might,
  To serve our God, and serve him right;
The great reward should urge us on,
  We'll live for ever with his Son.

And as a means unto that end,
  The wise man said, "In youth begin;"
Who serves the Lord in early days,
  Receives from God "eternal praise."

Our Weekly Puzzle

I am composed of 48 letters. My 1, 24, 7, 30, 45, 47, and 20 combined is the name of a man who made a speech that pleased the Lord.

My 8, 1. 6, 33, 5, and 11 is people that once made an image to worship.

My 31, 22, 16, 9, 12, 28, 13, 33, 7, and 3 is the image they made.

My 25, 37, 1, 19, and 1 is the man who destroyed the image.

My 33, 14, 33, 1, 27, 19, 38, 2 and 1 is a king who ruled over 127 provinces.

My 26, 1, 10, 43, 32, and 18 is a maiden who pleased the king.

My 31, 37, 18, 35, 44, 23, 33, and 15 did not obey the kings commands.

My 22, 27, 18, 11, 15, 4, and 44 is what Paul said Christ was.

My 36, 33, 40, 42, and 43 is what Christians must have.

My 41, 33, 45, 46, 5, and 17 is the doom of unbelievers.

My 21, 26, 1, 29, 33, 25, 12, 34, and 48 is what we all should study.

My whole is a blessed command of our Savior showing his love.

Answer to puzzle in last issue:

Genesis 25:27; Joel 3:3; Zechariah 8:5.

Let not cares, riches nor pleasures of this world choke the heart which was formed to contain the love of God. Pray, and all is thine. Thine is God himself, who teacheth thee to pray for himself. To pray is to go forth from earth, and to live in heaven.—Edward B. Pusey.

Teetotalism Necessary and Unavoidable

By Doctor Wm. A. Brady

The first drink: What will it be? A mistake.

The excuse: Sociability. Good fellowship.

The theory: An occasional drink does not hurt a fellow, as long as he does not lose his head and take another or fall in with the crowd and stand treat till everybody is mushy. Pretty poor philosophy, that. It has killed many a good fellow with too much confidence in himself.

The first drink does not do a man any good. You cannot argue that point. Even if it proves harmless, it never by any chance does him a bit of good. The whole proposition has been argued pro and con and tested out in practice by thousands of fellows as good as you or I, and the final verdict is that the first drink is just a big mistake.

Good fellowship, companionabilitly, sociability, whatever you please to call that spirit which draws good fellows together, certainly does not depend on a drink of anything ever served at table or over a bar. We must be careful not to confuse the mushiness of a man in his cups, the songs and laughter and joviality that goes with mild intoxication, with good fellowship. Good fellows never feel impelled to wallop one another and then apologize next day when they have recovered their senses. Good fellowship never prompts a man to ridicule or sneer at a comrade who thinks more of his health and his self-respect than he thinks of his stomach. If a man wants a drink or thinks he needs one, that is his business; when it comes to your selection of a drink, that is your business. A real man will never confess by look or word any surprise or disappointment when you choose buttermilk, lemonade, or water. If you are not a two-by-four character yourself you will never feel any compunction whatever, in any company anywhere, in making your own uncensored choice of beverages.

The wise boy these days keeps his head clear and brings home the bacon. The smart Aleck peters out half way along the road. It is no longer a question of morals, or even of health.

What will you have?

Make it mineral water—if you are bound to squander money on your drink—and stay in the race.

Mother's Helper

He brings his daddy's slippers
  He picks up baby's toys,
He shuts the door for grandma,
  Without a bit of noise.
On errands for his mother
  He scampers up and down,
She vows she would not change him
  For all the boys in town.

The Golden Rule of Three

An enthusiastic reader of the New Era, residing in New York City, submits the following "Golden Rule of Three," and urges all to memorize it and exert every effort to abide by it:

Three things to be—pure, just, honest.

Three things to govern—temper, tongue, conduct.

Three things to have—courage, affection, gentleness.

Three things to love—the wise, the virtuous, the innocent.

Three things about which to think—life, death, eternity.

Three things to despise—cruelty, arrogance, ingratitude.

Three things to admire—dignity, gratefulness, intellectual power.

Three things for which to wish—health, friends, contentment.

Three things to give—alms to the needy, comfort to the sad, appreciation to the worthy.

Three things to desire—the blessings of God, an approving conscience, the fellowship of the good.

Three things for which to work—a trained mind, a skilled hand, a well regulated heart.

When Mother Has Passed Away

When a mother breathes her last farewell,
The stroke means more than tongue can tell;
The world seems quite another place,
    Without the smile of mother's face.
Years will pass, our hearts still sore,
As time flies on, we miss her more;
She sleeps, we leave her in peace to rest,
The parting was painful, but God knoweth best.

In Christ—What Does It Mean?

At times we are asked what we must do to be in Christ? And we answer, to be in Christ we must believe that Jesus is the Christ the Son of the living God.

That Jesus was born of the virgin Mary.

That Jesus lived a perfect, obedient life. doing the will of his Father, God.

That Jesus died for our sins; was raised for our justification; and will come again for our redemption.

And in this faith, we, with full sincerity of heart, go into the waters of baptism, to arise in newness of life, showing the change in our lives by keeping ourselves "unspotted from the world."

The Morning

Humpty is number one and Dumpty is number two;
Humpty is your stocking and Dumpty is your shoe.
You take up little Humpty and shake it just a bit,
Put it on your foot real quick and give a pull to fit;
Then you take up Dumpty and open his mouth up wide,
Hang on tight, count one, two, three and put your foot inside.
Fasten a button or two, or lace it with a string;
Now we have two feet all ready for whatever the day may bring.

Taking Care of Pennies

Ben Franklin had a wise old head when he advised his readers to take care of the pennies because the dollars would take care of themselves. The boy in whose pocket the pennies burn holes will understand the difficulty of taking care of the pennies, and, like as not, declare that it cannot be done.

Buoyancy of Ice

The specific gravity of ice is about .92. When water freezes it expands somewhat. Ice is, therefore, lighter than water, and that is why it floats. The submerged portion of a regularly formed iceberg in proportion to the visible portion is as 8.7 to 1—that is, almost nine-tenths of the iceberg is under water, and one-tenth above water.

WAITING

Long years we have been waiting,
Since first we heard the cry,
"Behold, Messiah cometh,
Redemption draweth nigh."
Long years of pain and trial,
Long years of hope deferred,
But still, though faint and weary,
We've trusted in his word.

We've watched the signs that tell us
The Lord will soon appear,
Plainly as budding fig tree,
Foretells the summer near;
We've seen the scoffer walking
In unbelief and pride,
And heard from lips unholy
The word of God denied.

How wrong and evil triumph,
And make their lofty boast,
While right and truth and justice
Are trampled in the dust;
We've reached the days of peril,
By holy ones foretold,
When men have turned to fables,
And faith and love grow cold.

Long years we have been waiting,
And still we wait in hope,
While earth is wrapped in darkness,
And men in blindness grope;
Still shines the word prophetic,
A light upon our way,
To warn us of its dangers,
And guide us to the day.

Long years we have been waiting,
And we will wait until
Messiah reigns in glory,
Enthroned on Zion's hill;
We'll watch the signs around us,
With truth our hearts we'll gird,
And while we walk in peril,
We'll trust his holy word.—Selected by Sister B. H. Lang.

RESURGAM—"I SHALL RISE AGAIN"

Dr. William Hiram Foulkes, secretary of the Board of Ministerial Relief and Sustentation of the Presbyterian Church, secretary also of the National Service Commission and interested in the Stony Brook (L. I.) Assembly, preached in St. Paul's Presbyterian Church, Philadelphia. His subject was "Resurgam—'I Shall Rise Again.'" His text was from Job 14:14: "If a man die, shall he live again?" Dr. Foulkes said:

It is worth while to think, for a brief but mighty moment, upon the most absorbing of all subjects—immortality. From the primitive savage to the university professor, men have always been asking Job's question. "If a man die, shall he live again?" This does not mean that every individual or that all races have a clear belief in immortality, for such is not the case. It is true, however, that the races lowest down in the scale of intelligence, as well as the most ignorant individuals of civilized peoples, have natures which respond to the idea of immortality and have minds which are always asking Job's question. No matter how we dull our consciences with the opiates of unbelief that delude us into thinking that this life is all, we are sooner or later aroused from our stupor and confront the reality with quickened rather than diminished concern.

It is not a question of the battle-field alone; although in these trying days, men in the camps and on the firing line, whether on land or sea, are asking the question for themselves with new and deep interest. The question of immortality concerns every man, rich or poor, high or low, wise or ignorant, black or white, male or female, good or bad. It compels the general and the admiral to stand attention and to salute, none the less than the private in the ranks or the ordinary seaman before the mast. It is your question and mine. Ask it for yourself again, putting your own name in the place of that of "a man." "If William Hiram Foulkes die, shall he live again?" That question concerns me and I most eagerly desire to know the truth.

There are several suggestive answers. One is that of science. Does science say anything about immortality, you may ask, lifting your eyebrows with a bit of incredulity. Wait. Listen to the answer that science gives: "He may live again." If I were not afraid of technical words I would have to say that science is agnostic about immorality; that is to say, it does not know. It has no means of knowing, for immortality is outside of its sphere, beyond its range. All that science can say is "Man may live again, he may not; you may take your choice."

Now when we press science a little closer, it answers a little more in detail. "Yes, it is true that a grain of wheat falls into the ground and dies—and then lives again. Wheat that has been taken from one of the royal sarcophagi in Egypt, where it had lain for thousands of years, has lived again. There is a continuity of life in Nature which death does not break down; but as to man, my noblest creature, my greatest mystery, my taskmaster as well as my child, I do not know. He may—beyond that I cannot see or say."

Then comes philosophy, with another answer. Philosophy takes up the subject where science lays it down. Science says, "What are the facts?" Philosophy asks, "What is the essential meaning of the facts?" Science arranges and classifies them; philosophy explains them and shows their relation to the universe, of which they form a part. So philosophy is not afraid to answer Job's question, "If a man die, shall he live again?" "He wants to live again." That is the answer of philosophy. I do not mean any particular kind of philosophy, but the fair interpretation of all philosophy is just this—immortality is a persistent hope of the human heart. Men are not satisfied with the answer of science, "he may or he may not." They want immortality, whether or no. So they go on hoping for it, desiring it, trying to picture it and make it real. Philosophy just takes these common desires and aspirations and says they are not accidents but are vital parts of the human minds that conceive them. Further, philosophy says that since Nature has provided fishes with gills and birds with wings, air for the lungs and light for the eyes, it is quite probable that she has created somewhere that which will satisfy man's deepest cravings. If she abundantly satisfies the temporary desires of man, will she not minister to his eternal needs? Now that is a good conclusion so far as it goes, and it goes a long way. Its lack, however, is that of finality. It is immortality with an "if." "If" Nature is consistent; "if" there is progress in the universe; "if" the good, the beautiful and the true are some day to come to their own—if, if,if! Cannot we get rid of that troublesome "if" that promises to be a fly in our pot of ointment?

Well, let us listen to another answer, that of conscience, "he ought to live again." There are too many wrongs unrighted in this life; too many inequalities; too many failures just short of the goal; there are too many unfinished lives; too many blunted souls; too many songs unsung, pictures unpainted, lives as yet unlived, for one brief world hour to compass them all. Conscience says that Kipling is right in his "L'Envoi" and that one day we must

> Splash at a ten league canvass
> With brushes of camel's hair.

Why, I read just yesterday from the pen of an honorable judge in New York City that not 10 per cent of over 4,000 burglaries which took place in a very few months had been brought to the bar of justice. On the other hand, not a thousandth part of the kindness and self-sacrificing love of human hearts ever finds full expression or satisfaction in this life.

But, Conscience, some of us do not like the word "ought." It seems so harsh and despotic. It is like a drill master putting us through our paces and we are in the awkward squad. It seems to have no mercy and is for ever cracking the whip. Then Conscience answers, "I know that I am not popular. A great philosopher once tried to destroy me, and so, after he had used every kind of a weapon, he made a final charge upon me, saying, 'The word "ought" ought not to be in the dictionary.' Folks are not yet through laughing at that foolish philosopher."

Did you ever hear people say, "'If there isn't a hell, there ought to be"? That is just one way of saying that man ought to live again. Conscience is right; but will man live again? Is there anything else, anything more, anything final?

There is one other answer. It is the word of Jesus Christ: "If a man die he shall live again." Oh, that is what we have been waiting for! We wanted the word of authority. Is Jesus Christ an authority on this subject? It is well to consult experts and to listen to them in their own sphere. Jesus claimed to be an expert on the human soul and its destiny. He said that he knew about God and heaven, the forgiveness of sins, and peace and joy and everlasting life. Did he tell the truth?

Now suppose, for instance, I were to say, "If a man die, he shall live again," you would look me up and down, take my measure and reply, "Who are you to know so much?" Suppose Napoleon had said it or Socrates or Plato or Homer? Would we heed their words as we heed the words of Jesus? Suppose that the President of the United States of America or the King of England were to issue an official decree of immortality, would we believe it just because they said it?

There was something about Jesus, however, that made his words take hold of men. Read them for yourselves. The fourteenth chapter of the Gospel according to St. John has had more persuading power than all the philosophical essays on immortality ever written. Jesus said it, therefore we believe it.

Now we have the record of Jesus' sayings and his doing in certain books that we call the Gospels. They were written by different people, at different times and with different purposes. Are they true records? Were the witnesses whose words they report trustworthy? Did they have any plausible reason for not telling the truth? Can we depend upon them in this important case wherein you and I are the plaintiffs and Death and the Grave are the defendants?

There have been many attempts to brush away the testimony of these witnesses. Some have even tried to laugh them out of court, but they have found that mankind does not care to have his deepest desires trifled with. One pleader against the claims of Jesus to be the resurrection and the life uses the word "fabrication." The Gospel records are false, he says, and the men who wrote them were liars. The best answer to this charge is just to state it clearly. Honest men will do the rest. What motives did the disciples have to induce them to lie? What was the use of fraud when they could so soon be exposed? Were they the kind of men who would or could fabricate such a story? Would they ever have lifted their voices at all, if they did not believe that Jesus had risen from the dead? Is it reasonable to suppose that out of the false witness of perjurers the world's highest hopes have sprung forth?

There is another word that is used. It is hallucination." The witnesses were not frauds; they were fools. They did not try to deceive others; they were self-deceived. They were honest, hairbrained men who saw a ghost. The story grew—and grew and soon they believed that they had seen Jesus alive.

Remember, however, that the disciples did not expect Jesus to reappear. "Slow of heart," he called them. They were too much discouraged to have been moved by mere fancy. In any event, too many of them saw Jesus alive after his passion. He appeared to the ten and then to the eleven; to the two and to the seven; to the women and to over five hundred at once. Even doubting Thomas had his doubts resolved and could only exclaim, "My Lord and my God"! If therefore, the witnesses were neither knaves nor fools, and if their testimony is credible, we see how Jesus Christ has demonstrated his right to answer Job's question for us. He knows because he did.

There is also another proof of his authority to tell us about immortality. It is what is called the congruity of his witness. That means that Jesus is the sort of a person whom God would have raised from the dead if he ever raised anybody.

Huxley once asked, "If I should lead a centaur trotting down Regent Street would that be a proof of my divinity?" Not at all, for a centaur trotting down a London street at the heels of Huxley, coming from nowhere, going nowhere, with no moral character involved and no moral or eternal issues involved would prove nothing. But Jesus Christ, the finest flower of the human race, the one representative, ideal man, "the crystal Christ," as Sidney Lanier called him, rising from the dead and bringing "life and immortality to light through the gospel," means something, means everything.

Suppose that it had been Nero that had been raised from the dead, or Alexander the Great, or even Moses or David. The world would not fasten its faith to their resurrection the way it has clung to the risen Jesus. So, in the words of the argument from congruity; if anyone ever was raised from the dead it must have been such a man as Jesus.

There is one final sort of proof. It is what we call the witness of Christian experience. This does not mean merely yours and mine, but it includes the experience of Saul, the persecutor, who became Paul, the apostle, because he saw the risen Christ in the Damascus way; it includes all the early Christian and later testimony. It creates our sublimest art and literature. It writes itself into our laws and marks the time on our calendar. It is the very cornerstone of our Christian civilization. More than all this, it is the hope of the individual heart who faces Job's question for himself. The soldier on the battlefield and the sailor in peril on the sea, none the less than those in the ordinary places and pursuits of life, may have the proof of Christ's power over death in their own hearts if they will only let him come in as their Divine Savior and Friend.

With his testimony hidden in our hearts,, away from the careless gaze of friends and the probing search of enemies, we may face life and death with equal courage and confidence, because Christ has given us "the power of an endless life." We can say with Job again, "But as for me I know that my Redeemer liveth, and at last he will stand up upon the earth; and after my skin even this body is destroyed, then without my flesh shall I see God; whom I, even I, shall see on my side, and mine eyes shall behold and not as a stranger." We can say with Martha of Bethany, whose brother Lazarus was dead, "I know that I (he) shall rise again in the resurrection of the last day." We can declare with Paul, "We know that if the earthly house of our tabernacle be dissolved we have a building from God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." We can exult with the Psalmist, "Surely goodness and loving kindness shall follow me all the days of my life; and I shall dwell in the house of Jehovah for ever." Resurgum! I shall rise again!

THE POWER OF A TEMPERATE LIFE

"Prove thy servant, I beseech thee, ten days; and let them give us pulse to eat, and water to drink" (Dan. 1:12; read Dan. 1.8-16).

The history of Daniel shows how temperate living brought him great favors. Who was this Daniel? He was the fourth of the great Hebrew prophets who lived about 600 years B. C. He was a contemporary of the prophet Ezekiel, and was carried captive to Babylon in the fourth year of Jehoiakim. He was one of the youths selected to be brought up for future service at the court of the conqueror, and received instruction in all the learning of the Chaldees, his skill in the interpretation of dreams procuring for him the royal favor. He rose to governor of the province of Babylon under Nebuchadnezzar; and under Darius, the Mede, to be first president of the whole Medo-Persian empire, a dignity inferior only to that of Darius himself. The time and place of his death are unknown, although he was alive in the first year of Cyrus.

What is pulse? Grain contained in a pod or case. Peas and beans are the most common and important of all kinds of pulse; next may be ranked kidney beans, lentils, chick peas, pigeon peas, etc. Legumin, a very nutritious principle, abounds in all kinds of pulse. Dry peas contain a quarter of their weight in legumin. He, by abstaining from meat and wine, became fairer and fatter than those that ate the king's meat and drank his wine. "The power of a temperate life" caused Daniel to become a very favored man and to live to the age of 90 years. He was cast into the lion's den, but through it all he lived a life that pleased God. He served God faithfully and lived a temperate life, against which there is no law.

Intemperance is a curse and an evil, and Christians should avoid it; but there is intemperance other than eating or drinking. We look upon the drinking habit as such a monstrous curse that we are apt to think that the only form of intemperance. Look at Paul before Felix when he spoke of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come and Felix trembled, for Felix was living an intemperate life with the Jewess. Paul in speaking of the Christian race says, "Every man that striveth for the mastery, is temperate in all things" (1 Cor. 9:25). Paul in telling Titus how a bishop should live, gives the ideal of a temperate life.

He "must be blameless, not self-willed, not soon angry, not given to wine, no striker, not given to filthy lucre; but a lover of hospitality, a lover of good men, sober, just, holy, temperate; holding fast the faithful word as he hath been taught, that he may be able by sound doctrine both to exhort and to convince the gainsayers" (Titus 1: 7, 9).

The one who lives a strictly temperate life breaks no law of God or man, but any intemperate act, breaks some law, either of God or man. The power of a temperate life, leads one to worship God in every act. There is a power also in an intemperate life but a power that draws away from God and continually worships the evil one which leads to utter destruction. I hope all the readers will obey the call of the temperate life, and spend their lives in such a way as to be accepted of the Life Giver.

E. W. Knapp.

THE TWO-HORNED BEAST

If we turn to Rev. 13:11-18 we will get a good description of the "two-horned beast." Here it is:

"And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth; and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon. And he exercised all the power of the first beast before him, and caused the earth and them that dwell therein to worship the first beast whose deadly wound was healed. And he doeth great wonders, so that he maketh fire come down from heaven on the earth in the sight of men, and deceived them that dwell on the earth by the means of those miracles which he had power to do in the sight of the beast; saying to them that dwell on the earth, that they should make an image to the beast, which had the wound by a sword and did live. And he had power to give life unto the image of the beast, that the image of the beast should both speak, and cause that as many as would not worship the image of the beast should be killed. And he caused all, both small and great, rich and poor, free and bond, to receive a mark in their right hand, or in their foreheads: and that no man might buy or sell, save he that had the mark, or name of the beast, or the number of his name. Here is wisdom. Let him that hath understanding count the number of the beast: for it is the number of a man; and his number is six hundred three score and six."

1. Note: instead of the two-horned beast following the ten-horn beast of Rev. 13:1-10 (inclusive), it exists with it contemporaneously; for, the two-horned beast CAUSED the slaughter of 1260 years done by the two-horned beast. The two-horned beast both speaks and causes "that as many as would not worship the image" should be killed. It is the image of the two-horned beast-- the image the two-horned beast ordered "them that dwell on the earth" to "make" (vs. 14), and it is the image of the ten-horned beast because the ten-horned beast furnished the copy (or pattern) from which to make the image. The two-horned dragon-speaking beast gives life and vitality to the said image (vs. 15). But how can a beast cause another beast to persecute and kill him from A. D. 532 to A. D. 1792, when that causing beast is not in existence until after A. D. 1800? Therefore the claim of our Seventh-day Adventist brethren, viz., that the United States is the two-horned beast, FALLS FLAT without one word of support whatever!

Whiting renders the phrase, "before him" of verse 14 "in his sight," and the Revision so says, and so the Douay version and others. In fact, the Greek is just that. Can an unborn man perform miracles in the sight of another man? And yet the ten-horned beast operated from A. D. 532 to A. D. 1792; and then on top of this they tell us that the two-horned beast arose when the United States arose! That was about A. D. 1776, was it not? Did the United States cause the ten-horned beast to slay and kill from A. D. 532 to A. D. 1792? Did it? Could the two-horned beast make an image before the beast itself came into existence? And could that image cause the slaughter before it itself was made? How readest thou, dear readers.

2. The two-horned beast had two horns though. These horns could not refer to the States in our government, for we had thirteen to start with. That would be eleven too many! And we doubt if one of the thirteen was very much like a lamb! The count is bad in this new arrangement, and the application is preposterous!

3. But the "fire"! O yes, they tell us Benjamin Franklin fulfilled this by catching enough electricity with his jug and string to make him a subject of divine prophecy! We must object. Franklin was a member of a British colony at that time; and then, too, he alone was not the whole United States, even though he were a member of this republic at the time—which he was not. He experimented with his kite in 1752. This antedates the declaration of independence about 24 years! Yes, Franklin's theory of electricity was snatched up by other nations and used before the United States had birth!

All this claim that the U. S. is the two-horned beast of Rev. 13 is based on a "vision" of a woman who changed her theology between 1847 and 1851 on the sleep of the dead! This we know for we have her visions of both those dates; and there positively is no escape from this.

Let the Book stand! The Book says they worked together, and no amount of guess work can invalidate this divine statement. Latter-day phophets and prophetesses cannot change the Book. It still reads the same.--J. J. Schaumburg, in "Messiah's Advocate."

DIVINE COMMUNION

There is no possible way of finding comfort amid the providences that come to us in life but in an intimate and habitual communion with God. Much as we may desire to avoid providences so often of an afflictive and disciplinary character, our heavenly Father sees it wise to administer his government over us in a manner that often hides his love to our human thought. Doubtless in this way he would keep us from pride and vanity, and impress upon us absolute dependence in his guidance, instill a deeper religious conviction in our true life, and clarify our vision of spiritual things. But theorizing thus, as we often do, how few accept his way with unruffled composure, rejoicing that we are in his hands! Such blessed rest in God comes to us only through one well-trodden path--the holy path of prayer. We do not mean an approach to the mercy seat merely at stated times and in formal utterances, but a constant drawing near to him in the silent depths of devotion, in the soul's unuttered supplication, in the hourly spiritual contact of the human with the divine heart.

But this power to pause amid conflicting uncertainties, and let God give light upon the path in his own good time, is not the product of human philosophy. This ability to wait until he shall solve the problem belongs only to souls that are constantly closeted in his presence. Helping them to decide difficult questions is one of his ways of "rewarding openly."

And who will say this is not a rich reward for obeying our Lord's commands: "Enter into thy closet"? Can anything surpass such comfort as is found here? Toiling weary pilgrim, at the shore of the sounding sea, amid mountain steeps, beneath the broad canopy of the heavens at midnight, wherever thou art found, enter the inclosure of prayer and abide very near to him who "seeth in secret." O what safety is here!--Christian Advocate.

Remarks

In my last report I spoke of visiting in Iowa and speaking three times. I afterwards received a call to come back, if possible, and after consulting with Brother Newell it was decided I should go back; and the result was that at the close of the meeting, seven put on the sin covering name. The operator at the depot sent for his mother to come, he was so anxious for her to hear, and finally his father and mother both came. I put in the afternoon with them, and the result is, they are insisting I shall come to their town and hold a meeting. It could be almost stated before hand they would be baptized, as their son is now a member. Oh how the work increases. Two other churches are now calling, "Come over and help us." Some want to be immersed. So we have to go as fast as time and trains will permit. No doubt the bride is nearly complete. But who will be members is the most important question of all. Let every one be fully alive to his responsibility.

Almus Adams.

Keep Moving

Keep moving! That is life's secret all the way. When progress ceases, you begin to lose ground. When growth is at an end, decay begins. Do not let yourself think you know enough, even though your diploma is hanging framed upon the wall. Do not imagine you are good enough even though your acquaintances unite in speaking well of you. Keep moving! The day that shows no gain to your credit means loss.--Exchange.

Old Theory Exploded

I have known vast quantities of nonsense talked about bad men not looking you in the face. Don't trust that conventional idea. Dishonest people will stare you out of countenance any day in the week if there is anything to be got by that means.

Share It With Him

The truest help we can render to an afflicted man is not to take his burden from him, but to call out his best strength that he may be able to bear the burden.--Phillips Brooks.

DON'T FORGET THE HELPING FUND

We whose names are given below, believing it to be our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the manager of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. Those whose circumstances do not permit of the paying for the paper themselves should notify the manager, signifying their willingness to accept the paper, and it will be cheerfully sent from the proceeds of this fund.

EDITORIAL.

We have so much writing to do to keep The Restitution going that we cannot undertake the added burden of private correspondence. We have the will but find it impossible to execute our will.

After hearing, to our pleasure and edification, a most intelligent confession of faith on the part of Miss Heloise Crawford and Mrs. Mary McClure, on March 10th they were both baptized to share with Christ in his death, resurrection, and glorification. The presence of Sister McCave, of the Salem church, added to the joy of the meeting.

Announcement has just been received from Brother and Sister Ernest R. Drabenstott, of Huntington, Ind., that Paul Ernest Drabenstott, weighing nine and one-half pounds, came to their home March 7th, 1918. Mother and baby are doing well. The Editor heartily joins with many of our readers, who are personally acquainted with Brother and Sister Drabenstott, in warmest congratulations. We are also gratified to learn that Brother Drabenstott, who was caught in the draft net, has been placed in IV a, with the promise of non-combative service.

We wish to call the attention of our readers to the "Sunday School Lesson Leaf" in this issue. This is an average sample of a series of lessons that have appeared from time to time in The Restitution. These lessons are not only useful for Sunday School work but also for general study, and will be found a useful help and guide to all who are desirious of becoming better acquainted with the word of God. They cover a number of subjects which are all scripturally dealt with. The price of same is 10 cents per dozen, and in these last days should prove a boon to all believers.

Lesson VII of the "Bible Lesson" series will be ready to mail about the last week in March. The lesson is entitled "The Father and The Son." The unity of God together with the Sonship of Christ and his priestly office of Mediator and Advocate are scripturally elaborated. The world is blinded by Trinitarianism, and needs the eye-salve contained in this lesson; and the church of God is none too familiar with the priestly functions of Christ for the world and for the church, and needs its "pure mind stirred up" on this vital matter. We ask our readers to help us give this lesson a wide circulation in the world and also in the church. Both need the lesson.

CHRIST'S MESSAGE TO THE LAODICEAN CHURCH

"And unto the angel of the church of the Laodiceans write: These things saith the Amen, the faithful and true witness, the beginning of the creation of God: I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot. So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth. Because thou sayest, I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched, and miserable and poor, and blind and naked: I counsel thee to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayest be rich; and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed, and that the shame of thy nakedness do not appear; and anoint thine eyes with eyesalve, that thou mayest see. As many as I love, I rebuke and chasten: be zealous therefore, and repent. Behold, I stand at the door, and knock: if any man hear my voice, and open the door, I will come in to him, and will sup with him, and he with me. To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the spirit saith unto the churches" (Rev. 3:14-22).

I History of the Church

1. Six cities bore the name of Laodicea. This one on the Lycus in southern Phrygia near Colosse (Col. 4:13, 15, 16). Its earliest name was Diospolis (Pliny). Rebuilt and adorned by Antiochus II, king of Syria, who called it Laodicea after his wife Laodice, who afterwards poisoned him. Its commerce great; celebrated for wool rich in color and fine in texture; also oil, ointments, etc.

II Things in the Church which Christ Commends

1. ---------

III Things in the Church which Christ Condemns

1. "Neither cold nor hot"—lukewarm (vss. 15, 16; Acts 18:25; Rom. 12:11; Cant. 8:6; Luke 24:32; 7:36-47; 2 Pet. 2:20-22).

2. "Spue thee out of my mouth." Lukewarmness in the truth is as nauseous to God as tepid water is to us (Lev. 18:28; 20:22; Rev. 2:5; Jer. 48: 10, margin).

IV Means Used to Restore the Wretched Miserable, Poor, Blind, and Naked Laodiceans to Spiritual Life

1. He first removes mistaken ideas they had about themselves: they thought they were all right; he shows them they are all wrong! (vss. 17, 18).

2. He gives them over in love to rebukes and chastisements (vss. 18, 19; Mal. 3:2, 3; Prov. 3:12; Job 5:17; Heb. 12:6; 2 Chron. 33:11-13; Psa. 94:12; Isa. 38:13-16; Rev. 3:20; Cant. 5:2-6).

V The Promise

1. "Sit with me in my throne." The highest and most glorious of all God's promises (vs. 21; Matt. 19:28; Luke 22:29, 30; John 17:22, 24; 2 Tim. 2:12; 1 Kings 2:19; Matt. 20:21). Because

(a) Victory over lukewarmness would be very great, and would receive a correspondingly great reward.

(b) It is the seventh promise, the last promise made to the churches and those who have "ears to hear," consequently it gathers up all previous promises into itself, forming a climax.

(c) The promise is immediately followed by a vision of Christ and his church sitting on his throne (chapter 4).

COMMUNICATIONS

"They shall make known unto you all things which are done here" (Col. 4:9).

Brother L. G. Jaeger writes:

"For the past year or more we have passed some very anxious months. Mrs. Jaeger has been very sick, and for many weeks we feared that she would die. During the month of October she was in an unconscious condition, and the doctor said there was no hope of recovery; but our prayers and careful nursing have again restored her to sufficient strength to be up and wait on herself, for all of which we thank our heavenly Father from whom all blessings flow."

Brother Huggins:

Having nothing to do and not being able to keep still mentally, I will write you a few lines in relation to your notes on sermon "Christ's Message to the Sardian Church."

You say, "'White raiment', immortality with which the saints are 'clothed upon' at the return of Christ." And you emphasize the importance of making "it plain that the promise here is immortality." Your references for proof are lacking in value to prove the point. In Rev. 6:11 white robes are given to the "souls under the altar" before the judgment, as they are requested to wait for a little season before their reward, until others are killed as they were. In Rev. 19:8 we read: "And to her was granted that she should be arrayed in fine linen, clean and white: for the fine linen is the righteousness of saints."

I am eighty years old next May, and am partly confined to the house by the hardening of the arteries, so that when I exercise so that the circulation starts up, it hurts the nerves in the breast, so I have to stop. Last fall to pass the time I commenced to write a manuscript on the Revelation, and have completed it verse by verse to the end. And the first three chapters did not suit me exactly, and I rewrote them so as to conform to the last part of the book in construction. You know the first three chapters are a book by themselves. Now having two copies of the first three chapters, I will give you the one copy of said three chapters if you say you would like to see them. I do not know that I can have the work published. I am in good health, but can earn nothing, and living cost is doubled. I think you will find some new ideas in the three chapters. I have read many books, and studied the book thoroughly.

Yours in the one hope,

Geo. Francis.

We shall be glad to have Brother Francis send on his MS. for perusal.- Editor.

Dear Editor Restitution:

Please accept our heartfelt thanks to God for the weekly visits of our "dear old Restitution."

With its new departments for age and youth it is a "faithful messenger" to cheer us on our way. "The path of the just is as a shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day. As the cold of snow in the time of harvest, so is a faithful messenger to them that send him: for he refresheth the soul of his masters" (Prov. 4:18, 25:13). It grows better, not in size, but in material and soundness.

Brothers Geo. B. Alldridge and E. C. Watkins with that good suggestion of Dec. 11, 1917, have seemingly placed before us two classes as found in Mal. 3:15, 16: "And now we call the proud happy; yea, they that work wickedness are set up, yea, they that tempt God are even delivered. Then they that feared the Lord spake often one to another: and the Lord hearkened, and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name." "Now, therefore, fear the Lord, and serve him in sincerity and truth . . . And if it seem evil unto you to serve the Lord, choose you this day whom ye will serve; whether the gods which your fathers . . . . or the gods of the Amorites, in whose land ye dwell; but as for me and my house, we will serve the Lord" (Joshua 24:14, 15). So we earnestly desire to stand by "the faith" with the latter class as did Moses and Peter (Heb. 11:23-28; 1 Pet.4), and to be placed on your list of members.

My household consists of eleven members, five of whom were baptized by myself, and five younger children from five to thirteen years of age. We read and worship God twice a day and keep the passover once a week, as delivered by the apostle Paul from the head of all (1 Cor.5:6, 7; 11: 23-34).

We think that the management of The Restitution has never been better. The Fellowhelper's part of the page for the young are so appropriate. It reminds me of the time when I was converted to the way of life more perfectly by J. R. Ham, whose address was Donaldson, Hot Springs, Ark. He buried me with my Lord in baptism on the last day of December, 1878, after breaking the ice that was two inches thick in the North Mississippi. I then had the answer of a good conscience toward God, superior to what I had ever had before (1 Pet. 3:16, 21; Acts 19:5). I then acknowledged Jesus as the life-giver, and offered myself a candidate for the resurrection life (Acts 4:12; Rom. 6:5, 6).

Thanks to God for your series of "Bible Lessons on First Principles." No doubt you have taken Paul's admonition and Jesus' advice, "Meditate upon these things; give thyself wholly to them; that thy profiting may appear to all. Take heed unto thyself, and unto the doctrine; continue in them; for in doing this thou shalt both save thyself and them that hear thee' (1 Tim. 4:15, 16). So the grace of God "resteth upon you' (1 Pet. 4: 11, 14). Carnality is "a man of sin" so to speak, and must be destroyed ere God can have all the glory that is due him; and the judgment begins at the house of God (1 Pet. 4:17; 2 Thess. 1:3-8). Enclosed find two dollars for which please send me two dozen of your tracts and the balance place to my credit on The Restitution.

"Youth is full of sport; age's breath is short.
Youth is nimble; age is lame,
Youth is wild: age is tame."

"While I was with them I kept them in thy name" (John 17:11, 12). Amen. I have tried many times this winter to write for The Restitution but Job 21:6 and Psa. 55:5, 6 describe my condition. When it is cold weather I can scarcely write having been crippled badly in my right arm, so pray for us.

Your humble brother in hope of life,
R. A. Humphreys.

Lesson XXII

Divine Love

Memory Text

"And we have known and believed the love that God hath to us. God is love; and he that dwelleth in love dwelleth in God. and God in him" (1 John 4:16).

1. "But thou, O Lord, art a God full of compassion and gracious, longsuffering, and plenteous in mercy and truth" (Psa. 86:15; 103 8, 9; 145:8, 9).

2. "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have everlasting life" (John 3:16: Rom. 5:8; 1 John 4:9, 10; 1 John 3:16).

3. 'We love him because he first loved us" (1 John 4:19).

4. "Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God. with all thy heart, with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is first and great commandment. And the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets" (Matt. 22:37-40; John 13:34; 15:12, 17; Rom. 13:8-10).

5. "Though I have the gift of prophecy, and understand all mysteries, and all knowledge; and though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains and have not charity (love, R. V.) I am nothing' (1 Cor. 13:2, whole chapter).

6. "No man hath seen God at any time. If we love one another God dwelleth in us, and his love is perfected in us" (1 John 4:12).

7. "Beloved, let us love one another: for love is of God; and every one that loveth is born (begotten, R. V.) of God, and knoweth God. He that loveth not knoweth not God; for God is love" (1 John 4:7, 8).

8. "We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother abideth in death" (1 John 3:14).

9. "Who shall separate us from the love of Christ? . . . . I am persuaded that neither death nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord" (Rom. 8:35-39).

Practical Truths

It is possible to serve God through a sense of fear of his power, or of adoration of his majesty. The only worthy service is that which springs from love. God is not a tyrant; he is not a cold unfeeling being. He is love. Love is divine, not human. Men learn love only as they know God. Love is the motive power of the gospel. Jesus in every word and deed was an embodiment of love. Where love is no law is needed. Without love all other service is without beneficial effect, because inspired by selfish motives. Love is the opposite of selfishness, and as love grows selfishness dies. As we manifest love in our lives we prove that we are filled with the Spirit of God. Love in our lives is proof of Divine begettal for everlasting life.

Notes on the Lesson

God is Love.--Everything in nature and in the gospel proves that the chief attribute of Deity is beneficence, and that all things work together for good.

1. Full of Compassion.--A being who is filled with love and compassion and tender mercies will deal gently with the erring. It is impossible to harmonize such Scriptures with the notions that God will eternally torment those who disobey his law; or that he will destroy in the day of Judgment the ignorant who have never learned of him.

2. Gave His Son.--Jesus, the Son of God, who died for our sins and rose for our justification, is the chief example of the love of God. It was while we were sinners and enemies that God so loved us (Rom. 5:7, 8). Mark the lesson. It was the love of the Father that sent the Son, not as some teach —the love of the Son that persuaded the angry Father. The Son was a representative of God's love and did God's will (John 6:3, 9, 40, 57; 12:49, 50; 14:10).

Might Not Perish.—But for God's love all would perish because all are sinners, and the wages, or natural effect of sin is death. Love has provided a way of escape.

3. The Motive for Love.—Like begets like. Love begets love. We cannot love God because he is great or because he is glorious. Not because we have learned that he will give us something; that would be a selfish motive. We love because we are beloved.

4. The Perfect Law.—Laws are for restraint of those who would do wrong. Man's first duty is to his Creator, and his second is to his fellow-man. He who loves God keeps his commandments, and he who loves his neighbor does him no harm. If all mankind would obey these commandments nothing more would be required. The greater comprehends the less. The law of Christ fills up the requirements of the law of Moses and goes beyond it.

5. Love the Test of True Service.—Unless the Spirit of Christ is in us we are none of his. Without the love of God shed abroad in our hearts our Christian lives will be barren and unfruitful. If we are indeed children of God we must grow into his likeness.

6. God Dwelleth in Us.— Love is from God—it is not natural to man. Faith and hope are human attributes, but we cannot manifest love without some knowledge of God. In this way God can dwell in us, and we can work the works of God as we do deeds of love.

7. Begotten of God.—Love is a proof that we have been begotten by the incorruptible seed, and that the new creature in Christ Jesus is alive. That which is begotten of Spirit is spirit, and he who manifests the fruits of love gives evidence of godliness.

Knoweth God.—To know, or get acquainted with God is the chief end of life. It is life eternal (John 17:3). The time is coming when all shall know him (Heb. 8:11, Jer. 31:34; Hab. 2:14; Isa. 11:10), and in that day love will fill every heart.

8. Evidence of New Life.—The manifestation of the love of God by mortal men is evidence of the beginning of the new life in changing our natures. That work of the indwelling of God which begins with the planting of the incorruptible seed at our begettal by the Spirit will work with transforming power, and in the day of his coming we shall be made like our Lord (2 Cor. 3:18; 1 John 3: 2, 3; Eph. 4:15).

9. Inseparable Bond of Union.—Love is a golden chain which binds together the Father, the Son, and the disciples. By this means alone can there be "Trinity in Unity" (John 17:11, 21-23). The unity of spirit, and that the spirit of divine love by means of which we dwell in God and God dwells in us. This bond of union no other power in heaven above or earth beneath or the waters under the earth can break.

Suggestive Topics and Questions

1. General Evidences.—Apart from the gospel can you name any evidences of God's love and mercy (Matt 5:45; Acts 17:24, 27) ? Would it be possible to love a person and at the same time cause them needless suffering ? Can our God have love for man and at the same time doom him to a life of eternal misery ?

2. Special Evidences.—What is the greatest special evidence of God's love ? What does the Son of God save us from ? Could man claim eternal life as a right (Rom. 5:8; 6:23) ? What other special evidence have we of God's love (Heb. 1:1, 2; 2 Pet. 1:4; Rom. 15:4) ? What relationship has the Christian that is an evidence of God's love (2 Cor. 6:18; Gal. 3:27) ?

3. Divine Unity.—In what manner can we have God dwell in us ? Can we in the same way be said to be in God ? Where is the source of true love ? If all men loved God and their fellow-men, would they need any restraining laws ? What spirit controlled all of our Savior's actions ? If we follow the spirit of love can we be said to have the spirit of Christ (Rom. 8:9) ?

4. Love and Life Eternal.—Is there life eternal for any who are not related to God ? What evidence can we have in this life that we have received part of the Divine nature ? What is the test by which we can know that we have been begotten again for the spiritual life ? What is it to "know God" ? What results will follow when all men "know God" ?

CHRIST A UNIQUE MAN

It is sometimes claimed that Jesus' victory over temptation is a source of encouragement to fallen man, in the sense that he, a man made in all points like unto his brethren, overcame, therefore I can overcome. But is this true ? Jesus' victory over temptation was without the slightest misstep, without the slightest sin either consciously or unconsciously. If his victory over temptation is taken as the pattern of fallen man's, then is man not left without the slightest gleam of hope ? Is not the nature of his victory over temptation proof of his perfect, indwelling, God-given power against the forces of evil and of man's lack of this power ? Does it not make man admit his own fallen, helpless condition and Jesus the only Savior ? Does it not prevent us from interpreting the fact that Jesus was made in all points like his brethren to mean that he was on a level in every way with fallen man ? He was surely above fallen man, else he could not have gained the victory over temptation as no other man has been able to gain it. Without discussing the means by which God made him superior to the rest of mankind, let us all admit his superiority from his birth, else we are without a Savior.

Temptation is the testing of a person with the purpose and desire of making him yield and do wrong. Testing is the means of finding out what a man is with the hope that he will stand the strain, for the purpose of knowing what he can do, how far he can be trusted, and helping him to be better and more useful. God and good men never tempt, but test, and transform bad men's temptations into trials and tests.—Sel. by J. E. H.

The Fine Art of Smiling

Why do we not always smile when we meet a fellow being? That is the true recognition which ought to pass from soul to soul. Little children do this involuntarily. The honest-hearted peasant does it. It is the magical sunlight all through that simple land, the perpetual greeting on the right hand or the left between strangers as they pass each other, never without a smile. This, then, is the "fine art of smiling"—like all fine art, true art, perfection of art, the simplest following of nature.

Memory Verses: Micah 6:8; Titus 2:13,14

Golden Text: Phil. 2:4, 5

VIEWPOINT—THAT'S ALL

It's little things that make us pessimistic;
We bubble up with hatred all supreme;
We face the world in attitude that's fistic,
And swear that life is but a ribald dream.

It's little things that make us optimistic;
We wake up in the morning full of joy;
We find the world is good and altruistic,
And every nugget shines without alloy.

Some people think they live by just existing;
They never see the grandeur of the sky;
They spend three-fourths of life in mere encysting,
And then some day they lie in bed and die.

And men there are who live in criticising;
They like to see you wince beneath the blow;
Their chiefest joy in life is minimizing—
They never see the good things as they go.

And thus we pass in life with dual feelings;
We never try to find things as they are;
While some men try to win by crooked dealings,
Still others hitch their wagons to a star.

Don't aim to go through life by always shoving;
Don't try to push the other man away;
But try sometimes—just try—to be more loving
In dealing with your fellows day by day.

Kind Words

Kind words are the music of the world. They have a power which seems to be beyond natural causes. There scarcely is a power on earth equal to them for it seems almost as if they could do what in reality God alone can do, namely, soften the hard and angry hearts of men. Even quarrels give way to kind words, for an unforgiving heart is a rare monster. Words have a power of their own for good or evil; hence it is that an unkind word rankles in the heart longer than an angry gesture, nay, oftener than a blow.

Kind words are revelations from heaven unravelling complicated misunderstandings and softening the hardened convictions of years.

Why, then, are we ever else than kind? Kind in words! There are some difficulties. It is hard for a clever man to be kind in his words. He has a temptation—a temptation bordering on the irristible—to say clever things. There generally is a drop of acid or bitterness in them, and so, on the whole, to say clever things of others is hardly ever without sin. There is something in genius which is analogous to a sting. Its sharpness, its delicacy, its pain, its poison, genius has all these things as well as a sting. A man who lays himself out to amuse never is a safe man for a friend or even an acquaintance. He is not a man whom anyone really loves or respects. No one was ever drawn nearer to God by sarcasm. Our Lord's words should be our model.—Faber.

Happy Thoughts

As in this life we live and do,
Remember this as you go through,
That kind words live, so never say
Aught at all that would blight the day.

Do The Good Deed Now

Yesterday is behind us,
Tomorrow is unborn,
But today is now,
And every hour counts.

What are we going to do with them? If we so wish we can use them in making of ourselves a nuisance to every one about us, and in the end even hating ourselves; or we can spend them in the service of our fellow-man, reflecting the love of God as displayed in Christ Jesus our Lord, and as a reward receiving the commendation of our God the Father.

What does this mean to you?

It matters not what we were yesterday. It makes no difference to us what our father was, or what he did, for our concern is with the present. "Now is the accepted time." Our responsibility rests with ourselves. We can not share any praise nor should we carry any of the shame earned by our ancestors, if we desire the well-done of the Master when we meet him "face to face." We must use every moment of our time in his service, relieving distress where ever it may be found, living a true, righteous life through faith in his name. As it is written, "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this, To visit the fatherless and the widows in their affliction, and to keep himself unspotted from the world."

What does this mean to you?

And concerning tomorrow? we might have great hopes and expectations. Our intentions concerning our future might be pure, lofty, refined, and spiritual, but as tomorrow never comes, our duty is with today. There is an old saying, one which is as true as it is old: "Never put off till tomorrow what can be done today." There is only one time to do a thing and that is NOW. Our hopes, our expectations, our intentions concerning the future may be of the best; but what do they amount to if we never accomplish them? The only things we are sure of are those things we already have. The only good we ever will receive credit for is the good already done. The good intention must be worked into good deeds before they are worth anything, and the only time we can work is today, now. Therefore if we wish to enter into the rest provided for the children of God, we will today "let our light so shine before men, that they will see our good works, and glorify our Father which is in heaven." Tomorrow may be too late.

Yesterday is behind us, tomorrow is unborn, therefore

"Boast not thyself of tomorrow: for thou knowest not what a day may bring forth."

What does this mean to you?

Our Weekly Puzzle

My first is in test, but not in exam.
My second's in animal, but not in lamb.
My third's in house, but not in flat.
My fourth's in gown, but not in hat.
My whole is cold, glistening, and white,
Beautiful, soft; to some a delight.

This word is used twenty-three times in the Bible, and in one of the Proverbs thus:

"As . . . . in summer, and as rain in harvest, so honor is not seemly for a fool."

"Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not" (Luke 18:16).

Investigation often proves that what seems impossible is an established fact.

To give heart and mind to God so that they are ours no longer, to do good without being conscious of it, to pray ceaselessly and without effort as we breathe, to love without stopping to reflect upon our feelings, such is the perfect forgetfulness of self which casts us upon God as a babe rests upon its mother's breast.

STUDIES

No. 1

Flora A. Wood

"Ye are not your own; for ye are bought with a price: therefore glorify God in your body and in your spirit, which are God's" (1 Cor. 6:19, 20).

Ye are not your own. If we are not our own to whom do we belong? To Jesus, the Son of God, inasmuch as he has purchased us, paying as the price his own blood or life (Acts 20:28). We belong to Christ and Christ belongs to God being God's son by begettal. We then are God's both body and spirit. This being so we cannot lawfully do the things which we desire, but those which God and Christ command. We are absolutely under law to Christ.

As only those purchased belong to the purchaser, of necessity the ones bought are separated from those who do not become servants of Christ. Therefore we find the first command given us to be, "Come out from among them (who do not belong to God) and be separate" (2 Cor.6:17). Does this mean absolutely what it says, or may we be in some things with the world? What does the word separate mean? Here are some of the definitions given by Webster: to disunite, to divide, to set apart from a number for a particular service. What disunites a servant of Christ from the world? Obedience to the gospel. What divides or comes between the saints and the world? The system of truth which binds the servant to his divine Master. What are the things from which we must be disunited? Are they not every thing which is of the world and which belongs to the world? "Love not the things that are in (or of) the world" (John 2:14). I wonder, in spite of what some have written, if one would dare to say dancing is of the Lord Jesus? How is it with card-playing, the use of intoxicating drinks, the filthy tobacco habit. Are they of the world or of God? We all know they belong to the unclean things of the world. We cannot join with those who do these things because we are bond servants and our Master forbids us to do so.

Then there are other things founded by the world and recognized and upheld by the laws of this age which in themselves are not to be classed with the above mentioned things because their purpose is to do good and mitigate suffering. May we who have come out from the world and are separate from it, not go back just a little way into the world and join ourselves to those who are organized with the avowed object of doing good? One of these organizations to which our attention has been called in a large measure in these days of trouble is the Red Cross. Now we are not in any way questioning the good that this body of men and women are doing, on the contrary we do think as long as the world is subject to war it is a necessary adjunct. The question we are asking is, may those who have been disunited from the world and the things of the world cleave again to the world in any way? What says the word of God?

All who have not obeyed the gospel, Paul declares, are without Christ, are aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, strangers from the covenants of promise, having no hope, without God in the world (Eph. 2:12). This is the condition of all who are citizens of the world. We as saints have changed our citizenship from this world to the world (or age) to come. We have given our allegiance to an immortal king who is in heaven. Bear in mind what Paul has written of those who are of the world. If we join ourselves to them we become one of them. The word of God recognizes but two classes, the world, and those called out from the world. We cannot belong to both classes. We must be either in one or the other. Neither can we serve two masters, we are either servants of God or servants of the world. "To whom ye obey his servants are ye."

In looking up the history of the Red Cross we find it was founded for assisting the wounded in time of war. We also read that this organization was international and that several years ago (before the present war) Turkey objected to the sign of the red cross and the red crescent was substituted in place of the cross for that country. We read that the American Red Cross was founded for relief of pestilence, famine, flood, fire and the calamities of war which are national in extent. This body was incorporated under the laws of the District of Columbia and as such is of the world and belongs to the world. Those who do not belong to this world, who are not in the world as one of it but have been called out of it and commanded to be separate from it, certainly from the teaching of God's word, cannot join themselves voluntarily to this order of the world without being untrue to their allegiance to our Lord. "Come out from among them, and be ye separate, saith the Lord" (2 Cor. 6:17). "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers" (2 Cor. 6:14).

But, says one, are we not to do good? This brings us to the third definition of the word separate, previously stated: "to set apart from a number for a particular service." Could anything be more emphatic of the saint's calling? "Set apart from a number." Come out of her (all things of the world) my people. "For a particular service." What is the particular work given to saints? Space forbids entire quotation but read carefully the following Scriptures, John 6:28, 29. Here is the beginning of our service. Has the world made this their starting point ? Let us therefore cast off the works of darkness (the world is covered with dense darkness) and walk as children of light. Here is one broad command, surely broad enough for all. Do good unto all men (but) especially unto them who are of the household of faith. Here is another Scripture I wish to place beside the above. It is found in 1 Tim. 5:8, "If any provide not for his own . . . . he hath denied the faith and is worse than an infidel."

What is the truth taught in the words from God's book ? A man's work and care and love belongs first to his family. Even an infidel recognizes the truth of this. A saint's first care, after his family, is the household of faith. Nearly all the members of his body are poor in this world's goods, are obscure, unknown to the world (1 Cor. 1:26). There is an abundant opportunity to do good in the church of God. Our preachers, our papers, the isolated ones who are hungering and thirsting for words of comfort and cheer, the sick, the afflicted, the widow, the orphan, all are with us in our own family. How greatly we need more laborers in the vineyard. Brethren, when we have done all that these things call us to do for God's people, then if we have time and means we must do good to those outside, but as a man's family must receive of his care and time and means so must the household of faith be the first care of its members.

Now I am quoting from letters from the brethren. One said to a poor, sorrowing disciple, "I would love to write you a letter, but I have not time." Another said, "The work I do for the paper is mostly done in time I steal from sleep." I could multiply the sayings but these are sufficient to illustrate. If we do not have the time to do good to God's children how can we have time for those not of God ? Every man's work shall be made manifest by fire when the Lord shall be revealed (1 Cor. 3:13). May we then be remembered according to the words of the spirit found in 1 Thess. 1:8.

In conclusion I shall select two quotations from those who have written on this subject: "Individual duty of charity is one thing; government controlled, military auxiliary societies are another"; and do as good children of God, not as worldly organization. Let our light shine to reflect the glory of God, and not the works of men.

THE HOLY SPIRIT

Prove All Things: Hold Fast That Which is Good

Reply to Editor's criticism appearing in July issue.

The Editor has kindly consented to my making reply to his remarks in July issue, pages 91-93.

1. It certainly is not easy to agree with the Editor's comment regarding the "false deduction" alluded to. To quote the Editor's own words, he says: "There is no phase of Bible teaching where the Holy Spirit (or Spirit of God) is not in evidence." What other deduction could be arrived at, than that the Editor regards the two terms equivalent ? It is also clear that he considers omnipresence is a chief characteristic, by his quotation of Psa. 130:7. On this latter point, however, no comment is forthcoming. A careful reading of my article in the April issue will give repeated evidence of my belief "that while the Spirit of God is 'one spirit,' there are diversities of manifestations."

2. I am in full accord with the Editor's remarks that the subject is a difficult one and requires reverence and patience in "handling."

The main point in arriving at a conclusion concerning a subject about which every item cannot be fully explained until further knowledge is gained, is to get at some one fact which is indisputable: Having got that, you can be sure that truth is on your side, and can afford to await explanations of difficulties, knowing that they will come in due course.

3. Our desire in studying this subject is to endeavor to find by friendly exchange what these facts are, and on the basis of scriptural evidence form our own conclusions. I have no wish to talk about my own or another's "logic" or "grammar," or even to unnecessarily call attention to these; but it seems to me that Scripture is more than ordinarily careful concerning them, and we do well to bear in mind that fact. We do well, also, to notice that the nature of evidence varies—some is susceptible of more than one interpretation; others admit of no possible alternative, and it is therefore both inconsistent and illogical to attempt to rule the latter by the former.

4. Our brother's remarks, on pages 91 and 93, appear very much like a denial of the statement of the Lord Jesus, that the Holy Spirit "proceedeth from the Father" (John 15:26).

How the evidence of angels being God's representatives in the past, and his ministers now sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation, affects the case as represented by Mr. Weir is difficult to see, especially as he acknowledges they are "sustained" by the Spirit of God. Angels came to God's people in actual person in times past, and Paul tells us they are now "spirits sent forth to minister for them who shall be heirs of salvation." If they are sustained by the Spirit of God, then surely God does the work by them through the spirit. The reader will doubtless recall passages in Scripture where mention being made of the Spirit, God himself is said to do the act.

5. The quotations from Kitto and Origen regarding the correctness of "Advocate," "Comforter" or "Helper" make little difference either way to the argument, the term "helper" being appropriately applicable in either case, and neither proves nor disproves personality.

It is strange Mr. Weir should quote part of John 14:18 in proof of a personal Comforter coming to the earth in place of Christ, for if we finish the quotation it reads, "I (Jesus) will come unto you."

6. The Editor's remarks as to time (pages 92, 93) are of some force, but only so far as that he appears to assume that I consider the New Testament the only fulfilment of the promise. Most promises in the Bible—especially prophetic, have varying degrees of culmination, the complete fulfilment embodying a series of events, often blending with each other with ever increasing volume. So here (Acts 1:4, and Acts 2:1-4) as quoted by the Editor, are undoubtedly part fulfilment; but where in those verses there is evidence "full and conclusive" of personality respecting the Holy Spirit is past comprehension. The evident conclusion sems certainly the other way, as any unbiased person will admit. No personality is mentioned or described. The Revised Version (see margin) says in the Holy Spirit. In any case it is not possible to baptize one person either "with" or "in" another (see page 52, fact 8; also section 3, in present article).

7. Re the baptismal formula (Matt. 28:19). This passage has been contested, even by "orthodoxy," some even going the length of denying its authenticity. This, however, is quite unnecessary. The Editor himself acknowledges that the Son is "filled" with the Spirit, and that the Spirit is "common to both" (only, however, by gift from the Father), facts in themselves entirely subversive of personality. The Father and Son are truly real persons—no true Christian disputes this—but the personality of the Holy Spirit is only inferred by the Editor. Here we would call attention once more to page 52, last two sentences in second paragraph, and again ask the Editor to notice this, also fact 2 on page 53.

The Editor asks the question: "If the third agent be impersonal, why name it at all ?" A reasonable answer can be given fully covering his objections. We are repeatedly told "God is in heaven," that heaven is God's "dwelling place," and that Jesus Christ is there too, awaiting the time of his return—thus (we say it with all reverence) they can only be omnipresent with the saints on earth and hold communion with them, through the Holy Spirit (Psa. 139:7, etc), hence both the suitability and necessity of its inclusion. We challenge Mr. Weir to produce proof from Scripture that omnipresence is not characteristic of the Holy Spirit of God ! Again, we speak with reverence. If the Holy Spirit as a personality can be omnipresent, then he has powers superior to the great Creator himself. The fact may be startling, but I ask the reader not to lightly pass it by. Luke 1:35 clearly teaches the Holy Spirit is the "power of the Highest." What are the Editor's words on page 93, but a tantamount denial ?

8. The next remark I pass over, and now come to consider Acts 13:2, etc. With all deference to our esteemed Editor, I am persuaded that if a census were taken of "most professing Christians" (though majorities are not always safe) few would be found to favor the Editor's view that the Holy Spirit actually spake. If pointedly asked the question they would admit it was their belief that some man present did the speaking. Let the reader turn to Acts 1:2 and 4. How did Jesus "give commandment" through the Holy Spirit ? Did Jesus or did the Holy Spirit speak ? If the Holy Spirit spake audibly, we know of no revocation since, and the claims of Mr. Dowie, Mrs. Eddy, Mrs. White and others are not without foundation, nor is their denial of the final authority of Scripture inconsistent; and I still entertain doubt as to whether our brother would push such an outcome to its logical conclusion. It would be just as reasonable to contend for the personality of "Wisdom." Indeed, the line of argument our brother adopts would almost demand it.

9. The remark concerning materialism is of frequent use by some writers but, for myself (I do not speak for others), I have generally found it used to throw dust in eyes of persons less informed, and I am sorry the Editor has seen fit to use it, especially as so far as this instance goes, the "materialistic" idea is certainly his. What does any man know of anything apart from material organization ? Again, who among us is able to say that spirit is immaterial ?

10. Some of my remarks I know are critical, but no personalities are intended. I have strictly sought to avoid such. We can be plain with each other in our language, and yet full of brotherly love in our mutual desire for truth.

R. H. Judd.

Reply to Brother Judd's Article by the Editor of "The Student"

The foregoing is the third effort by Mr. Judd in "The Student" to prove that the "Holy Spirit, wherever referred to is the same throughout Scripture (except in manifestation)" (April Student, page 53 par. 2).

To the first article an editorial note was appended, saying: "With much of our contributor's matter we cordially agree, but we cannot accept his denial that Christ promised to send a personal 'Holy Spirit,' as a 'Comforter' to his sorrowing disciples after his own departure. Our contributor admits the sending of the promised Comforter, but holds that the sending of the New Testament is what Christ meant" (p. 56).

Then follows our alternative view, with evidences in its support; wherein we take the ground that the promised "Comforter" is necessarily a person, whose official title is "The Holy Spirit"—a different use of the phrase "Holy Spirit" from that to which Mr. Judd insists on applying it exclusively.

Now let it be noted that we are agreed as to the "Holy Spirit" or "Spirit of God" being the "power of the Most High"—an all-pervading effluence from his Person—the instrument by which "all things" have been created and are sustained, and in its nature impersonal; but we differ as to whether this is the only sense in which the phrase "Holy Spirit" is used in the Scriptures. Mr. Judd says: "Yea, it is the only sense." We say "Nay," for the Lord Jesus prior to his crucifixion promised the sorrowing disciples to send them 'another Comforter'—the 'Holy Spirit,' and this 'Comforter,' we contend, is a Person; for the words of Jesus concerning him clearly denote personality, —thus: "He shall not speak from himself: but what things soever he shall hear, these shall he speak—and he shall declare unto you the things that are to come" (John 16:13). An impersonal "effluence" or "power" cannot, of course, "hear" or "speak."

This "Comforter" is also styled the "Spirit of truth, which proceedeth ("or goeth forth," margin, R. V.) from the Father." By making the term "proceedeth" identical in meaning with "effluent," some argue that the "Spirit of truth" is, therefore, impersonal; but this is unsound exegesis, for the two words do not necessarily have the same meaning. To "proceed" is, literally, to "go on, or forward." On the other hand, "effluent" is, "flowing forth or out" (Standard Dictionary). The literal meaning of "proceedeth," then, agrees better with the personal than the impersonal view, hence, as a word, it cannot be of service to the latter.

Let us now try how it fits into the "personal" plea: "Angels are spirits"—i. e., Spirit beings; some, at least, of whom "Stand in the presence of God" (Luke 1:19). One of these celestial courtiers is chosen by the "Most High," and entitled "The Holy Spirit"—Gr. Hagios pneuma, i. e., "Set apart, or separated, Spirit." Then, having potentised him with "Spirit" effluent from his own Person, sends him forth as his Representative, in place of Jesus Christ, to minister unto his followers during his absence.

The first of these "ministrations," apparently, was the Pentecostal "outpouring"; not of the "Paraclete," or "Comforter," personally; but of that "Divine Spirit" with which he himself had been "potentised" (as above described) and was authorized to communicate to others when, and as, the occasion might require. The plea, prominent in the articles we are replying to, that the pouring out of "God's Spirit," predicted by Joel and quoted by Peter (Acts 2:16), could not have taken place if the Holy Spirit were a person, is thus answered and shown to be unavailing.

Probably the function of the "angels" has not received the attention it deserves. Had their place in the world been more closely studied, there would have been no such opposition as this to the views we are now presenting. We read that "Not unto the angels did God subject the world to come" (Heb. 2:5). It is a reasonable inference from this that the present world has been subjected to them. Nor are we dependent on this inference alone, for we know that many leading events, such as the creation of man; the destruction of Sodom; the incident of the burning bush; the giving of the law to Moses on Sinai; and the announcement and birth of Jesus were all transacted by, or through angels. The long list of other angelic appearances, more or less frequent, from Genesis to Revelation, is all but conclusive proof that the present world is under the jurisdiction of angels. On the contrary, the "world to come" is to be administered by Christ and his saints: "Know ye not that ye shall judge angels," says Paul (1 Cor. 6:3). Read also chapter 15:25-28.

All these things considered, then, it seems to us most befitting that a holy angel would be equipped by the Father with divine power and authority; and placed next to the Son as Chief Administrator of the interest of his Church, and also the affairs of the Domain of which he is the born "heir," until the time arrives when he shall "take to himself his great power and reign" (Rev. 11:17; Dan. 7:27). This also would account for the Chief Administrator's official name appearing in the baptismal formula—indicating the threefold authority by which converts became entitled to the privileges of "Church fellowship."

Let us now look briefly at what Mr. Judd says the "Paraclete" or "Comforter" is. On page 55 of April "Student" he writes: "The Old Testament is one Comforter, the New Testament is another Comforter." From this, then, it follows that, as the "Paraclete" or "Comforter" is the "Holy Spirit" (John 14:26), Mr. Judd thus makes the "Holy Spirit" and the New Testament identical, or (to adopt his own words) "one and the same." It would not be incorrect, then, to have the "baptismal formula" read "Into the name of the Father and of the Son and of the New Testament!" Moreover, wherever "Holy Spirit" occurs, New Testament may be substituted for it, unless something in the context forbids such exchange.

Again, he asserts that the "Spirit of God" became the "Holy Spirit" when definitely set apart for carrying on the work of God's Holy servant Jesus (p. 55), but he offers no evidence to prove this, or to determine when it took place. The first appearance of the phrase in the New Testament is in Matt. 1:18; but it is found thrice in the Old Testament (Psa. 51:11; Isa. 63:10, 14). In none of these O. T. passages, however, does it appear to have been definitely set apart for carrying on the work of Jesus, such an idea is largely conjectural.

It will now be seen that the foregoing explanations have disposed of most of the points raised in his present rejoinder; and that a large portion of what he has had to say throughout the discussion is practically wasted effort, partly owing to the unduly restricted stand taken by him regarding the "Holy Spirit"; and, on the other hand, the extravagant freedom he exercises with reference to its "manifestation," when necessary for his own purpose; for it is absurdly extreme, in view of the language of Jesus, to say that the "New Testament" is the "Holy Spirit" as "Paraclete," i. e., "Comforter," "Helper," "Advocate," to which he referred.

In the July "Student," pp. 92, 93, we commented at some length on the "Paraclete," citing Kitto in support of our view, that Jesus, in using the phrase "another Paraclete," teaches by implication that he had been himself their "Paraclete" or "Helper" in the past, and would be while he remained: but on leaving would send "another" to take his place. Mr. Judd now passes over Kitto's remarks as quite unimportant, saying that they make little difference either way to the argument. But this is where he errs; for they properly make this the crux of the problem; and, until this is discerned, and the bearing of Christ's words on the persons to whom he was speaking is perceived, a proper understanding cannot be reached, for it would be ridiculous to pretend that they personally could participate in the promised "comfort" or "help," if it was not to be forthcoming till the first New Testament appeared! The fact that the disciples obeyed Christ's charges "not to depart from Jerusalem, but to wait for the promise of the Father which, said he, ye have heard of me, for John truly baptized with water; but ye shall be baptized with the Holy Spirit not many days hence" (Acts 2:5), shows that they took his words in the explicit sense; and they were not mistaken for the fulfilment ocurred at Pentecost a few days later.

Our remarks in the July "Student" on this seem to have impressed Mr. Judd somewhat, for he now admits that, "The Editor's remarks as to time (pp. 92, 93) are of some force, but only so far as that he appears to assume that I consider the New Testament is the only fulfilment of the promise," etc.

Our answer is, that the Editor was not at liberty to think or act for Mr. Judd. What we quoted, and are now reviewing, is his summing up and conclusion of his original discussion of the subject. If it was not final, it should have been made so before being sent for publication on so serious a subject. The qualifying he now attempts could not be done by anyone but himself; and, at any rate, it in no way helps his case. He acknowledges that "Acts 1:4 and Acts 2:1-4, as quoted by the Editor, are undoubtedly part fulfilment." We, on the contrary, claim that these two passages register, practically, a complete fulfilment of what we are at present discussing, namely, the sending of the "Paraclete"—the "Holy Spirit."

That the New Testament, as a book, contains records of many other highly important matters, as well as others less so, and which cannot by a strictly exact use of language, be put forward as "The Paraclete"—"The Holy Spirit" no one can deny. In setting up the New Testament as "The Paraclete," then, Mr. Judd has been employing the well known form of figure called "Synecdoche"—putting the container for the contained—the whole for a part. But this will not work, for it is manifestly untrue, hence the theory is valueless.

The Bible—Old Testament and New Testament—is the Emporium of God's word to man and, when "handled aright," is "profitable for teaching, for reproof, for correction, for instruction which is in righteousness; that the man of God may be complete, furnished completely unto every good work" (2 Tim. 3:16).

But, on the other hand, irreparable harm may be done by poorly qualified, but persistent overconfident persons, when they undertake to expound its mysteries; hence the value of Paul's admonition—"Give diligence to present thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, handling aright the word of truth."

FOR THE BEREAN COLUMN

Dear Ones in Christ:

In these days so full of peril and trouble what a comfort it is to know that "our redemption draweth nigh" (Luke 1:28). There are so many around us who rush blindly on, without hope and without that joy which the world can not give. If each child of God could turn one sinner from the error of his way, what rejoicing it would cause in the time of havest. True, we cannot all preach a sermon, write a book, or do any great work, but we can do our small duties well, and keep our light burning at all times. If we despise not the day of small things and submit ourselves to the mighty hand of God; working humbly for him, he may exalt us in due season. How little we, as God's children, should care for the exalted places of this world: but Oh to stay in our humble places, rejoicing in the thought of an exalted position given by him who has power, dominion, and authority for ever! Is it not worth our constant efforts?

How we are comforted by the thought that during our time of work and waiting we may cast our cares upon him, knowing that he careth for us (1 Pet. 5:6:7).

May the Lord direct our hearts into the love of God and into the patient waiting for Christ, is the wish of your sister in hope.

DON'T FORGET THE HELPING FUND

We whose names are given below, believing it to be our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the manager of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. Those whose circumstances do not permit of the paying for the paper themselves should notify the manager, signifying their willingness to accept the paper, and it will be cheerfully sent from the proceeds of this fund.

A Broken Lot

Little Gwennie felt it her duty to entertain a man who had been called in to do some carpenter work, and began by asking if he had a papa and mama. He said yes. Then she asked if he had any brothers or any sisters. He replied by saying that he had three half-brothers and three half-sisters. After looking at him for a moment intently she said: "Are you the only whole one there was?"

Qualified for a Fight

"It seems odd to me that Cain should have been the victor in the quarrel with his brother."

"Why so?"

"Because it was the brother who was distinctly the Abel-bodier man."

Read Up Bill

"How did Bill happen to be arrested?"

"Left his car in the street all night without complying with the biblical injunction."

"Didn't know the Bible made any ruling on the subject,"

"Oh, yes. It says, 'Let your light shine.'"

EDITOR'S VISIT AT CANTON, OHIO

March the 9th we answered a telephone call and found ourselves talking with Brother W. C. Heacock, of Canton, Ohio. He said there were a few friends interested in the truth in Canton, and requested us to come and perfect their knowledge in the gospel. We set things in order at home as best we could, and left for Canton on the following Wednesday, where we arrived in due time. When we reached the city we went at once to the home of Brother and Sister Heacock, had dinner, rested awhile, and then entered upon the work among the interested friends.

Readers of The Restitution will recall a report made some time since in its columns that Sister Moses, of Cleveland, had removed to Canton. Later we had the pleasure of reporting the obedience of Brother and Sister Rader. These additions made it possible for Brother and Sister Heacock to start meetings to commemorate the Lord's death and to exhort each other to hold fast the hope of his coming again. Every first day these few believers have met and celebrated the Lord's supper. Brethren who "eat the flesh of the Son of Man, and drink his blood" have the promise of life, the Lord's presence "even to the consumation of the age," and many other blessings from the Head of the church. The few names in Canton thus kept themselves in the truth and in the love of God, and in return for this obedience God filled them with divine blessing until they had "not room enough to receive it" (Mal. 3:10). They had enough for themselves and to spare. In an effort to arrest the attention of others that they might share in the freedom of the truth Brother and Sister Heacock and Brother and Sister Rader got busy in speaking the truth to their neighbors, and it can be said, much to the credit of Brother Rader, who is only a babe in Christ, that he, along with the others, have worked faithfully and well. We found the friends whom they had interested and instructed so well taught in the fundamentals of the gospel of the kingdom that our work consisted almost exclusively of review. A review of the principles of the truth in two or three interviews and the explication of a few intricate details was all we needed to do, and then those who had minds and hearts in harmony with God were ready to be baptized into the name of Jesus the Christ.

Three expressed a desire to put on the saving name of Jesus. Where we could have the baptism was a question which Brother Heacock settled by appealing to the "Rev." Edwards, a Baptist minister in Canton. Therefore on Saturday, March the 16th, 1 P. M. our little band gathered at the First Baptist Church, and the following were assisted to put on Christ: Miss Elsie Heacock, daughter of Brother and Sister Heacock, Mr. Carlin Brill, formerly Presbyterian, and Harlin H. Brill, formerly neutral. A happy day for the little flock in Canton, as well as for the great angelic host in heaven.

On the following Sunday morning we had a most enjoyable sacramental service. Brother Heacock presiding. In the evening about twenty friends and neighbors came to the home of Brother and Sister Heacock, and we addressed them on "The kingdom of God and the Symptoms of Its Approach." Several seemed to have "ears to hear." We returned home with our mind filled with pleasant memories of our trip, edified by the zeal of the brethren and sisters, and with earnest prayers for God to bless the seed sown. Sown in weakness may it be raised in power.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED

"A friend and lover of truth," asks for an exposition of Mark 9:1.

Answer

In Matt. 17:9 we find an explanation. It reads as follows: "And as they came down from the mountain, Jesus charged them saying, tell the vision to no man until the Son of Man be risen again from the dead." The Greek word rendered "vision" is horama. It occurs twelve times in the New Testament, and in every occurrence denotes a supernatural manifestation, as will be seen by reference to the following texts: Acts 9:10, 11; 10:3, 17, 19; 11:5; 12:9; 16:9, 10; 18:9. In the only other occurrence of this term, it is rendered "sight." (Acts 7:31). Peter did not see a literal sheet let down from heaven with all kinds of literal beasts in it. He saw in vision a picture of these things. Christ did not come on the mount, "in the glory of the Father and all the holy angels, to reward every man according to his works" (Matt. 26:27) but he will thus come at the end of the present age (Matt. 25:31-33). Then will every man be rewarded according to his works (Rom. 2:6; Rev. 22:12). Peter says that he made known "his power and coming" when he "was with him in the holy mount" (2 Pet 1:16-18). Christ could only have made known his coming, by "vision"; because not having gone away, of course he could not have returned literally. Again, the kingdom of God did not come in fact at this time. It will not come until the coming of Christ, and the judgment of the living and the dead (2 Tim. 4:1). Christ was not glorified in fact on the mount.

It was necessary that he should suffer before entering into his glory (Luke 24:26). But allow that it was a vision of Christ as he will appear when he shall come in the glory of the kingdom, and all is plain and easy of explanation.

There was a picture of the glorified King. There, too, was a picture of Moses who died, but having been raised from the dead, will have part in the kingdom; a fit representative of all the sleeping saints who will be raised from the dead to share the glory of the kingdom. And there was Elijah who represented the saints of the prophetic age. Because Mark says they saw these things (Mark 9:9) does not prove that it was not a vision of a future event. John saw a great beast come up out of the sea (Rev. 13:1). He saw "an angel come down from heaven, and the earth was lighted with his glory" (Rev. 18:1). He saw another angel come down from heaven, with a great chain in his hand with which he bound the dragon for a thousand years (Rev. 20:1, 2). He saw the dead, small and great, stand before God, in judgment (Rev. 20:12). He saw a new heaven and a new earth (Rev. 21:1). He saw the holy city (Rev. 21:2), the river of life, etc. (Rev. 22:1). "I John saw these things, and heard them" (Rev. 22:8). Were all these things which John says he saw, realities at the time he saw them? Not one of them. He saw in vision what would be in the future. To say that Peter, James and John saw these things, does not explain the manner in which they saw them, whether with their natural eyes, or in vision. Matthew does define the manner in which they saw them, viz: in "vision." And that there might be no misunderstanding, he uses a term which no inspired writer uses to denote natural vision.

Matthew 28:19, 20, "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost: teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." What were they commanded to observe? Was it what the Apostles were to observe, or what the Apostles were commanded to teach them to observe? —Jas. Fowler.

Answer

In Matt. 28:19, 20, our Savior evidently commanded his Apostles to teach others to observe what he had commanded. This will appear by comparing Mark's and Luke's version of the same Commission. "Go ye into all the world, and preach the gospel to every creature. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned" (Mark 16:15, 16). In this quotation, those to whom the Apostles preached were required to believe and obey what they taught. "And said unto them, Thus it is written, and thus it behooved Christ to suffer and to rise from the dead the third day: and that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem" (Luke 24:46). In this passage men were commanded to obey what the Apostles taught, viz: to repent, not because they had repented, but because Christ had commanded it, as a condition of the remission of sins. Peter preached the gospel on the day of Pentecost. Thousands believed and wished to know what they should do. Peter did not tell them to observe what he and the Apostles had observed, but what they must observe in order to the remission of their sins, viz: to "repent and be baptized, every one of them in the name of Jesus Christ" (Acts 2:37, 38). Christ in his memorable prayer to his Father, would not pray for his Apostles alone, but for them also which should believe on him through their (the Apostle's) word (John 17:20). In this passage we learn that the Apostles were to preach the word, and men were required to believe on Christ through their word. Their word therefore was what those who should hear were required to observe, by which they were to be sanctified, and upon which they were to be united. But their word was the word which the Father had given to Christ, and Christ to his Apostles, and the Apostles to the world (John 17:14) Hence the word we must observe is the word of God as taught first by Jesus Christ, and afterwards by his Apostles.—J. M. S.

SATISFIED

Rising in eternal glory
At the resurrection light,
Singing then the wondrous story
Of the love that banished night,
Shall we murmur at the sleeping
Till that great resplendent day?
Will it be a cause of weeping
When our tears are wiped away?

When we see the saints all beaming
In their crowns and robes of white,
And our loved ones in the gleaming,
With their forms all pure and bright;
When we meet beyond the sighing
In the home beyond the gloom,
Shall we grieve because of lying
In the dark and silent tomb?

Seeing then the harvest glowing
In the grand eternal rays,
Reaping gladly then from sowing
In these tears through sorrow's days,
Shall we then be heard repining,
Though the seed in earth remain?
Glorious in that morning's shining
It will wave in golden grain.

Waiting then for Christ from heaven,
As the church in days of old;
Crowns to saints will then be given,
We will walk the streets of gold,
It will give us then no sadness,
That we parted—that we died—
We shall be in perfect gladness
With the Psalmist—satisfied.—Geo. R. Kramer.

Christ Is Risen

We send you greeting to remind you of the Easter flowers, of our love for you, and our prayers in your behalf that the everlasting Father will assist and uphold you in your attempt to separate yourself from all things earthly, so you can be a true ambassador of our Lord and Savior, Jesus the Christ.

Will you, with me, join on Easter Day in thanking God that he sent his Son to suffer and to die that he might open the gate of life to all who trust in his great sacrifice for them, and that he lives to be their ever present friend.

"He is not here: for he is risen" (Matt. 28:6).

The Significance of Easter
What is Easter to You?

To me, that which Easter signifies is everything, for it teaches life from the dead. We know that Jesus was born for the purpose of salvation, and to carry out the plan of God the Father it was necessary for Jesus to die; but suppose that ended it. Would there be any hope of a future life? We might answer in scriptural language that "Christ died for the ungodly" also that "Jesus was delivered for our offences" as well as "Christ died for our sins," but let us again suppose that when Christ died he remained dead, would we then have hope of future life? We will let Scripture answer: "Now if Christ be preached that he rose from the dead, how say some among you that there is no resurrection of the dead? But if there be no resurrection of the dead, then is Christ not risen: and if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. Yea, and we are found false witnesses of God; because we have testified of God that he raised up Christ: whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not. For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ risen: and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished. If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable."

By this we see that the resurrection of Christ was as necessary as his death. But let me ask, did Christ rise from the dead? Was Jesus resurrected? Did the apostles preach in vain? Is our faith also vain? Are we still in our sins? Have those who have fallen asleep in Christ perished? Are we the most miserable of people, having hope only in the life that now is? An answer to the foregoing seven questions will be found in our today's golden text which let us again read quietly, earnestly, soberly, intently, putting special emphasis on that little word "is," the third in the lesson.

And now do you understand why in the beginning we said that, "To me, that which Easter signifies is everything, for it teaches life from the dead?"

What is the significance of Easter to you?

Christ's Triumphal Entry

On the morrow when they drew nigh unto Jerusalem, unto Bethpage and Bethany at the Mount of Olives, he sendeth two of his disciples, and saith unto them, "Go your way into the village that is over against you: and straightway as ye enter into it, ye shall find a colt tied, whereon no man ever yet sat; loose him, and bring him. And if anyone say unto you. Why do ye this? say ye, The Lord hath need of him, and straightway he will send him back hither."

Now this is come to pass, that it might be fulfilled, which was spoken through the prophet saying:

"Tell ye the daughter of Zion,
Behold thy King cometh unto thee,
Meek, and riding upon an ass,
And upon a colt, the foal of an ass."

And they went away, and found a colt tied at the door without in the open street; and they loosed him. And certain of them that stood there said unto them, "What do ye, loosing the colt?" and they said unto them even as Jesus had said: and they let them go. And they bring the colt unto Jesus, and cast on him their garments; and he sat upon him.

And the most part of the multitude spread their garments upon the way; and others branches, which they had cut from the fields. And as he was drawing nigh, even at the descent of the Mount of Olives, the whole multitude of the disciples began to rejoice and praise God with a loud voice for all the mighty works which they had seen. And they that went before, and they that followed, cried, "Hosanna to the Son of David; blessed is he that cometh in the name of the Lord; blessed is the kingdom that cometh, the kingdom of our father David; Hosanna in the highest."—His Last Week.

God Was In The Stillness

Moses was a social being, a political leader, whose success was in his power to handle an unruly crowd. But Moses' great contribution to the world—the Ten Commandments—came down from the mountain-top where he had climbed alone, to meet the Author of the ten commandments, the giver of "Eternal Life" to all obedient believers.

Faces

Life writes man's history upon his face.
She takes his plastic features for her scroll
And traces there the story of a soul;
Its gladness, grief, nobility, disgrace.
Come read the parchment in the market place;
Mark each man, hurrring to possess his goal;
Here watch the livng manuscript unroll
Its record of the progress of the race.

How runs the story to its destiny?
See, there is much of woe and sin in sight!
Can it be life a happier ending scorns?
Not so! turn back and read her prophecy
That she should trace the triumph of the Right—
It lies upon that face men crowned with thorns!

The Inheritance

Honest love, honest sorrow;
Honest work for the day, honest hope for the morrow;
Are these worth nothing more than the hand they make weary,

Watchman Tell Us of the Night

Watchman tell us of the night—
What its signs of promise are!
Traveler, o'er yon mountain's height,
See that glory beaming star!
Watchman, does its beauteous ray
Aught of hope or joy foretell?
Traveler, yes, it brings the day—
Promised day of Israel.

Watchman, tell us of the night—
For the morning seems to dawn.
Traveler, darkness takes its flight—
Doubt and terror are withdawn.
Watchman, let thy wandering cease;
Hie thee to thy quiet home,
Traveler, lo! the Prince of Peace—
Lo! the Son of God is come.

My Friend

I have a city full of friends
Who face upon the open street;
The little winds of happiness
Kiss their feet.

Some have wide, kind hearths of stone,
And some have windows on the sea,
Or gardens where I like to roam
And gather rosemary.

And some are strong and some are prim,
And some have sunlight in their eyes,
And others look on distant plains
Where mountains rise.

These many houses comfort me
When cold winds at my window pull,
For who could help but happy be
In such a city full?

TREATISE ON HELL

Article III

Judged Before Reward is Given

It must strike every reflecting mind as an exceeding discordant element in the case, that the righteous dead, after enjoying so many years of celestial felicity should have to be arraigned before the judgment seat at the last day to make known whether they were worthy or unworthy of the reward so long enjoyed. If the real thinking, intellectual man goes to his reward at death, and enjoys the felicity of heaven, what folly to think that at a certain time he must be compelled to leave the celestial abode, and have judgment passed upon him to make manifest whether he is a sheep or a goat. What nonsense, and all reasonable, sensible people who have any fear of God, or his blessed word, will forever cast it aside, and accept the Bible doctrine which is plain and reasonable and just.

The funeral sermons of the day that you have listened to are not like the funeral sermons that Paul preached. First Thess. 4:13, to end: "I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope." If the popular theory of the day were true, in place of saying, "I would not have you to be ignorant concerning those who are asleep," Paul would have said, I would not have you to be ignorant concerning those who are in heaven singing praises around the throne of God, but how different from that Paul talked. Not only did he affirm that they were asleep, but he further affirmed that they would not rise until the coming of Jesus. Sixteenth verse: "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God, and the dead in Christ shall rise first." The dead in Christ are not in heaven, says Paul, but will rise before the living are caught away, at the sound of the last trump, not when they die, and continues Paul: "Wherefore comfort one another with these words."

This is not like the popular teachers of the day, who have comforted you with the thought that your loved ones are in heaven. The dead are in the graves, knowing nothing, feeling nothing, awaiting the morning of the resurrection, when the silent sleepers in the tomb will hear the life-giving voice of the Son of Man, and come forth to receive in body according as their work has been.

The Dead Know Not Anything

All Bible allusions to death and the grave are as unlike the common sentiment of the day as anything can be. Should we inquire of the religious teachers of the day, do the dead know anything, what would the answer be? Every time it would be: "O, yes, they know more than when alive." How often you have heard them say, when standing by the lifeless form of loved ones, "They know all now." Man says that God shows wonders to the dead, that the dead praise the Lord, or suffer in eternal torment as the case may be. But what does the Almighty say about them? Hear the question, and its answer, from the lips of an infallible God: Psalm 88:10, 11, 12: "Wilt thou show wonders to the dead? Shall the dead rise and praise thee? Shall thy lovingkindness be declared in the grave, or thy faithfulness in destruction? Shall thy wonders be known in the dark, and thy righteousness in the land of forgetfulness?" Ask these questions of the teachers of the day, and they would declare that wonders would be shown to the dead, and that the dead would arise and praise him, but let man keep still and let God answer the questions, and all is plain. In Psalm 115:17, the answer is made so plain that none can mistake it. "The dead praise not the Lord, neither any that go down into silence." Ecc. 9:5: "For the living know that they shall die, but the dead know not anything." The voice of God comes ringing down through the ages declaring in no uncertain tones that the dead know not anything. His righteousness shall not be known in the dark, or his wonders in the land of forgetfulness. "But" says one, "what becomes of the wicked? What will be their fate?" Let God, not man, tell us. The wicked are an offense to God, and an affliction to themselves, and of no use to anybody and shall be put aside and consigned to an eternal oblivion in which their very name will perish. Having never by a patient continuance in well doing, sought for glory, honor, immortality, eternal destruction will be their doom. In Prov. 2:22, we read, "The wicked shall be cut off from the earth, and the transgressors shall be rooted out of it." Yes, the only ones who will be cut off from the earth are the wicked. Prov. 10:25: "As the whirlwind passeth, so is the wicked no more; but the righteous is an everlasting foundation." What a strikng comparison, as the whirlwind passeth, so are the wicked no more. After reading this plain testimony who dare say that the wicked continue to live on in misery, when God says that they shall be no more. Paul joins hands with the Psalmist and declares, Rom. 6:23: "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is life eternal through Chris.t" When God declared through the great Apostle to us Gentiles that the wages of sin is death, not natural death, but eternal death, who dare to say that the wages of sin is eternal life in misery? The wages have never been changed, and death, destruction to the workers of iniquity, is the just and merciful decree of an all-wise God.

Destruction to the Workers of Iniquity

According to the commonly accepted theory of the day God has set before men life in happiness, or death in torment, but such an idea is nowhere found taught on the pages of Holy Writ. What does the Almighty set before men? Deut. 30:15: "See, I have set before thee this day, life and good, death and evil." Nineteenth verse: "I have set before thee life and death, blessing and cursing, therefore choose life that both thou and thy seed may live." This is what God set before us, and it is made so plain. Who can fail to see it? Life on one hand, death on the other, not life in happiness on the one hand, and life in misery on the other, but life with all its attendant blessings on the one hand, an inspiring sun-lit picture of eternal happiness, or to be slaves of sin for a few short fleeting years, and then to sink comfortless and despairing into the jaws of a remorseless and eternal grave.

The man or woman, who would not choose the life thus freely offered, is not worthy of its never ending pleasures. This is the goodness and severity of God as revealed in the Scriptures of truth from Genesis to Revelation. Jesus joins hands with Moses and Paul in a three fold cord that cannot be broken, and declares the same God-given fact. Matt. 7:13, 14: "Enter ye in at the strait gate, for wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be that go in thereat: Because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."

If eternal torment was to be the face of the wicked, this would have been a good place for Jesus to have told us so, but he declares that the broad way, in which the great masses are found walking, ends in destruction, not life in misery. In no language is life in misery, one of the definitions of destruction, then how dare you think that the broad road ends in eternal misery, when Jesus says that it ends in destruction. Read these words of Jesus, and then turn to Acts 3:22, 23, and read what Peter declares, that every soul that will not hear the prophet (Jesus) in all things, shall be destroyed from among the people, and know what your fate will be if you refuse to believe this God-given truth.

But says an objector: "Did not Jesus say in Matt. 25:46, that the wicked should go away into everlasting punishment?" He certainly did, and what he said there will be found in harmony with what he said in Matt. 7. In Matt. 25, Jesus only affirmed the duration of the punishment, not the nature of it. The punishment was to be everlasting, and in Matt. 7 he told us the nature of the punishment, which was destruction. Take all that Jesus said in Matt. 25 and Matt. 7, and we find that the punishment of the wicked was to be everlasting destruction. Paul in Second Thess. 1:7, 9, declares: "To you who are troubled rest with us when the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ, who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power."

Now we have both Jesus and Paul declaring that the punishment of the wicked is to be everlasting destruction, and on no principle can destruction be made to mean life in misery. Can you not see the harmony in all the inspired writers, all speaking the same things? Moses, Jesus, Paul and Peter, and all others testifying that death, destruction, is the wages of sin, and not eternal torment.

No Literal Fire

The wicked will not continue to live on, but as the Psalmist says, Psa. 92:7: "When the wicked spring as the grass, and all the workers of iniquity do flourish, it is that they shall be destroyed forever." Not live forever, but be destroyed forever. The wicked are compared to the most perishable material, to chaff, to tares, to dead branches, to wood, hay, stubble.

The Scriptures affirm that the wicked shall perish, die, be consumed, burnt up as chaff, but nowhere do they affirm that they shall be burning forever. They teach that wicked men are to be destroyed, but nowhere do the Scriptures or science teach that they are indestructible—but in every case the very opposite.

The Scriptures do not teach that any literal fire will ever touch the wicked, but fire is used as a symbol of destruction. The believers in eternal torment quote Matt. 3:12, in proof of their position, but it proves the contrary: "Whose fan is in his hand, and he will gather his wheat into the garner, but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire." Is it a literal fan that Jesus is supposed to have in his hand separating the wheat from the chaff? Any sensible man would answer no. Is it literal wheat that Jesus is separating from literal chaff, and gathering into a literal granary? Impossible, but anyone would know that the wheat represents the righteous; the chaff, the wicked. If the wheat represents the righteous, and the chaff the wicked, how can you claim it to be literal fire that consumes such chaff? Either the language is symbolical, or it is literal. It would be no more sensible to claim that it is literal fire, than to claim that it is literal wheat, but the wheat represents the righteous, the chaff the wicked, and the fire a symbol of the destruction that awaits the wicked, then all is plain. We turn to the word "fire" in the Hebrew Lexicon, and read: "The fire of God often used of lightnings; also figuratively used of the anger and wrath of God. Fire is used of war, so that to be consumed with fire, is to be destroyed in war. Fire and burning in Hebrew are used to designate any destruction whether of men or things." How plain then that fire is only used as a symbol of the destruction that awaits the wicked.—L. T. Nichols.

A PAPER REPRESENTING THE CHURCH OF GOD, AND DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF "THE THINGS CONCERNING THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND THE NAME OF JESUS CHRIST" (ACTS 8:12)

VOLUME 70 CLEVELAND, O. APRIL 2, 1918 NUMBER 13

GOD IS EVERYWHERE

In the pallid light of morning,
In the noontide's heat and glare,
In the mellow glow of evening,
God is everywhere.

We can not escape his presence,
Can not pass beyond his care,
By his wondrous love he holds us,
God is everywhere.

If we take the wings of morning,
Dwell in utmost seas, yet there
His right hand will still uphold us,
God is everywhere.

When we stumble in our strivings,
And our path seems rough and bare,
It's a solace to remember
God is everywhere.

He will hear our faintest whisper
As we bow to him in prayer,
And give strength to bear the burden,
God is everywhere.

A PRINTING PRESS CAMPAIGN

By Auntie Wince

Dear Brothers and Sisters:

We all of us want a printing press, a cutting machine, a stitching and folding machine, and to enlarge our present building so we can be independent and our beloved Restitution be made self-supporting. It will take about $1000 to secure all these things. Can we raise that much in these hard and perilous times? Of course we can; and we are going to get right at the work and put it through in a hurry, for "the King's business requires haste." No time to dally now. The governments of earth have taken what they call "war measures." They are pouring out their silver and their gold by the billion, to save their people and their lands from falling under the rule of Sultan, Pope, or Kaiser.

Shall we not be just as zealous for God and his cause? Liberty, if won, is a worthless bauble without God and his truth. Righteousness must be upheld at all hazards. Better live on a crust of bread and wear sackcloth than to have truth and holiness die out.

"Pressed into knowing no helper but God;
Pressed into loving the staff and the rod;
Pressed into liberty where nothing clings;
Pressed into faith for impossible things.
Pressed into living a life to the Lord;
Pressed into living a Christ-life outpoured."

We may be "pressed beyond measure" but that pressure is needed. We must be

How faith is quickened reading this little verse! For that is what God wants of us, faith that reaches out after seemingly "impossible things," sure that it will get them of the living Father who ever makes fat the liberal soul; faith, that pours out the life, the treasure, in gladness, that by this means others can be saved.

Do not be afraid to give when God asks. That which you give he will pay again. If you withhold it will lead to poverty. Give and trust, occupy until Jesus comes. Don't hold on to your money when God needs it; if you do, you will lose all.

We shall get the printing press!

Lesson VII

BY ROBERT G. HUGGINS*
Pastor of the Church of God, 10623 Lee Ave., Cleveland, O.

THE FATHER AND THE SON

I. There is Only One God, the Father

The "one God" of the Old Testament is revealed as "the Father" in the New Testament. The popular doctrine of the Trinity confuses the revealed relations of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, and destroys monotheism to make room for polytheism—supplants Christianity to establish Paganism (Deut. 6:4; Mark 12:29-32; 1 Tim. 2 5; 1 Cor. 8:4-6; Eph. 4:6; John 17:3; Isa. 45:5).

II. Jesus Christ is the Son of God

Jesus Christ is the Son of God, having been begotten of Mary by the Holy Spirit without the intervention of man (Luke 1:35; Matt. 1:20; Isa. 9:6; Acts 2:22; 10:38; John 14:10; Matt. 3:16,17; John 3:34,35; 5:30; 14:28; 7:16; Matt. 19:17; Mark 15.34).

III. Jesus Christ is a Mediator for the World and an Advocate for the Church

Notwithstanding the miraculous manner of his conception and his subsequent anointing with the Holy Spirit, Jesus was made of our nature. He died, was buried, rose again, and ascended to heaven where he is now an officiating mediator between the Father and sinners who come to God by him, and an advocate for his own house, the church of God (1 Tim. 2:5; Rom. 8:3; Heb. 9:14; Gal. 4:4; 2 Cor. 5:21; 1 Cor. 15:21,45; Rom. 5:18,19; Heb. 2:17; 3:1; 4:14,15; 8:1; Luke 24:47; Acts 5:31; 15:14; John 17:9; 1 John 2:1).

IV. Posthumous Probation and Salvation Unscriptural

Christ's mediation for the world and his advocacy for the church provide adequate means for the salvation of all in the world and in the church who make their calling and election sure. Probation for both, therefore, is limited to this life (Isa. 38:18-20; Psa. 88:10-12; Eccl. 9:5-10; 6:3-6; Hos. 13:14; 2 Cor. 6:1-3; Luke 4:19; Psa. 69:13; Isa. 55:3,6; Heb. 3:6,7,13,15). Posthumous probation * is exceedingly reprehensible as it either represents the means of salvation which God has provided as insufficient, or repudiates Christ's mediation for the world altogether. The following indictments of the doctrine are sufficient to show its anti-scriptural nature:

(a) Posthumous probation belittles angelic ministration (Psa. 68:17; Dan. 7:10; Psa. 103:20; 34:7; Matt. 2:13,19,20; 4:11; 26:53; 18:10; Ex. 23:20-23; Heb. 1:14; Acts 8:26-39);

(b) It slurs the work of the Holy Spirit (John 14:26; 16:7-14; Rom. 8:26);

(c) It emasculates the word of God (Acts 13:44-48; John 17:19,20; Acts 18:10,11; Isa. 55:10,11; Heb. 4:12; Jer. 23:28,29; Num. 11:23);

(d) It denies the sufficiency of Christ's mediatorial prerogatives (Luke 23:34; Acts 2:23,37-41; John 1:46-49; Acts 5:31; Matt. 28:18; 1 Pet. 3:22; Heb. 2:18; 4:15,16; 5:2; 7:25; Rom. 8:26-28,32-39); and

(e) It charges God with incompetence and inefficiency (Gen. 21:17,20; 1 Sam. 2:18,26; 3:1,7,19; Isa. 45:1,4; Jer. 1:5; Luke 1:15; Gal. 1:16; John 4:23; Acts 8; 10; Isa. 45:19; 59:1,2,3; 55:6,7,10,11).

V. The Destruction of the Devil, Effected by the Obedience and Sacrifice of Christ, was the Obliteration of Sin in the Flesh

The death of Christ was a necessary sacrifice for sin in order that the law of sin and death, introduced into the world by the disobedience of the first Adam, might be nullified through the obedience of the second Adam who obtained a full discharge of its claims by a temporary surrender to its power. Thus, immortality by resurrection was acquired in his own case, and through him will also be acquired by all believers in harmony with the law of obedience. In Christ sin is taken away, and righteousness is established. The devil, a word which is used interchangeably with "sin," has been abolished in the person of Christ; and its power will also be abolished so far as his people are concerned when he redeems, immortalizes, and makes them like himself (John 1:29; Heb. 9:26; John 3:16; Gal. 1:4; Titus 2:14; Acts 10:43; Rom. 3:25; Acts 4:12; Rom. 1:3,4; 2 Cor. 13:4; 6:9; Eph. 1:20,21; Heb. 2:14; Rom. 6:23; Heb. 9:26; 12:4; John 13:2; 6:70; Acts 5:3,9; Jas. 1:14,15; Eph. 2:2; 1 Tim. 5:14,15; Matt. 16:23; Mark 8:33; Luke 4:6; 1 Thess. 2:18; Rev. 2:10, 12,13; Psa. 68:21; Jer. 51:20).

SYNTHETIC REMARKS ON THE LESSON

I. There is Only One God, the Father. In lesson VI we concluded our study of "the things concerning the kingdom of God" (Acts 8:12). The latter part of this passage adds to these kingdom things "the name of Jesus Christ." Now this "name" comprehends "those things which concern the Lord Jesus Christ" (Acts 28:31). Equally with the things of the kingdom, these things which relate to Christ and his name are integrant parts of the gospel. We are, therefore, confronted with the imperious duty of finding out what these things are. We begin our study of them by observing that one of "the things which concern our Lord Jesus Christ" is that his Father is God, and God alone. The doctrine of the Trinity which is so prevalent today is a contradiction of fact, a stultification of reason, and a shameful denial of the word of God. The word "God" is used no less than one thousand three hundred and twenty-six times in the New Testament alone, and is always written in the singular number. By noting particularly the subjoined testimonies you will see how clearly, unmistakably, and unanimously the writers of Holy Writ teach the unity of God:

"Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord" (Deut. 6:4).

"To us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things, and we by him" (1 Cor. 8:6).

"There is one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all" (Eph. 4:6).

"There is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus" (1 Tim. 2:5).

" . . . . that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent" (John 17:3).

"I am God, and there is none else . . . . and there is none like me, declaring the end from the beginning" (Isa. 46:9,10).

"There is no God beside me" (Isa. 45:5).

The indivisible unity of the Deity thus stands upon a very broad scriptural foundation. The Trinitarian formula, "God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost," is a Pagan fiction and conceit—a doctrine which presents a contradiction in terms as well as in sense. "God the Father" could not say, "I am God, and there is none else," and tell the truth, if there were two other gods—the Son and the Holy Ghost. The Son, if he were "God the Son," could not say, "This is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God," and make a truthful statement, if he and the Holy Spirit are gods, too—unless they are false gods, self-confessed! "God the Father" is a scriptural expression; but we never meet with this phraseology in the Old Testament. After the birth of Christ the one God of the Old Testament is described in the New as "the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ" (Eph. 3:14). The reason for this change in diction is obvious: God could not be "the Father," nor could Christ be "the Son," until Jesus was born. This leads us to affirm that

II. Jesus Christ is the Son of God. The term "Son," which is so often applied to Christ in the Scriptures, implies derivation; and derivation implies subordination and inferiority (Matt. 16:16,17). He is declared to be "the only begotten Son of God" (John 1:18; 3:16). The personal pre-existence of Christ and its inseparable concomitant doctrine, the Trinity, vanish into the Pagan illusions from whence they came, before the blazing light of these divine statements. He that is "begotten" cannot have existed from the same point of time as the one by whom he is begotten. A son cannot be the father of himself, neither can he be as old, nor equal to, his father. Christ cannot be God himself unless he is his own Son and his own Father! "God the Son" is a misnomer and an impossibility; "the eternal Son" is eternal nonsense, for then we would have to conceive of a Son who was never begotten! Then again, the term "Father," which is so frequently applied to God in the Sacred ings, implies priority of existence, precedence, edence. As the mists vanish before the clear shin- rays of the sun so the Trinity is chased away like ision of the night at the first approach of these iptural terms and expressions. Christ is not "the nd person" of an eternal Trinity of gods, neither is the manifestation of a pre-existent and "eternal Son"; he is the manifestation of the pre-existent and eter- God (1 Tim. 3:16), who is from everlasting to ever- ting (Psa. 90:2), who is "above all and through all" (Eph. 4:6), and "out of whom are all things" (Rom. 11:36). God is the only underived and self-sustaining be- in the universe, "the fountain of life" which feeds streamlets (Psa. 36:9; 1 Tim. 6:15,16; Acts 17:18; 1 Cor. 8:6). Now the Son of God is "out" of the Father (Rom. 11:36) in a literal and important sense. He was begotten of the Father by the spirit (Matt. 1:20), and was "therefore" his Son (Luke 1:35); by the same spirit he was afterwards filled "without measure" (John 3:34). "The image of the Son" (Rom. 8:29) therefore became "the express image of his (Father's) person" (Heb. 1:3); the two being so similar that to see the one is the same as seeing the other (John 14:7-11). Still the Father is "above all," and is expressly declared to be "the head of Christ" (1 Cor. 11:3). The reader now must see in the repetitious phrases "the Father" and "the Son" an implication that God is one, and that the Son had his origin "out" of the Father, to whom he was subordinate in a sense which contravenes Trinitarian equality. "This day have I begotten thee" (Heb. 1:5) are words which point unmistakably to a commencement of days. John 5:26 affirms that the "life" of the Father, called "the life of God" in Eph. 4:18, was "given to the Son." His existence and life were both derived from God. All the works, doctrine, and even the words of Christ, were from God, as the Savior himself frankly acknowledged. Let the following Scriptures suffice to show the derived, subordinate, and dependent relation of Christ to God:

"Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you by miracles, and wonders, and signs, which God did by him . . . ." (Acts 2:22; 10:38; Luke 4:18).

"I can of mine own self do nothing . . . ." (John 5:30).

"My Father is greater than I" (John 14:28).

"My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me" (John 7:16).

"The words that I speak unto you, I speak not of myself, but the Father that dwelleth in me; he doeth the works" (John 14:10).

"The Father which sent me, he gave me a commandment, what I should say, and what I should speak" (John 12:49).

"I can do nothing of myself; but as my Father hath taught me, I speak these things" (John 8:28).

III. Christ is a Mediator for the World and an Advocate for the Church. Mediator, mesites in the Greek, means a "middle man" (Young); a "go-between, an in- unciator, a reconciler" (Strong). This word applies person who endeavors to reconcile parties at variance. application to Christ it denotes that he is a "mid- man" between God and man for the purpose of bringing about peaceful relations. Since this transpired "while were yet sinners" (Rom. 5:10), his mediatorship is cised in behalf of sinners and the world. But after nciliation has been effected Christ becomes our ocate, parakletos, which word means "an intercessor, cler, comforter" (Strong). The Latin word advoca- has the same meaning, as Cicero bears witness. In ement with the etymology of the word, John limits office of an advocate to the church when writing to his "little children" (not sinners), by saying that they have "an advocate with the Father" (1 John 2:1). As a mediator Christ pleads with the world and reconciles them to God, exercising the office of a "middle man"; as an advocate he intercedes, consoles, and comforts the church, performing the functions of a priest.

IV. Posthumous Probation and Salvation Unscriptural. [illegible] shows, then, that God has made ample provision for the salvation of those in the world as well as for those who are in the church. Believers in posthumous probation admit that when a man learns and obeys the gospel he is inducted into the church whose Head and Priest is Christ. It is further admitted that he has a "fair chance" now, and enjoys adequate means of salvation, and that his probation in the church under the priesthood of Christ is complete and final. For him no posthumous probation is claimed. But with reference to the world we are asked to believe that God has been negligent and improvident. Since God has failed to provide for them the saving means of the gospel now, to be fair, they argue, he must grant them probationary opportunities hereafter. Now it is true that many people do not know the gospel and that they have no means of learning it (Matt. 11:25; 13:11; 2 Cor. 3:1). God does forbid the preaching of the gospel to many (Acts 16:6,7). The withholding of the gospel from people, however, instead of being fortuitous, transpires according to Christ's mediatorial functions. Even judicious men will not commit great riches into the hands of anybody (Luke 16:11): think you, then, that God will commit in trust "the glorious gospel" to the riff-raff of the world (1 Tim. 1:11, 12)? Any "good thing toward the Lord God of Israel" in any man, though it be small as an atom, is seen and properly credited (1 Kings 14:13). Infinitesimal germs of goodness have saved many a sinner from summary destruction (2 Chron. 12:12). God acknowledges "every good thing" in every man (Philemon 6). As he gladly gives credit to whom credit is due, let him explain why so many people in the world, although provided with the means of salvation, are not saved. While he is no respecter of persons he is a respecter of character (Acts 10:34). "In every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness is accepted with him" (vs. 35). "Neither hath the eye seen, O God, besides thee, what he hath prepared for him that waiteth for him. Thou meetest him that rejoiceth and worketh righteousness" (Isa. 64:4,5). If any man in any nation under the sun is not "accepted with him" it is because he does not obey the conditions required. "The Lord's hand is not shortened, that it cannot save; neither is his ear heavy, that it cannot hear; but your iniquities have separated between you and your God, and your sins have hid his face from you, that he will not hear" (Isa. 59:1,2). God is within his right when he has "mercy on whom he will have mercy," and "compassion on whom he will have compassion" (Eccl. 8:3; Dan. 4:35; Rom. 9:15). To whom, then, will he extend "mercy," and to whom will he show "compassion"? In "every nation" those who "fear him and work righteousness are accepted of him." This is the assurance for him that "waiteth for" the Lord—"thou meetest him." From all who obey not these reasonable requirements he "hides his face." He only honors those that honor him (1 Sam. 2:30). He cannot bestow honor in advance of humility (Prov. 15:33). He "resists the proud" (1 Pet. 5:5,6). He only draws near to those who draw near to him (Jas. 4:8); he only "makes known" the truth to those friends in whom he can confide (John 15:15); he only whispers the secrets of his covenant into the ears of those who fear him (Psa. 25:14). To a man that is "good in his sight" he always gives "wisdom, and knowledge, and joy" (Eccl. 2:26). What about others whom he leaves without "wisdom and knowledge"? They are not "good in his sight"; he "lightly esteems" them (1 Sam. 2:30). They are dogs to whom he will not entrust his "holy" truth; swine to whom he will not cast gospel "pearls" (Matt. 7:6,7); the lost from whom he "hides" the gospel (2 Cor 4:3). They do not hunger and thirst after righteousness, and consequently are not filled (Matt. 5:6). They have never asked for the truth, so it has not been given to them; they have never sought it, so they have never found it; they have never knocked, so the door of knowledge has never been opened to them (Matt. 7.7). "For every one that asketh, receiveth; and he that seeketh, findeth; and to him that knocketh, it shall be opened" (Matt. 7:8).

* By "posthumous probation" in this lesson is meant probation in purgatory immediately after death, as taught by Roman Catholics, the "intermediate state" of renovation, as taught by some Protestants, and also the post-resurrectional opportunity to be saved, as taught by Russellites.

For the enlightenment and warning of the innocent who have not fathomed the anti-scriptural depths and ramifications of posthumous probation; for the sake of those who have not perceived the disparagement, derogation, and odium which this dogma casts upon God, his ways, and his means of salvation, besides its disguised denial of Christ's mediatorial office, we say briefly:

(a) Posthumous Probation Belittles Angelic Ministration. "Thousands of angels" (Psa. 68:17), "ten thousand times ten thousand" (Dan. 7:10) are about God's throne ever in readiness to obey his commandments (Psa. 103:20). They have a deep, abiding, and joyful interest in the salvation of sinners (Luke 15:7,10), and are "sent forth to minister to them who shall be heirs of salvation" (Heb. 1:14). If under this celestial ministry any "who shall be heirs of salvation" fail to get a chance, surely the angels are not to blame.

(b) It Slurs the Work of the Holy Spirit. "He will reprove the world of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment" (John 16:8). The plea of frailties and infirmities, which are so often and eloquently dilated upon as affording reasons why we must have a posthumous probation, is a slanderous libel on the ministry of the Holy Spirit which "helpeth our infirmities" (Rom. 8:26). In the light of Matt. 12:32 it would seem best to hesitate before speaking against the Holy Spirit.

(c) It Emasculates the Word of God. Indited by the Holy Spirit the word of God is "quick and powerful" (Heb. 1:12). Powerful as fire and a hammer (Jer. 23:29) it never returns to God void. "It shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I sent it" (Isa. 55:11). Received, it is always "able to save" (Jas. 1:21).

(d) It Denies the Sufficiency of Christ's Mediatorial Prerogatives. Christ is in the throne-room of heaven as a "Prince and a Savior, for to give repentance to Israel, and forgiveness of sins" (Acts 5:31). Invested with "all power in heaven and in earth" (Matt. 28:18), with "angels and authorities and powers made subject to him" (1 Pet. 3:22), he has unlimited saving power for all who are worth saving. "He is able to succor them that are tempted" (Heb. 2:18), give mercy and grace to all that "need" (Heb. 4:16), "can have compassion on the ignorant" (Heb. 5:2) the very people for whom posthumous probation is claimed, because, it is alleged, they have been shown no "compassion"!; and is "able to save them to the uttermost that come to God by him" (Heb. 7:25). Panteles, here translated "uttermost," means "perfect, complete" (Young). "Eis to panteles," says Adam Clark, "means to all intents, degrees, and purposes; and always, and in and through all times, places, and circumstances; for all this is implied in the original word; but 'in' and 'through' seems to be the particular meaning here because of what follows, 'he ever liveth to make intercession for them.'" Must some people have a more "able" intercessor and one whose mediatorial prerogatives reach farther than "the uttermost," in order to have a fair chance?

(e) It Charges God with Incompetence and Inefficiency. The God who hears the cry of little babes (Gen. 21:17,20) and in whose favor little children bask before they know the Lord (1 Sam. 2:26; 3:7); the God whom no one ever sought in vain (Isa. 45:19) and who himself ardently seeks worshipers (John 4:23); the God who sees and cares for the ones he wants on earth, even if there be but one in the whole world (Isa. 66:1,2) *; who purges his floor (Matt. 3:12) and destroys kingdoms without losing the "least grain of wheat" in all these national and stupendous judicial inflictions (Amos 9:8,9) can any one complain against this God who has never, in a single instance since the world began, failed to "respect the lowly" (Psa. 138:6)? Could posthumous probation give a better angelic ministry, a more powerful word, a more efficacious mediator, a more competent and efficient God?

V. The Destruction of the Devil, Effected by the Obedience and Sacrifice of Christ, was the Obliteration of Sin in the Flesh. Christ was "made of a woman" (Gal. 4:4), was in the likeness of sinful flesh (Rom. 8:3), and was finally crucified through weakness (2 Cor. 13:4). In partaking of "flesh and blood" Christ came into contact with the devil, "that through death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is the devil" (Heb. 2:14). "For this purpose was the Son of God manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil" (1 John 3:8). In the Scriptures the devil always stands related to "flesh and blood." The word "devil" comes from the Greek word diabolos, which means calumniator or accuser (Cruden). And of "satan" Cruden says: "This is a mere Hebrew word, and signifies an adversary, an enemy, an accuser." Neither of these terms allude to an immortal, personal being apart from man, as is commonly imagined. Christ's acquaintance with the devil came through his partaking of "flesh and blood"; and he destroyed the devil in himself "through death" (Heb. 2:14). If the devil were a being separate from "flesh and blood," how could Christ's participation in that nature have anything to do with him? All sin proceeds from the desires of the flesh, and originates in the heart of man (Matt. 15:19; 1 John 2:16; Gal. 5:19,20; Rom. 8:7). Deny that the proclivities and gravitations of human nature are earthwards and you are unable to explain how the immolation of "flesh and blood" on the cross in the person of Christ destroyed the devil. "Through death" by dying. If the devil were a strong, immortal, personal being distinct from man, it needed the angelic nature, not "flesh and blood," to cope with him; it needed life, not "death," to defeat him; it required strength, not weakness, to destroy him. "The devil" spoken of in Heb. 2:14 is explained to be sin in two ways:

(a) To "destroy the devil" in this text is called the sacrifice of sin in equivalent passages (Heb. 9:26; 1 Cor. 15:3; 1 Pet. 2:24; 1 John 3:5).

(b) "Him that had the power of death," the equivalent of "the devil" in Heb. 2:14, in interchangeable passages is declared to be sin (Rom. 5:12,21; 1 Cor. 15:21,56; Rom. 6:23; Jas. 1:15).

*"To this man, even to him," etc.

OBITUARIES

James Frank Day was born in Gardner, Maine, in 1852, and moved to Chicago in 1901; was married to Mrs. May Francis in 1907, she having two children. He has been a member of the church of God since coming to Chicago, and was an elder in the Chicago church up to his illness. He died March 14th, 1918, aged 66 years, leaving a wife and five children to mourn his loss. Funeral services were held at the chapel 4817 W. Chicago Ave. Burial was made in Forest Home Cemetery, where he was laid to rest to await the resurrection at the coming of Christ.

Sister Day wishes to thank the brethren and sisters through The Restitution for the kindly manner in which they have responded and contributed to their material needs, and asks their prayers that the divine Father may sustain and keep her and her family through the coming years as she struggles with the battle of life.

R. W. Thompson.

Mrs. J. S. Quackenbush

Mrs. J. S. Quackenbush, nearly seventy-four years of age and a well-known resident of Warsaw and Pierceton for the last thirty-five years, passed away at the home of her daughter, Mrs. C. D. Balliett, 1116 East Centre St. on Saturday evening, Feb. 23. Death was due to heart trouble and paralysis. Mrs. Quackenbush had been in failing health for the past two months, and a week ago sustained a stroke of paralysis. Since then her condition had been critical until the end came on Saturday evening.

She was the widow of the late J. S. Quackenbush, who died about twelve years ago, and who was employed at the Conrad Wagon works for a number of years. Mrs. Quackenbush was a woman held in high esteem by the many throughout the county who had the pleasure of her acquaintance. Always of a genial disposition, she made friends everywhere and was always ready to assist the unfortunate and sick, spending considerable of her time as a nurse in recent years.

She leaves three daughters, Mrs. C. D. Balliett, with whom she made her home; Mrs. Blanche Covert and Mrs. Neva Binkley, of Los Angeles, Cal., and one son, E. J. Quackenbush, of Cincinnati.

The funeral will be held at the home at 2 P. M. on Tuesday, C. E. Kolb officiating. Burial will be at Pierceton.

Dear Auntie Wince:

Mother Quackenbush was peacefully laid to rest on Tuesday afternoon. She was always patient and said she was ready to go at any time. She suffered quite a bit the last week or so, yet her only trouble seemed to be shortness of breath. She had no other pain and even insisted that she was not sick. At times it was very difficult for her to breathe. She had a stroke of paralysis a week ago last Sunday, and from that time could talk but very little. Her left limb and side were helpless.

She spoke of you often and wondered how you were getting along, and whether you were well. She enjoyed her visit with you while there, and was delighted with your association. If she had been stronger she would have come oftener, but she feared something might happen to her away from home. She went with me to church very few times this last summer because she could hardly walk that far. She enjoyed it when she did get to attend. You have lost a good friend and sympathizer and the church a devoted adherent. She admired the Editor of The Restitution, and was only saddened by the fact that she could not help the work more. Her little mite was cheerfully given.

Mother was a faithful Christian unto the last and did her little effort to preach the gospel. She will surely reap a rich reward. I tried to be a faithful son to her and hope I came up to her expectations.

We can only say goodbye with a hope to be reunited in the future.

Chas. D. Balliett.

PORTUGAL IS OLDEST ALLY

First Friendly Agreement Made With Britain in Fourteenth Century

The Portugese troops now holding a part of the line in France are giving an excellent account of themselves. These troops are largely recruited from the fishing classes, and they not only make good and resourceful soldiers, but are particularly capable of enduring hardships. It is particularly pleasant to reflect that Portugal is now taking an active part in the war, for she is Britain's oldest ally. As far back as 1352 a Portugese envoy signed a covenant with the citizens of London to insure good faith in commercial dealing, and in 1386 this alliance was strengthened by the Treaty of Windsor. Sixty years later Edward III. issued a proclamation in favor of Portugese traders and Portugal has remained loyal ever since. When Napoleon decreed that Continental powers should close their ports to Britain, Portugal refused to obey, and as a result Marshal Massena invaded the country in 1810.

Prayers in the Morning

The little boy requested to be allowed to say his prayers in the morning instead of at night. "Nothing can happen at night 'cept burglars," he explained, "but in the daytime there's automobiles an' fallin' downstairs, an' gettin' licked, an' lots o' things."

Psaltery Like Modern Guitar

The psaltery was a stringed musical instrument to accompany the voice. In the prayer book version of the Psalms the Hebrem word is given as "lute." This instrument resembles the guitar, but was larger with a convex back, resembling a gourd.

EDITORIAL

In reply to Sister Endsley and others, we say send on your MSS. The dull season for MSS. approaches. Before it gets here let all our contributors and readers write; for the more articles we have to select from, the better the subject matter of the paper.

From Brother R. A. Daniels and several other correspondents who write of their experiences in scattering "Bible Lessons" among friends and acquaintances, we are tempted to quote; but as they presumably did not write for publication, we refrain. But we are truly glad that these lessons are being blessed of God and are advancing the cause of the gospel in the earth. As Brother Daniels lives in a community where Seventh-day Adventists and Russellites are rather numerous he uses lessons V and VI more than any other numbers.

Brother Geo. F. Haines says he has been enjoying The Restitution for a year. He thought one day how selfish it was to feast upon the work of others continually, and render no service to them. Upon reflection he felt so badly about the matter and so utterly condemned that he wrote a ten-page MS. entitled "A Review of Dr. R. A. Torrey's Sermons," and promises to write again. And if the Lord will, the reader will have the pleasure and benefit of this article next week. When we edited Brother Haines' MS. we felt bad, too felt bad because a man with such rare ability to write had been silent a whole year. Time is short. Let us all get down seriously to business in the Lord's work for what little time remains.

Lesson VII of "Bible Lessons" series appears in this issue. It will be a good antidote for Trinitarianism. That part of the lesson which shows that Christ is a mediator to bring sinners into the truth, and that he then acts as an advocate to keep them in it, is commended to the brethren and sisters as "meat in due season.' That some may dissent from this view we anticipate, but we are sure that investigation will lead all open minded readers to see where the truth lies. This aspect of Christ's priesthood has long been imperfectly understood. Criticisms of the lessons are as welcome as commendations.

COMMUNICATIONS

Dear Restitution:

Those letters appearing in The Restitution from time to time on the Signs of the Times are good reading and very interesting. The events now taking place in the land of Palestine in and around Jerusalem to the world at large excite but little interest, but those on the watch tower scanning the eastern horizon see much, yes, very much to cause them to look up; for in the immediate future we can see Israel's clock after an idleness of over eighteen hundred years, once more marking off time again. A nation once more standing upon their feet and Gentile times going into the descendancy.

Your brother trusting in the hope of life eternal.

S. Cronkhite

Dear Brother Huggins:

I wish to say that Brother Heckman has been with us and baptized myself and son, H. Campbell, into the all-saving name. We truly rejoice that at last we belong to God's family. Brother Heckman was with us a week, and truly we had a feast of good things. No one but the isolated can know what that was to us. Brother Heckman preached a few sermons to the people in this place. The seed has been sown. The soil looks poor; the Lord knows truly our brother is a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of God. May God's richest blessing be with our brother and his family.

I wish to thank those who so kindly helped us to get a minister to come to us. God reward them. I will say we are searching the Scriptures, and we are rejoicing in our Lord. Help us by your prayers. We greatly enjoy The Restitution. God bless those who write such good things concerning the kingdom of God.

Your brother and sister looking for our King,

Hazen and Clarissa Campbell.

THE FIRST AND THE SECOND COVENANT

An Address by Brother Geo. B. Alldridge March 17, 1918

Then said he, Lo, I come to do thy will, O God. He taketh away the first, that he may establish the second" (Heb. 10:9).

God's ways are perfect. Every good gift and every perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness neither shadow of turning (James 1:17). "That ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven: for he maketh his sun to rise on the evil and on the good, and sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust" (Matt. 5:45). "Be ye therefore perfect even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect" (Matt. 5:48).

Evolutionists teach that all life begins on a low plane of existence, and gradually ascends to a higher. This may be so, but God surely began in his dealings with the human race on the plane of goodness and perfection. "And God saw every thing that he had made, and behold it was very good" (Gen. 1:31). Nevertheless as we study and learn to understand God's plan respecting the destiny of our race, the way of God is to go from good, ascending through the scale of human experiences to that which is better, larger, fuller, and more blessed.

The way of man when left to follow his own desires is to descend from goodness to depravity. "And even as they did not like to retain God in their knowledge, God gave them over to a reprobate mind, to do these things which are not convenient" (Rom. 1:28-32).

God's goodness excites in us growing wonder and gratitude. This makes us desire and pray, and believe and expect. This condition of our hearts and minds creates in us a capacity to receive the best things. The first good thing, mortal life, is removed that the second, immortal life, may the more fitly come.

First came the Jewish sacrifices, followed by Jesus, the great sacrifice for sin, who came to do the will of God. With the Jewish sacrifices passed away on the removal forever of instructive and consoling ordinances. Read Rom. 7:6:16. "Which are a shadow of things to come: but the body is of Christ" (Col. 2:17). "For the law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things, can never with those sacrifices which they offered year by year continually, make the comers thereunto perfect" (Heb. 10:1). The new becomes the establishment of the real, perfect, everlasting atonement. Beloved, this is a blessed advance: for no one who sees Jesus regrets the passing away of Aaron. No one who knows the simplicity of the gospel wishes to be brought under the perplexities of the ceremonial law. No one who feels the liberty of Zion, desires to return to the bondage of Sinai. While the law and ordinances were in force they were of great value but they were removed because, when Jesus came, they were needless as types. "Blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us, and took it out of the way, nailing it to his cross" (Col. 2:14)

If the law of ordinances were in force under the New Covenant they would prove burdensome as services. They would become dangerous as temptations to formalism, as today we see illustrated in the Catholic, Lutheran, and Episcopal churches. They would have taken off the mind from the substance which they had formerly shadowed forth. Beware of setting up any other ordinances: for this would be to build again what God has cast down. "Wherefore if ye be dead with Christ from the rudiments of the world, why as though living in the world, are ye subject to ordinances? touch not, taste not, handle not: which all are to perish with the using, after the commandments and doctrine of men?" (Col. 2:20-22).

Beware of imagining that the second can fail as the first did. The one was taken away, but the other is established by God himself. "But now hath he obtained a more excellent ministry, by how much also he is the mediator of a better covenant, which was established upon better promises" (Heb. 8:6) Man as a mortal being, of the earth earthy, through sin under the first covenant lost the Eden of life; man as an immortal being through obedience gains Paradise and immediate fellowship with God. The first Adam of the earth, earthy, failed: the second Adam, the Lord from heaven, triumphed over sin, death and the grave.

Man through sin and disobedience annulled the first covenant, a covenant of works; Jesus by holiness and obedience established the second covenant that can never be broken or annulled. The first temple erected by Solomon with all its transient glories has melted away. But the second and spiritual temple rises unseen beneath the eye and hand of God its great architect and builder. "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God, and that the spirit of God dwelleth in you? If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy: for the temple of God is holy, which temple ye are" (1 Cor. 3:16, 17). "Ye also as lively stones are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood to offer up spiritual sacrifices acceptable to God by Jesus Christ" (1 Pet. 2:5).

Our first righteousness is taken away by the conviction of sin: but the righteousness of Christ imputed to us because established. "For they being ignorant of God's righteousness, and going about to establish their own righteouness, have not submitted themselves to the righteousness of God, for Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth" (Rom. 10:3, 4). Read Rom. 1:16-18.

Under the first covenant through the weakness of our flesh we were led into death, darkness, and despair; under the second covenant we are enabled by strength in Christ, to give up self, superstition, and vain philosophy so called, and to permit ourselves to be led and trust in the spirit of God.

Our first joy died like the thorns which crackle under a pot; but now our joy is in God. Hence we rejoice evermore and our joy is full. "And the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away" (Isa. 35:10).

No need now of prophets to enquire,
The sun is risen, the stars retire;
The Comforter is come and sheds
Its holy unction on our heads.

In conclusion, then, we find under the first covenant:

Our bodies decay and grow old; under the second they will be renewed, be full of youth and immortal vigor, changed in the twinkling of an eye, fashioned like unto his glorious body, and the express image of our risen Lord.

Under the first covenant the earth and heavens and their elements shall be dissolved; under the second the new heaven and new earth will be instituted. "And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes: and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away. And he that sat upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new. And he said unto me, Write: for these words are true and faithful" (Rev. 21:4, 5).

Now we drop out one by one, falling asleep in Jesus, into the peaceful and quiet solitude of death; tomorrow, under the new, we shall awake, breaking the bands of death, charmed and thrilled by the grand reunion in the kingdom that shall never, as the first, be overturned.

Now in death we lose all; under the new we find life and all in God.

"Therefore let no man glory in men. For all things are yours, whether Paul, or Apollos, or Cephas, or the world, or life, or death, or things present, or things to come; all are yours; and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's" (1 Cor. 3:21, 22).

Our mortal life now, like the ebbing tide, flows out going down in the west like the evening sun; soon life, like the flooding tide in its fulness as the glorious morning sun rising in its effulgence and glory, will shed its rays of warmth and love upon us, who by patient continuance in well doing under the second or new covenant will actually receive glory, honor, immortality and eternal life.

Somewhere I have read that when Alexander the Great went upon a hopeful expedition, he gave away his gold, and when he was asked what he kept for himself, answered, "The hope of greater and better things." So we of the church of God when asked why we give up the world, the flesh, and sin should answer, "I hope for better things." In type the last is always better than the first. Read John 2:7-10; Isa. 25:6-9.

THE RESTITUTION SUNDAY SCHOOL LEAF

Lesson XXII

The King's Priesthood. 1

Memory Text

"But ye are a chosen generation, a Royal Priesthood, an holy nation, a peculiar people" (1 Pet. 2:9).

1. "I saw in the night visions, and behold, one like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of Days, and they brought him near before him.

2. "And there was given him dominion, and glory and a kingdom, and all people, nations, and languages should serve him" (Dan. 7:14, 15).

3. "And he hath on his vesture and on his thigh a name written, King of kings and Lord of lords" (Rev. 19:16).

4. "Ye are they which have continued with me in my temptations.

5. "And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me;

6. "That ye may eat and drink at my table in my kingdom, and sit on thrones judging the twelve tribes of Israel" (Luke 22:28-30).

7. "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father on his throne" (Rev. 3:21).

8. "It is a faithful saying: For if we be dead with him, we shall also live with him; if we suffer, we shall also reign with him; if we deny him, he also will deny us" (2 Tim. 2:11, 12).

9. "And they sung a new song saying, Thou art worthy to take the book, and to open the seals thereof, for thou wast slain and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation;

10. "And hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth" (Rev. 5:9, 10).

Practical Truths

The subject for today's lesson is one whose domain is seldom visited by a Sunday School; yet owing to its connection with the reward God has promised to his people we deem it worthy of close and earnest study. We are assured in many places in the Bible that Jesus will some time reign as a king over the nations of the earth. These assurances are put in the most terse and unequivocal language. Further, these statements when taken in connection with the context show beyond a doubt that his reign will be both literal and personal, and upon the earth. Jesus so taught it not only to his twelve Apostles (Matt. 19:28) but it has been made the subject of special revelation in both Testaments. In connection with his personal reign after his return he has promised over and over again that his followers shall share not only in his rulership and be associated with him as kings, but also that his priesthood will be shared by them, hence kings and priest. The church is never said to be reigned over but reigns with her Lord, over the nations.

Notes on the Lesson

A Royal Priesthood. Those who will exercise [illegible] authority of kings and priests; while they rule [illegible] they also act in the capacity of priests, [illegible] the law of God and directing the people [illegible] way of life. This will be after Jesus comes ([illegible] 25:31; Dan. 7:27; Matt. 16:27)

1. The Son of Man Came. This time will come [illegible] Jesus will return to earth (Matt. 24:11; Zech. 14:4, 5).

3. King of Kings. If Jesus is King of kings [illegible] evident that there are kings under him. When [illegible] shall reign on earth the saints reign with him.

4. My Temptations. Jesus was tempted during his earthly life as we are (Heb. 4:15).

5. Appoint. Jesus was made heir of all things by appointment; so too, we will receive the kingdom by appointment (Heb. 1:2).

6. Sit on Thrones Judging. Given the authority to rule and judge the kingdom of Israel.

8. Faithful saying. There is no vague promise contained in this saying but one of startling reality. 1st: It brings to view the resurrection as a matter of promise conditioned on dying with him now. 2nd: By sharing his suffering to share in the future reign. 3rd: To deny him now, will be to receive his rejection of us when he comes.

9. New Song. The saints are here represented as singing the new song. Its burden is: 1st: Redeemed by the blood of Christ. 2nd: Taken out of the world. 3rd: Made kings and priests. 4th: Reign on the earth.

Suggestive Topics and Questions

1. King of Kings. What is understood by the expression "Kings of kings"? Who is King of kings (Rev. 19:16)? Is Jesus reigning now as King of kings? When will our Lord be King over all the earth (Zech. 14:9)?

2. Reigning with Christ. What do you understand by the word "reign" as applied to a king? What promise did Jesus make to the twelve Apostles (Matt. 19:28)? When will Jesus receive his throne? When will the Apostles share with him? What promise is made to those that overcome (7)? What faithful saying has the Apostle Paul recorded (8)? Does that saying teach that if faithful we shall reign with Jesus? Read Rev. 20:4. Does this teach that the faithful will be kings with Christ? Read Rev. 20:6. Does this teach that the reigning will be after the resurrection?

3. Reigning Over the Nations. If the saints are to be kings, over whom will they rule (Rev. 2:2[illegible] 27; Dan. 7:27)? Will there be nations on the earth after Jesus comes (Psa. 72:6-11; Isa. 11; Ezek. [illegible]7, 28)?

4. Reigning on the Earth. What do you understand by the term "the earth"? Is it definitely stated where the saints shall reign (10)? Does the Bible anywhere state that the saints shall reign in heaven? What kind of a government will Christ and his church administer (Isa. 32:1; Psa. [illegible]:12-14)? Does the world need a good government, such as Christ and his saints will exercise?

Memory Verses: Micah 6:8; Titus 2:13, 14

Golden Text: Prov. 18:24

To Our Friends

God bless you! So I breathe a charm
Lest grief's dark night oppress you.
Then how can sorrow bring you harm
If 'tis God's way to bless you.

And so, not "all thy days be fair,
And shadows touch thee never,"
But this alone, God bless you, dear!
So thou art safe forever.

People who have warm friends are healthier and happier than those who have none. All the wealth of the world could not buy you a friend or pay you for the loss of one.

Just being happy is a fine thing to do:
Looking on the brightest side rather than the blue;
Sad or sunny musing is largely in the choosing,
And just being happy is brave work and true.

A True Friend

A true friend unbosoms freely, advises justly, assists readily, adventures boldly, takes all patiently, defends courageously, and continues a friend unchangeably.

To Have a Friend, Be One

What shall a man be proud of if he is not proud of his friends.

Remembrance is the sweetest flower
Of all this world's perfuming.
Memory guards it, sun or shower,
Friendship keeps it blooming.

Sweet is the phrase that even in few words, doth speak of pleasant thoughts and breathe remembrance; for there's no separation, though apart, 'twixt friend and friend.

'Tis thine to celebrate the thoughts that make
The life of souls;
The truths for whose sweet sake
We to ourselves and to our God are dear.

Friendship is the sacred thread let down from the windows of heaven to bind human hearts together

It is a good thing to be rich, and a good thing to be strong, but it is a better thing to be loved by many friends.

Blessed is he who hungers for friends, for, though he may not realize it, his soul is crying out to God.

It is with life as with men, we make friends by being a friend.

The Greatest of These is Love

This week, we give you the opinion of the world's greatest thinkers concerning friendship, and you will notice they are all the same. To our mind the greatest, the most sublime thought is contained in the quotation used in the weekly puzzle. In it we see faith set out as a monument, mounted on the pedestal of works, the two combined making one harmonious whole. And as in your imagination you gaze upon this monument, look closely at the base and see thereon, chiseled in deep, bold letters, the name of this man of faith, "Abraham, The Friend of God." Then ask yourself if this title, bestowed by God the Father, is not worth all the time, all the energy, all the cost of a life time of works of love used in perfecting our faith. Knowing also that no man can afford to invest his being in anything lower than faith, hope, love, ... these three, the greatest of which is love.

Scatter Sunshine

There's enough of shadow along life's way,
Enough of sorrow and want and woe;
So the thing to do is, be brave and true,
And scatter sunshine where'er you go.

Friendship is love boiled down and flavored with kind thoughts, kind words and helpful deeds.

Blessed is he who is a friend, for he continuly shall learn new lessons of faith, hope, and love.

Life is to be fortified by many friendships. To love and to be loved is the greatest happiness of existence.

Words of frank cheer, glances of friendly eyes are love's smallest coin, which yet to some may give the morsel that may keep alive a starving heart.

Be slow in choosing a friend, slower in changing one.

Desire joy and thank God for it; renounce it if need be, for another's sake: that is joy beyond joy

Let This Sink In

Oh, my friend, it would be truer
If to those we love we gave
Tender words while they are with us,
Than to say them o'er their grave.
Those who die no longer need them,
And the words they longed to konw,
While they lived, are only wasted
On the cold, deaf ear, below.

Thy love shall chant its own beatitudes after its own self working.

A child's kiss, set on the sighing lips shall make thee glad.

A poor man served by thee shall make thee rich.

A sick man helped by thee shall make thee strong.

Thou shall be served thyself by every sense of service which thou renderest.

An Ambassador

Affections should not bind the soul, but enfranchise it. Through them it should know larger, deeper, higher life. They should be to it wings by which to mount. A friend comes as an ambassador from heaven.

Kind hearts are the garden,
Kind thoughts are the roots,
Kind words are the blossoms,
Kind deeds are the fruits.

Our Weekly Puzzle

"But I would not have you to be ignorant, brethren, concerning them which are asleep, that ye sorrow not, even as others which have no hope. For if we believe that Jesus died and rose again, even so them also which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him."

Who wrote the above ? Who was it written to ? What is the "hope" referred ti ? When shall the hope be realized ? How shall it be accomplished ? Where can the passage be found ?

Answer in next issue.

Answer to puzzle in last issue:

The "father" was Abraham; the "son" Isaac; and the word "our" refers to Isaac.

The Old Testament record is found in Genesis 22:1 to 18.

It was Abraham "who believed God," and for his faith he was called "the Friend of God."

The passage can be found in James 2:21-23.

Open rebuke is better than secret love.

Faithful are the wounds of a friend; but the kisses of an enemy are deceitful.

TREATISE ON HELL

Article IV

An Example of What the Fire Does

Believers in the eternal torment of the wicked, claim that the fire does not consume the wicked, but that they are kept burning forever in its flames, but Jude makes the subject so plain that no reasonable man or woman can fail to see it. He gives us an example of what the fire of God does. Jude 5th verse: "Even as Sodom and Gomorrah, and the cities about them, in like manner, giving themselves over to fornication, and going after strange flesh, are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire." Their destruction is set forth as an example, that we may know what the fire, or judgment of the Almighty, does. It will put the wicked out of existence, as it did the cities of Sodom and Gomorrah. No one could claim that Sodom and Gomorrah are still in existence, burning away, and yet never consumed, but it would be as reasonable to claim that they are still burning, as to claim that the wicked dead will forever exist amidst a fiery flame. Any man, or woman is blind, indeed, who cannot see that the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah is an example of the eternal destruction that awaits the wicked.

But, says an objector, not yet satisfied, "does it not say that the wicked are to be cast into a lake of fire and brimstone ?" It cerainly does, but does it say that it is a literal lake ? Not in a single instance, but it does tell us plainly what the lake is. Rev. 21:8: "But the fearful and unbelieving, and abominable, and murderers, and whoremongers, and sorcerers, and idolators, and all liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death." What is this lake of fire and brimstone into which the wicked are to be cast ? The answer is plain, and from the Almighty himself, that it is the second death, and not a literal lake of fire and brimstone. The Almighty has a right to tell us what he means, by what he says, and he says that the lake of fire and brimstone is the second death.

There Shall be no Night There

The hardened believers in eternal torment will often refer to Rev. 14:11, as certainly proving their fearful doctrine, but that this is far from the facts in the case, can be plainly shown. It reads: "And the smoke of their torment ascendeth up forever and ever, and they have no rest day or night who worship the beast, and his image and whosoever receiveth the mark of his name." What is the meaning of aion, or aionas, aionon, here rendered "forever and ever" ? We turn to the Lexicon and the first definition we read is "one's life time." That makes it very plain, seeing that we have proven that the life of the wicked is only for a few short fleeting years, or as an Apostle declares in James 4:14: "A vapor that appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away." The punishment could only endure as long as life lasted. For another definition we read: "A space of time clearly defined." This is still plainer. It is a space of time clearly defined—no doubt about it. The last of the previous verse tells us just when this torment is experienced, Rev. 14:10: "They shall be tormented . . . . . in the presence of the holy angels, and in the presence of the Lamb." How clearly this proves the theory of the world wrong. They teach that the wicked have been in misery for ages in the past, but this plainly declares that the torment is in the presence of the Holy Angels and of the Lamb. Jesus, the Lamb of God, and the Judge of the earth, and the Holy Angels of God, who will accompany him when he returns to earth, will be present on this occasion, clearly showing that it is after the judgment, after he has separated the sheep from the goats, or the chaff from the wheat, and the wicked, represented by the chaff receive destruction at the hands of the just and righteous judge who will do all things right.

It says that "they have no rest, day or night, who worship the beast and his image," and as we can plainly prove that night is going to cease, their punishment cannot endure beyond the time when night will end, in the soon coming and glorious future. This is clearly proven in Rev. 21:25: "And the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day, for there shall be no night there." Night will end, and with it all death, all misery, all pain.

There Will Be No Pain There

Jesus, the Lamb of God, is coming to dwell among men, and cause all misery and pain to cease. Rev. 21:3-5: "And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying: Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell among them, and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things have passed away." Thank God, the former things—the present evils—are all going to pass away, and in that blessed age there will be no pain.

This is the Bible doctrine, that when night ends, all pain will cease, no torment for the wicked, but destruction to the workers of iniquity. How merciful, how just a God we serve, truly a God of love and mercy who doth not willingly grieve or afflict the children of men (Lam. 3:33). and only purposes to put out of existence all who will not become worthy of living, and who will not come into submission to his divine law. How horrible the old pagan doctrine, that you have been believing in, that pain would never cease, but that through an endless eternity, tortured souls would writhe in never-ending agony; and, how just and merciful, and altogether lovely the all-wise, and omnipotent Being at whose fiat, all pain, agony, and death will forever cease. No wonder the Psalmist exclaimed (Psa. 89:1): "I will sing of the mercies of the Lord forever; with my mouth will I make known thy faithfulness to all generations, for I have said, mercy shall be built up forever." That is what all God-fearing ones will sing of—of the mercy of the Lord, that shall endure forever—not of never ending torture, but of his wonderful mercy and goodness that leads men to repentance. Fourteenth verse: "Justice and judgment are the habitation of thy throne—mercy and truth shall go before thy face

A PAPER REPRESENTING THE CHURCH OF GOD, AND DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF "THE THINGS CONCERNING THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND THE NAME OF JESUS CHRIST" (ACTS 8:12)

VOLUME 70 CLEVELAND, O. APRIL 9, 1918 NUMBER 14

THE PAST AND FUTURE

Kind friends we had in days now gone,
With some we've parted on the way;
Few there be that now remain,
And in the home land stay.

Some have gone to distant shores,
To seek new fields of green;
While others sleep beneath the sod,
With hills and dales between.

But there's a hope revealed to man
In God's most precious word;
We read it on each page we scan,
Our hearts with joy are stirred.

Yes, Christ will come; Oh list the call,
When Gabriel's trump shall sound;
And wake the righteous chosen all,
Now sleeping 'neath the ground.

A REVIEW OF DR. R. A. TORREY'S SERMON:

"Is Future Punishment Endless?"

It is needless to observe that I entirely concur with Dr. Torrey's opening remarks "that we cannot decide this question by what reliable theologians believe, or either the prevailing belief of the majority, as theologians may be wrong. Majorities are often wrong, and minorities are often right." And again, "Neither can we decide it by reasoning as to what such a Being as God must do." The Bible then, and the Bible alone, must be our standard of appeal, for as Dr. Torrey points out, "one ounce of God's revelation is worth more than a thousand tons of man's speculation."

Meaning of "Aionion"

The text quoted as a basis for his homily is Matt. 25:46, and the crux of the question of the duration of the punishment turns on the meaning of the Greek word "aionion," translated not only "eternal" and "everlasting" but also "before times eternal," and "for ever," "for ever and ever." Of the word "aionion" he says "that we should bear in mind that the meaning of words is not determined by their derivation but by their usage." To this we perfectly agree. The three meanings given to this word by Thayer's dictionary are well and good, but they are not complete. There should be a fourth meaning added thus: "Things which have a beginning," "things which have an end." This will presently be determined by Dr. Torrey's test and "Scripture usage." Greenfield's Greek Lexicon, recognized by scholars as equally as good or better than "Thayer's," gives the meaning of "aionion" as "duration, finite or infinite, unlimited duration, eternity, a period of duration, past or future, time, age, lifetime." Young's Hebrew and Greek Concordance defines the word from which "eternal," "everlasting," and "for ever" are taken to mean, "age," or "age lasting." Whether that age or time is limited or unlimited, is ending or endless, depends upon the duration of that to which the words are applied. If applied to things whose nature is never ending such as God, Jesus Christ, the eternal life of the redeemed, their redemption, their glory, their consolation, their inheritance, etc. etc., it is "without end"; but if applied to the transitory, perishable things or persons, it is limited by the duration of that thing or the duration of the lifetime of the person to which it is applied. With these observations upon the meaning of "aionion" we will now take a look at Matt. 25:46.

Punishment is Eternal

After giving strong and honest reasons why the qualifying adjective "eternal" should mean the same in the one half of the sentence as it does in the other half, the Doctor goes on to say, "He (Christ) evidently sought to convey the impression that the punishment of the unsaved was of the same duration as the life of the saved"; and the conclusion he reaches is: "We have the same reason in God's word for believing in endless punishment, that we have for believing in endless life," otherwise "if we give up one we must give up the other." This conclusion I heartily endorse, the punishment will last as long as the reward of the saints, both are co-eternal. The contrast in the text will be brought out more clearly if we insert two words to complete the analogy, without destroying the sense of the language of the text, as follows:

> "And these (wicked) shall go away into eternal punishment, and these (righteous) shall go away into eternal reward."

The reward of the righteous is specified in the text as "life"; the punishment of the wicked is not specified in the text; its duration only is taught. We must look elsewhere in God's word to find what the punishment of the wicked consists of, as the antithesis or opposite of

Wicked is righteous;
Punishment is reward; and
Death is life.

Death the Penalty for Sin

We find therfore that Scripture supplies the missing word "death" or its equivalent of "perish" or "destroy" as the punishment of sinners. "The wages (or reward) of sin is death" (Rom. 6:22, 23). "The soul that sinneth shall die" (Ezek. 18:4). "He that converteth a sinner from the error of his ways shali save a soul from death" (James 5:20). "For the end of these things (sins) is death" (Rom. 6:21). "The motions of sin . . . . did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death" (Rom. 7:5). "We are unto God a sweet savour of Christ in them that are saved, and in them that perish: to the one we are the savour of death unto death, and to the other the savour of life unto life" "If ye live after the flesh ye shall die; but if ye through the spirit do mortify the deeds of the body ye shall live" (Rom. 8:13). "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power" (Rev. 21:4). He that overcometh shall not be hurt of the second death" (Rev. 2:11). But the fearful, unbelieving . . . murderers, liars, shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death" (Rev. 21:8).

Now having seen from the New Testament, with one exception, that the punishment of sinners will be their death, the second death,. we can see that the puishment in the text is the exact opposite of eternal life, that is, eternal death, a state or reign of death which will have no end. They shall remain dead as long as the righteous remain alive, through the eternal ages.

This is fully borne out in the Old Testament Scriptures also. It is also fully borne out by Christ himself where he uses the equally strong words which are the equivalent of death, "perish," "destroy," and "destruction," which come from the Greek word apollumi, also rendered "to kill, to lay waste, to consume, to make an end of, to perish, to come to an end, to die" (Liddell and Scott's Lexicon). If we carefully follow up the "usage" of these words in the Bible and notice the things and persons to which they are applied in their context, it will be proved as I have found it. that these words will not bear any figurative or theological sense, but that in nearly all cases the literal sense will stand. Only in one or two cases will they bear a figurative sense by being specifically qualified in the text or immediate context. Shall we take the few figurative uses of these words found in the Bible, and fasten their interpretations upon the many literal senses where these are found, or visa versa ? Ask any scholar. Yet this is precisely what Dr. Torrey does in his treatment of the words "destruction" and "death" in paragraph 1 and 2 of section 4 of his sermon. "Is there a Literal Hell" in the February issue K. B., which I may take up in another paper. There is but one rule in deciding whether language is literal or figurative, and that is written language must invariably be taken as literal, unless the fact of its being figurative is beyond all question. Departure from this rule in interpretation leads to endless confusion and ambiguity. In my next paper on Dr. Torrey's sermon "Is there a Literal Hell ?" I will take up more fully the literal interpretation of the words "perish," "destroy," and "destruction," "death," and "life," as used in the Old Testament and by Christ and the apostles. For the remainder of this paper I will confine myself to the subject matter of this sermon, which mainly has to do with the words "for ever and ever" (aionion).

After giving fifty-nine instances out of the seventy-two the word "aionion" occurs in the New Testament, he goes on to say that "in not a single one of the thirteen remaining times is it used of anything that is know to end." Again he says: "There is not a single passage in the whole book in which this expression is used of anything but that which is absolutely endless."

Aionion Not Always Endless

I presume that he means by the "whole book" the New Testament. If so I challenge his assertion as not being according to fact. But why leave out the Old Testament ? Is not that also a part of the oracles of God ? Why this silence in passing over the evidence in the Old Testament ? These are the facts: The Hebrew equivalent of "aionion" from which this Greek word is derived, is "Olam," and carries in the Old Testament the same meaning as in the New—"for ever," "perpetual," "eternal," and "everlasting." I have found seven or eight instances (there are many more) where these words do not carry the sense that they are endless. I will take time to quote but one or two from the Old Testament: Jonah 2: 6, "The earth with her bars was about me for ever." This was three days and nights while Jonah was in the fish's belly. "For ever" is here used to denote limited time, long or short. Exod. 21:1-6: "For ever" here denotes a natural lifetime. Death ends our servitude to a master, makes the servant free from the master (Job 3:19). So again we find it means limited time. See also 1 Sam. 1: 22. In the twenty-third chapter of Leviticus we find the commandments of sacrificial ordinances and observances were to be kept by the Israelites "for ever." This expression occurs three or four times in the chapter. The sacrificial "ages" were types and shadows pointing to the one supreme sacrifice, Christ; all were to be done away in Christ, the atoning sacrifice for the sins of the whole world. So we find this for ever is limited. In Isaiah 24:8-10 we find language concerning a temporary judgment upon the land of Idumea very similar to that in Revelation. The things pictured in these verses are not to last unto eternity: they are to take place "while one generation follows another." The smoke is not now going up, and from all reports it has been pretty well traversed and explored by travelers even in our day, yet "none was to pass through it for ever," and the "fire was not to be quenched night or day,". and "the smoke to go up for ever and ever." Here is another limited for ever and ever. And so I might go on quoting from the Old Testament instances of the limited uses of the word "olam" translated "everlasting," "for ever and ever."

Presuming that the Rev. Doctor in his strong assertion regarding the "endless" sense of "for ever" means the New Testament, I will now turn my attention to controverting his statement from the New Testament. Jude 7: "Sodom and Gomorrah and the cities about them . . . set forth as an example suffering the vengeance of eternal fire." 2 Pet. 2:6 says they were "turned into ashes." Christ said in Luke 17:29, "But the same day that Lot went out of Sodom it rained fire and brimstone from heaven, and destroyed them all." Peter says they were turned into ashes, and Christ says "destroyed them all," the same day that Lot went out they were burned up: yet it was called an eternal fire. It should be unnecesssary to ask the question, "Are those cities with their population still burning now ?" To ask this is to answer it, and the common sense, sane answer will be that they are not still burning. Then what becomes of the Doctor's asssertion "that in not a single one of the remaining thirteen instances is it used of anything that is known to end" ? And yet it is called an eternal fire. There is no getting away from this plain fact, that eternal or everlasting fire in the Scriptures is not a fire which is to burn unceasingly from the moment it is lighted throughout all future endles ages; but a fire which shall burn itself out when its work is done, viz, the irrevocable destruction of sinners. This is the eternal fire which shall "devour the adversary," a fire which shall be terminable in itself, but which shall produce an eternal endless result upon those who are cast into it, even the second death from which there is no release. The eternal fire is eternal in its effects.

"Everlasting Punishment" Explained

The next occurrence of the word "aionion," rendered "for ever," "eternal," and "everlasting," we will look up is in Philemon 15th verse. Here is another "for ever" denoting limited time, bounded at least by Onesimus' natural lifetime. In Hebrews 6:2 the writer speaks of an "eternal judgment." Does this mean that the judgment will be eternally going on throughout eternity and never cease ? No, for God hath appointed a day in which he will judge the world with righteous judgment (Acts 17:31); and when that time has passed, a day of twenty-four hours, or a period of time called "a day," then the judgment will have passed. Then this "eternal judgment" is not to be eternally going on, and therefore it is not "without end." The first judgment upon Adam and his race (Rom. 5:18) and the sentence of death passed upon all men is not eternal in its effect for in Christ there is deliverance. Hence the first judgment was not eternal. When Christ comes again, the future judgment takes place and the wicked are punished with the second death. The sentence and punishment of death will never be lifted; it will be for all eternity. The decision of this judgment never being reversed, and the penalty which it inflicts never being lifted, makes it an "eternal judgment." It is everlasting or eternal in its results.

There are three or four everlasting things promised to the believer which are not a process eternally going on, but are eternal in their results.

Everlasting consolation" (2 Thess. 2:16);
eternal salvation" (Heb. 5:9).
Eternal redemption (Heb. 9:12).

Will the saints need consoling daily throughout eternity ? Do we not need Christ's consolation in the trials and tribulations of this life, and has he not sent us the comforter for this very purpose ? Is not this present consolation eternal in its effects or results ? Does not it help us to endure to the end that we might be eternally saved ? This eternal consolation is therefore limited to the trials and tribulations of the saints in this life. "Eternal redemption." Christ will not have to be eternally redeeming the saints throughout the endless ages of eternity. The redemption which Christ obtained for us on the cross, having once been completed by the shed blood of Christ, there remains nothing more to be done. We have been bought by his precious blood, but by virtue of that one sacrifice our redemption from sin and death will be eternal in its results. Therefore if Christ is not to be employed through eternity in everlastingly saving, consoling, and redeeming the saints why should not we understand the words eternal and everlasting in the very same sense when applied to the punishment of the wicked as when applied to the destiny of the righteous ? All these eternal things then, are eternal in their results and not in the process by which they are obtained.

Eternal punishment is not eternally punishing.
Eternal judgment is not eternally judging.
Eternal destruction is not eternally destroying.

To be consistent in our methods of interpretation it is absolutely required that we accept the above eternal things as when applied to the righteous or the wicked as eternal in their results, or as the eternal results of divine law. Now we can clearly see the reasonableness of the interpretation given to Matt. 25:46, that the punishment will be absolutely eternal, and will last as long as the eternal reward of the righteous. We cannot get around this fact if we accept the Bible as the word of God. We cannot possibly tone it down unless we are equally prepared to reject the whole Bible.

Death the Only Possible Eternal Punishment

Now what is this eternal punishment ? Imprisonment, shame, degradation, corporal punishment or fines, must all be cast aside as inadequate. None of them can possibly be an everlasting or eternal punishment in the absolute sense.. They must all come to an end. Looking a little further we find there is only one punishment which meets the whole case, and that is death. This is the only possible everlasting punishment which a mortal man can suffer. Death is the opposite of life, it is the cessation or loss of existence, a deprivation of the joys and pleasures of living. It will surely be admitted that death is a punishment as awarded by human judges. It is the severest of all punishments commonly known as "capital," or chief punishment. Suppose death could be inflicted for a limited period—say five years; then that would be five years' punishment, or ten, or twenty, or a hundred years—that would be punishment for these periods, although the persons consigned to such a fate would feel nothing while the periods were running. But they would suffer the loss of all rights, privileges, and enjoyments belonging to the living during those periods, and that would be a severe punishment. If a person could be eternally deprived of life and its pleasures, then no one could reasonably object to that being called eternal punishment, for it would also be an eternal loss.

As there is fear, pain, suffering, and torment which more or less precede natural death, in the infliction of that death, so we should expect the second death of sinners in the lake of fire to be preceded by the fear that hath torment, weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth. This is exactly what Scripture teaches. When God passed the sentence of the first death upon Adam and his race on account of his sin, the sentence was "thou shalt die," specified thus, "For dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." The sufferings of a natural lifetime, and the agony and pain immediately preceding death, while these accompany the penalty, they do not consist of the penalty for sin: that was death. So likewise the second death, which must be similar to the first death, is deprivation of life or loss of existence, or it could not be called a second, if it were not similar in its effects to the first. Nowhere does the Bible teach that eternal torment is the wages or penalty of sin. If it were so then Christ did not pay the penalty of our sin.. He did not take our punishment on himself; for no one will claim that Christ is suffering eternal torment, but "he tasted death for every man." He paid the penalty of sin. "The wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life."

"Everlasting Punishment" Explained

Leaving the word "eternal" we will now take a look at another word describing the fate of the wicked quoted by Dr. Torrey. It is found in 2 Thess. 7-9: "Who shall be punished with everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord, and from the glory of his power." Here is what Dr. Torrey says of this word: "What does everlasting destruction mean? In Rev. 7:8-11 we are told that the 'beast' goeth into destruction; so if we can find out where the beast goes or into what he goes, we shall know what destruction means in the Bible usage." He then quotes Rev. 19:20, and points out that it is the "lake of fire where the beast and the false prophet are cast, and he arrives at this conclusion: "And so we see that 'destruction' is a portion in the lake of fire." This is not a proper definition of the word "destuction" according to Bible usage, as destruction is an accomplished result, or an end of anything. The lake of fire is (or will be) a place, or a locality. He should have said that "destruction" is a work accomplished by the lake of fire to which we would perfectly agree, as the lake of fire is a place of destruction, to which the words of Christ agree, "But fear him who hath power to destroy both soul and body in Gehenna" (hell). Bible usage to which the Doctor appeals does not confirm his statement regarding that destruction means "a portion in the lake of fire." The foolishness of this definition will be apparent if we try to apply this meaning to the numerous words of "destroy," "destroyed," and "destruction" in the Bible, and read instead "a portion in the lake of fire." I am confident, and will make this positive assertion, that not in one instance in the whole Bible will the words 'destruction" or "destroyed" stand for his meaning "of a portion in the lake of fire." So much for the Doctor's usage of the word "destruction."

But this is not all. In order to get in his eternity of conscious torment for the wicked Dr. Torrey quotes Rev. 2:10: "The devil that deceived them was cast into the lake of fire where are also the beast and the false prophet (after having been there for one thousand years, see contex), and they shall be tormented day and night for ever and ever." And further says the Doctor: "So we see that destruction means a portion in the lake of fire where its inhabitants are consciously suffering without cessation for ever and ever." Now we have the Doctor's meaning of the word destruction - "eternal conscious torment." It is found in a symbolical expression in the least understood book in the whole Bible, and the literal, common sense meaning of the word "destruction" found in scores of passages of Scripture is, according to Dr. Torrey to be set aside, in favor of this theological jumbling together of symbolical verses, whose true meaning he has not tried to understand except in a literal sense. A theory that has to be supported by such means is indeed hard pressed for proofs.

No Eternal Torment in Rev. 20:10

The question is, does Rev. 20:10 really teach an endless torment for wicked people? First of all, notice that the word "are" in this verse in the Authorized Version is in italics, which shows that word is not in the original, but was supplied by the translators to fill up the gap. Murdock's Syriac New Testament and Rotherham's Greek Emphasised New Testament both read "were" instead of "are." There is not a verse in the Bible that teaches that there will be a "live beast" and a "prophet" undergoing torment in the lake of fire at the time the devil is cast in. They were cast in one thousand years before, but being destroyed in there they will not be there when the devil goes in.

The devil will be tormented day and night for ever and ever. Does this mean unlimited time? We think not for two or three reasons. First, Heb. 2:14 says "that Christ through his death might bring to nought (nothing) him that hath the power of death, that is the devil." The word rendered 'brought to nought" is elsewhere rendered "destroy" and "destroyed," and is defined by Webster as "Destruction consists in the annihilation of the form of anything, that form of parts which constitutes it what it is." Therefore the destruction of the devil will surely make an end of him. Destruction is the exact opposite of preservation. The torment of the devil, whatever form it takes, is in time, not eternity; it is during the judgment time, during the day and night period. After "this there shall be no more night." We have already seen that "aionion," "for ever and ever," is limited to any length of time, long or short.

It would be well to point out here that when we read of pouring out of vials of wrath, trumpet sounding, thunderings, angel voices, etc., they refer to something previous to the judgment and not beyond it. Babylon's "smoke of her torment," which was to rise for ever and ever (Rev. 9:2. 3; 18:1-24). Whatever this smoke symbolises, certainly must come to an end, for we read these words in verse 21 of this chapter (18): "And a mighty angel took up a stone like a great millstone, and cast it into the sea, saying, Thus with violence shall this great city Babylon be thrown down, and shall be found no more at all." How can her smoke continue to rise up from her when she does not exist? Just in the same sense that the "smoke of Babylon can rise up for ever and ever" when she does not exist, is the same sense that the "smoke of the torment" of the "beast" and the "beast worshipers," "the false prophet," and the "devil," and also the smoke that rose up "for ever" from the burning cities of the plain (Isa. 34:5-10).

I offer this solution, as in all these cases except in the burning cities it cannot refer to literal smoke; therefore it must refer to something that smoke symbolises or represents. We can expect to find this in the symbolic book of Revelation where the "beast" stands for the wicked; earthly kingdoms ruled by kings, and the false prophet also stand's for an anti-Christian sys'em, and Babylon, drunken with the blood of the saints, that sat upon the seven mountains of the kingdom of the beast (Rome the set of the Papacy is built upon seven hills). All commentators agree that this spiritual Babylon, the seat of wickedness, represents the apostatized church of Rome. It should be unnecessary to ask can literal, earthly powers or kingdoms "smoke," can an evil, political system "smoke," or can the church of Rome "smoke."

I venture in the way of a solution to suggest that "smoke" ascending for "ever and ever" symbolizes nothing more, or nothing less than "remembrance," a "memorial of complete ruin." The saints throughout eternity will always remember the just retributions of God and his fearful judgments upon all evil kingdoms of this world, all evil systems, upon all evil persons, and on the devil himself, which resulted in their total destruction and obliteration from the face of the world they had so long cursed. "And there shall be no more curse." Empty "hades" (gravedom), after having delivered up the dead which were confined within it, is also cast along with the monster "death" into the "lake of fire," to be destroyed, to come to an end, a thing of nought, for there will be no more use for it. "O hades, where is thy victory; O death where is thy sting." "And death shall be no more, neither shall there be mourning, nor crying, nor pain any more; for the former things are passed away" (Rev. 21:4. Thank God for this.

Thus we see that all evil systems and kingdoms, personified under various symbols with their dupes, and death, sin, and hades, also personified, can neither "smoke," nor suffer "torment" when once they are totally destroyed in the fire of divine wrath and retribution in the symbolical "lake of fire, which is the second death." And thus we see that the conclusions of Dr. Torrey by taking symbolical language and applying it in a literal sense to teach the "endless conscious torment of the wicked in hell-fire," is a baseless perversion of the truth, and contrary to Scripture, and is a flagrant defiance of the laws of sound scriptural exegetics.

TREATISE ON HELL

Article IV

If the theory of the day were true, and that judgment was never ending torture, there would be no mercy, or justice in it, but justice would stand afar off, and mercy with uplifted hands would denounce it, but with the truth that death is the wages of sin, mercy and justice join hand's in one grand union, and we can exclaim in the words of the fifteenth verse: "Blessed are the people that know the joyful sound—they shall walk, O Lord, in the light of thy countenance." Friends and brethren, do you not want to be among the number so blessed as to know this joyful sound; to know that there is no endless torture for the wicked; to know that all sickness, misery, pain and death will forever cease? This is the joyful sound that we want you to know, in place of the doleful, agonizing one of eternal torment that has been sounded through the past centuries of darkness. This is the joyful sound, the joy that is set before us that will lead men to repentance. All who do not know this joyful sound, this wonderful goodness of God, have never been led to repentance, and will never be permitted to drink of the river of his pleasure. Men in darkness and ignorant of God's blessed word, do not know this joyful sound. They do not understand the fate of all who will not fear God, and work righteousness. The inspired writer says, Psa. 73:17: "Until I went into the sanctuary of God, then understood I their end." What did he understand their end to be when enlightened by the truth? Listen to the answer: "Thou casteth them down to destruction." They are not kept in eternal torture but are cast down to destruction. Ninth verse: "How are they brought into desolation as in a moment." Not a long lingering eternity of torture, but brought to destruction in a moment. All who come into the sanctuary of God, all who become enlightened by his blessed truth, know the joyful sound that all misery, all pain will cease in the glorious day of his coming.—L. T. Nichols.

Random shots are dangerous and cruel, likely to hit the wrong person and to hurt his feelings unnecessarily. It is very easy to say a hard thing, but not so easy to say it to the right person at the right time.—Charles Kingsley.

Willingness to face things comes pretty near being what makes a successful man. It is certainly what marks a wise man. There is nothing but trouble in store for the man who insists on blundering ahead with his eyes shut.

EDITORIAL

Easter Sunday was a day of gladness in Cleveland. The choir gave a number of most excellent selections at both the morning and evening meetings. Two had witnessed the good confession of faith and were baptized before the Lord's supper in the morning, namely, Mrs. Tubbs, the mother of Sister Mildred Tubbs, formerly Seventh-day Adventist, and Mrs. Jackson, also Seventh-day Adventist. At the breaking of bread service which followed the baptism of these friends, and at which they were formally received into fellowship, several brethren and sisters gave us hearty exhortations which were greatly appreciated by all.

FANATICISM AND THE WAR

Early in the war, under the best advisors to be procured, the Editor of The Restitution took the problems raised by the military situation into consideration, and has given its readers constant advise and counsel. We stand firmly and uncompromisingly against combative service so far as the people of God are concerned. We are ready to go to prison and to death for this conviction if the necessity should arise. For the sake of obeying Christ's commandments the loss of life would not be too much to pay. Thoughts of expediency or philanthropy are out of place when urged in defense of doing that which the law of Christ forbids. If riots must rage unless we disobey Christ, let riots rage. If life and property must be exposed to the ravages of wicked men, unless we do that which Christ prohibits, let all houses, property, and lives go unprotected. If we must incur and pay heavy fines, unless we break the law of God, let the penalties be paid. If we must be killed unless we forfeit the approbation of the Lord, and lose eternal life at his return, let us all die at once.

Such are our deep rooted convictions, and in petitions at the beginning of the war we acquainted the war department with the facts in the case. They listened to us patiently and replied respectfully and frankly. Our claim for exemption from combative service comes legitimately within the provisions of our National Constitution. And up to date there has not come to our attention a single instance in which Uncle Sam has mistreated or ill used one of our brethren. Cases have occurred where our government has had to use severity, but in every case they were fanatics. They have either tried to discourage young men from obeying the draft law, or have disobeyed it themselves. They have contributed to the war fund every time they mailed a letter, or they have worked in some manufacturing plant where munitions are made, or they have farmed to help feed the soldiers at the front. But inconsistently enough, when they were drafted they refused to obey the law, and on top of this unscriptural action they declined to do non-combative service - a service they were doing before they were drafted! They are cranks and fanatics every one. And if any brother in the church of God presumes to act in disobedience of the law we wish it understood that he is failing to conform to the counsel given through The Restitution. Once more we urge our brethren to listen to our counsel and follow our guidance for their own good and for the glory to God. Be loyal, obey the law in every case, ask for non-combative service, and you will find the government reasonable and readily obliging. As cases of fanaticism which the people of God want to keep clear of we cite the following cases:

Hits Draft, Begin 15-Year "Pen" Term

Burlington, Vt., March 30.—Clarence H. Waldron, formerly pastor of a Baptist church at Windsor, convicted last week of sedition, was taken to Atlanta today to begin a fifteen year term in the federal prison there. His wife and little daughter went with him and will make Atlanta their home.

The specific charge on which Waldron was convicted was attempting to obstruct the draft by urging young men not to register, even to the point of being shot.—The Leader.

A Christadelphian Fanatic

Ernest P. Wells, a conscientious objector, of Boydton, Mecklenburg County, Virginia, has been sentenced to ten years at hard labor by the military authorities at the camp for failing to report for duty when ordered by his local board. The trip to Fort Jay, N. Y., where the sentence will be carried out, was begun last night. Wells travels under guard. His case is the most unusual that has arisen at the camp and the most unusual that has yet arisen in the United States through the working of the draft law.

Wells who claims to be a conscientious objector of the Christadelphian faith, was legally drafted into the service and ordered to report on November 17th for duty at Camp Lee. He claimed exemption from all military service and, on account of his religion, had been granted a certificate exempting him from all service "except in some capacity declared by the President to be non-combatant." On the day before he was ordered to report he appeared before his local board and filed a protest in writing, stating that he would not report for military duty because of his religion. He stated that he could be found at his home, and would offer no resistance to arrest but would protest against being taken. He was apprehended on January 7th and brought to Camp Lee as a deserter.

Gen. Brett Didn't Take Much Stock in Defense

Brigadier General Lloyd M. Brett, who as acting commanding general, reviewed the case, first recited the foregoing facts and then said:

"He is clearly a wilful deserter because he knew what steps were being taken to induct him into the service, and he endeavored to place himself as far as he could in a legal position to defend his defiance of the law as a conscientious objector. In so doing he made the same mistake that many conscientious objectors have made in placing their own construction upon that portion of the law which exempts them from service except in such capacity as is declared by the President to be non-combatant. Had he chose to obey the law he would have found upon reporting that the war department has exercised the greatest patience in dealing with men in his position. Having wilfully defied the law, he has no reason to expect treatment different from any other deserter."

The court that tried Wells, sentenced him to 20 years at hard labor but this was reduced to ten years by General Brett.—Petersburg Index-Appeal, March 28th, 1918.

THE STONE-MAN ON THE RAINBOW THRONE

"After this I looked, and, behold, a door was opened in heaven: and the first voice which I heard was as it were of a trumpet talking with me; which said: Come up hither, and I will show thee things which must be hereafter. And immediately I was in spirit: and, behold, a throne was set in heaven, an One sat on the throne. And he that sat was to look upon like a jasper and sardine stone: and there was a rainbow round about the throne, in sight l'ke an emerald (Rev. 4:1-3).

I The Resurrection of the Saints and Their Ascension to the Throne of David

1. "After this;" Greek, "After these things," a door in the heaven of political power is opened for the occupancy of the saints (vs. 1; 1:19; Luke 4:5, 6; 10:18; Rev. 2:26, 27; Dan. 7:27).

2. "The first voice which I heard." This trumpet-like voice first raised John and all the saints from the dead; "after this" he "turned to see the voice that spake," he "looks" expectantly until the voice invites him to "Come up hither" (to the throne) (vss. 1, 10; 1:10; Lev. 23:24; Num. 10:4; Zech. 9:14).

II The Stone-Man Occupies the Throne

1. Christ and the saints in two natures, mortal and immortal: combination of flesh and spirit: jasper (spirit); sardine (flesh). (1). (vs. 3; Gen. 49:24; Isa. 8.14; Rev. 21:11, 23; Zech. 2:5, 10; Exod. 28:9, 12; 1 Pet. 2:8).

III The Rainbowed Throne

1. The rainbow appears as a guarantee of the stability of the throne and glory revealed (Gen. 6:18; 9:12, 16; Psa. 89:3, 4, 36, 37).

2 It is seen after storm, after peace has come to the elements (vs. 5; Ezek. 1:26; Mal. 4:1, 2; Isa. 18 3, 4; Rev. 14:1, 15; 2 Sam. 23; Psa. 72; Deut. 32:1, 2; 33 26-28; Isa. 55:10, 11).

(1) Sardine in Hebrew is composed of the same letters as Adam. The invention of the Masorites pronounces Adam oden; this translated into Greek by the Seventy is called "sardine" because found about Sardis, and because it is a carnelian of a color resembling that of flesh.

MARIOLATRY UNSCRIPTURAL

Arthur L. Manous

Through their "Marian devotion" our Roman Catholic friends have, it is believed, perverted the first gospel sermon. In the Lord's words addressed to satan they attribute the work of Christ to the Virgin Mary, as is evident from their "explanatory version" of Genesis 3:15, which they translate thus: "I will put enmities between thee and the woman, and thy seed and her seed: she shall crush thy head, and thou shalt lie in wait for her heel" (The Douay—Catholic—Version).

Notice the pronouns "she" and "her" in the last clause as here rendered. In our common Protestant Version the text reads: "And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou sha't bruise his heel."

Observe here that the originals rendered "she" and "her" in the Roman Catholic Version is, in the Protestnat Bible, translated "it" and "his." Commenting on this change from "it" and "his" in our Protestant Bible to "she" and "her" in the Vulgate or Catholic Version, one writer says: "It, i. e., Christ. The corruption of this in the Vulgate into "she" lies at the root of Mariolatry: the verb in the singular masculine shows that zer'a (seed) is here to be taken in the singular, with Sept. i. e., Christ" (Note on Gen. 3:15, in the Companion Bible).

Dean Alford, D. D., "an eminent Biblical critic" says on this point: "Observe, it is it, or he, viz., the woman's seed, that shall bruise the serpent's head, and not she, as the Vulgate and the Church of Rome have it here. Even were it "she," no such application of the words could be made as the Church of Rome makes to the Virgin Mary, for it would mean she, the woman then present, by means of her seed which is to come" (Alford's "Explanatory Commentary" on Genesis, P. 17, London, 1872).

One Roman Catholic admits, however, that the reading of "the Hebrew text . . . . refers to the seed of the woman," and that their renderings "she" and "her" is "an explanatory version" a "private interpretation" of this text by the Roman Catholic Church, if you please! See the Catholic Encyclopedia, Vol. 15, P. 464.

That "the Hebrew text . . . refers to the seed of the woman," as admitted by this Catholic writer, and not to the woman herself as is made to appear in the Catholic Bible, will be further evident from a comparison of the Catholic Version with other translations of the clause:

"She shall crush thy head, and thou shalt lie in wait for her heel" (Douay—Catholic—Version).

"He shall watch against thy head, and thou shalt watch against his heel" (Sept. Gr. and Eng.).

"He shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt wound his heel" (Lesser's Trans.).

Once more: "He shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel" (The American Version).

The apostle Paul settles this question and puts the divine seal on it when he says: "And the God of peace (not the woman in the garden, nor the Virgin Mary) shall bruise satan under your feet shortly" (Rom. 16,20). Again: "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, he (Christ) also himself likewise took part of the same; that through death he (not the Virgin Mary) might destroy him that had the power of death, that is, the devil" (Heb. 2:14).

WHAT DOES BAPTISM MEAN TO US?

To a Young Friend who is Desirous of Coming Into the Body of Christ

Preach the gospel. He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved (Mark 16:15. 16). Repent and be baptized (Acts 2:38). And many hearing, believed and were baptized (Acts 18:8). As many as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ (Gal. 3:27) So many of us as were baptized into Jesus Christ were baptized into his death. We are buried with him by baptism into death; that like as Christ was raised up from the dead by the glory of the Father, even so we also should walk in newness of life (Rom. 6:3, 4).

From these Scriptures we see the gospel must first be preached to us. The next step is belief of what we hear, next repentance. The word "gospel" literally means good news. What was the good news which Jesus commanded the apostles to preach? In Matt. 4:23 we find the gospel which Jesus preached was of the kingdom. In Acts 8:12 we find that Philip preached the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ as the things necessary to be heard and believed before baptism. We find in Acts 28:30, 31 Paul preaching the same things for belief and obedience. It is not necessary to go into detail of the things of the kingdom. We all, as believers in the word, know we are now in the world of the alien, that our King has been rejected of them, that he is now engaged in calling out and building up an army of saints who, when he comes to claim the kingdom and the uttermost parts of the earth as lawfully his, will be workers with him in reorganizing and setting up his dominion under the whole heaven. These things receive prominence among us because they are the things of the gospel which have long been hidden under the rubbish of the false doctrines of the unclean woman and her daughter.

The things of the name of Jesus Anointed. Paul styles them good news of the grace of God (Acts 20:24). What is this favor which God has made known to us? First that when we believe and receive Jesus as the begotten Son of God, believe that he died to redeem us, when we turn from our sins, or in other words, die to sin, are then buried in water as a sign of our faith. We have been buried with Christ and have risen with him to a new life. Christ covers us with his righteousness, and we are in the sight of God without sin. This is God's grace which he bestows on us. Here are the steps: hearing, believing, repenting, dying, burial and resurrection to a new life. This is what scriptural baptism means.

Suppose we hear and believe all the things of the gospel and are immersed in water: do we in a figure enter into Christ's death? No, because if we understand all things of God's word and do not repent and renounce our old master we are still in Adam just as much as if we received and believed only a part of the things contained in the gospel. It is a hopeless state to be buried alive. And just as surely as one is buried in water who has not died to sin he cannot rise to a new relation.

We hear and believe. What is it to repent? The generally received definition of the word is to be sorry we have sinned; but this falls short of the Bible meaning. In the Scriptures we are taught that repentance is complete turning away from sin, not willingly to transgress again. This is death to sin. If we have died this death, then we are buried with Christ, and with him we rise as new creatures. We have renounced our allegiance to the present evil world and become citizens of the world to come. Henceforth we are "under law to Christ" (Rom. 5:6; Col. 3:24; 1 Thess. 1:2). Before we change our allegiance it is the part of wisdom to study carefully the laws which must govern us when we become members of the commonwealth of Israel. Jesus gives us this admonition in Luke 14:25 to 34 verses. We must love the things we once hated; we must hate the things we once loved, we must do good to those who treat us evilly; we must pray for those who despitefully use us We must absolutely put away all malice and evil speaking, being kind to the unthankful and unholy, in meekness instructing those who know not the truth, have no union with worldly organizations, and no fellowship with those outside of Christ only to do good to all as we have opportunity. To love the brethren as we love our Lord, in honor preferring them above ourselves. The way is strait and narrow. All who will live godly in Christ Jesus shall (not may) suffer persecution.

In view of all this we are led to exclaim as those of old, "Who then can be saved?" It would be impossible for us of ourselves to do these things. The things which are impossible with men are possible with God (Luke 18:27). Our only strength is in him; our sufficiency is of God (2 Cor. 3:5). Listen to one who suffered many more things than we are called to suffer: "I can do all things through Christ who strengthens me" (Phil. 4:13). Does the way seem too strait and narrow? Count it up again. A little time of trial, an eternity of bliss; persecution from ungodly men for a small period, the companionship of saints and angels world without end; deprived perhaps of the approval of those whose good will we desire, but for ever with the Lord; walking with him here, and reigning with him in glory in the world to come! When we consider these things can we not say all are but light afflictions which endure but for a moment compared with the "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory"?

OBITUARY

J. T. Perry, second son of Brother and Sister R. E. Perry, was born at Pleasanto, Kansas, July 2nd, 1875, and died March 15th, 1918, at Phoenix Ariz. He is survived by his faithful wife and 17 year old son Walter, father and mother and two brothers.

On April 7, 1896, he was married to Martha Hunts, at Mound City, Kansas. To this union was born two sons, Todd and Walter. Todd died at the age of twelve years.

Brother Perry came to Arizona from Kansas in 1896 settling near Arlington, but a few years later moving near Phoenix where he resided until his death. Brother Perry was a faithful, zealous worker for the truth, and never let an opportunity pass to make mention of the grandeur of the coming kingdom. He was very patient in his suffering. The end finally came in a peaceful sleep until the morning of the resurrection.

Brother Perry was known as a loving father and husband, and was loved by all who knew him. The funeral was conducted by the writer at 11 A. M Monday, March 18th, in the Baptist church at Phoenix, where we discoursed to a large audience on Thess. 4:13-18, after which we laid Brother Perry away in the beautiful cemetery near Phoenix by the side of his little son to await the call of him who said, "I am the resurrection and the life.

O. J. Allard.

It is only little men who are so tremendously concerned about the precise allotment of credit in the world.

Lesson XXIII

The Kingly Priesthood II

Memory Text

"Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection: on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God, and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years" (Rev. 20:6).

1. "For every high priest taken from among men is ordained for men in things pertaining to God, that he may offer both gifts and sacrifices for sins;
2. "Who can have compassion on the ignorant and on them that are out of the way; for that he himself also is compassed with infirmity" (Heb. 5:1, 2).
3. "Wherefore holy brethren, partakers of the heavenly calling, consider the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus" (Heb. 3:1).
4. "Wherefore in all things it behooved him to be made like unto his brethren, that he might be a merciful and faithful high priest in things pertaining to God to make reconciliation for the sins of the people" (Heb. 2:17).
5. "For we are made partakers of Christ if we hold the beginning of our confidence steadfast unto the end" (Heb. 3:14).
6. "By him therefore let us offer the sacrifice of praise to God continually, that is, the fruit of our lips giving thanks to his name.
7. "But to do good and to communicate forget not; for with such sacrifices God is well pleased" (Heb. 13:15, 16).
8. Do ye not know that the saints shall judge the world? and if the world shall be judged by you, are ye unworthy to judge the smallest matters?
9. "Know ye not that ye shall judge angels? how much more things that pertain to this life?" (1 Cor. 6:2, 3).
10. "And I saw thrones, and they that sat upon them and judgment was given unto them" (Rev. 20:4).

Practical Truths

The gospel is preached in this age for the purpose of calling out a people from the world for the future. This body of believers is known under various names in the Bible as the Body of Christ, the Bride, the Church, Kings and Priests, Royal Priesthood, etc. To them will be accorded the honor of being associated with Jesus in the rulership of the world, the judgment of the future, and the mediatorial work of the ages to come. In other words, they will be priests, judges and kings, after the return of our Lord to take charge of the government of this earth. That it will in the future be a mediatorial body under Jesus as the head is evident from the fact that Jesus (the Branch) is to be a priest upon his throne, and that this body is co-heirs, joint-heirs with him; as well work of the future. The work of Jesus is two-fold—as the many direct statements which refer to the suffering, and the glory that was to follow. His work of suffering ended upon the cross, while the great work of ruling and government is future.

Notes on the Lesson

First Resurrection. The one occurring prior to the next one mentioned in the chapter in which the rest of the dead stand before God. It may refer to chief or first in importance.

Priests of God. There may be two orders of priests as the expression "of God" and "of Christ" may possibly refer to one class of work relating to Christ and another class of work relating to God.

1. Taken from Among Men. The electic na'ure of the gospel is here indicated, and the sanctification or setting apart of this priesthood for a specific work. Is Ordained for Men. The object being to bless men by the offering of "both gifts and sacrifices for sins."

2. The Ignorant. Under the law there was provision made for ignorance and the sin of the simple. Out of the Way. Those who are not in the way of life. The work of this mediatorial body will be to lead those who are ignorant into the truth, and those who are out of the way to the way of life; and as Jesus was tempted in all points that he could be touched with the feelings of our infirmities, so too, these priests unto God and Christ will know the wants of the people because they were once "compassed with infirmities."

3. Par'akers of the Heavenly Calling. Can it be indeed that we will ever thus be exalted? Are we to be made partakers with Jesus in this exalted calling? In view of this Paul says, "Consider" the Apostle and High Priest of our profession, Christ Jesus. Study his character. Study his work.

4. Made Like Unto His Brethren.—Jesus was made like unto us, that we might be made like unto him by-and-bye.

5. Made Partakers of Christ. How often is this idea repeated under different forms. We are to be partakers of his life; partakers of his inheritance; partakers of his sufferings here; joint-heirs and partakers of the high calling of being kings and priests sharing his throne and mediatorial work in the future.

6. The Sacrifice of Praise.—The nature of the sacrifices is changed also. The priesthood changed, the law which made men priests changed and the sacrifice under this new order is the sacrifice of praise, and to do good. From certain texts it is apparent that the literal sacrifices will for a time continue in the next age (Zech. 14:21; Ezek. 43:18-27; 46:21) among the children of Israel. Yet the priests who officiate there will be of the sons of Zadoc, while the mediatorial above mentioned will have charge of the higher sacrifices of prayer, praise, good works and directing the mind into the higher life.

Suggestive Topics and Questions

1. The Work of a Priest. What is a priest? (Ans. The best definition is the one given in our lesson, viz: one who "offers both gifts and sacrifices for sins.") What class of persons must he deal with? On whom will they have compassion? What is meant by an ignorant person? By one who is out of the way? Will it be a part of the office work of the body of Christ when made kings and priests to educate the people?

2. Jesus the High Priest. When was Jesus made High Priest? What is his work now? Has he made the atonement? What is the atonement? What is a mediator (1 Tim. 2:5)? Is the work of a mediator the same as that of a priest?

3. Par'akers of the Heavenly Calling. What is this calling? For what purpose have we been called? Do we receive this position in this life? What is is to be a partaker?

4. When Their Priesthood Begins. When will the saints enter upon their work as priests? Does Rev. 20:6, teach that it will be after the resurrection? When will the saints judge the world (8)? Will they be priests, judges and kings at the same time?

THINKING

If you think you are beaten, you are;
  If you think you dare not, you don't;
If you'd like to win, but you think you can't,
  It's almost a cinch you won't;
If you think you'll lose, you're lost,
  For out of the world we find
Success begins with a fellow's will
  It's all in the state of his mind.

If you think you're outclassed, you are;
  You've got to think high to rise;
You've got to be sure of yourself before
  You ever can win a prize.
Life's battles don't always go
  To the stronger or faster man;
But soon or late the man who wins
  Is the one who thinks he can.

A Profitable Idler

James Watt in his boyhood used to watch very closely the working of steam in his aunt's tea-kettle as it puffed from the long nose, or lifted the cover. He would sit by the hour, watching and thinking of the force contained in the steam, and the uses to which it could be applied. His aunt thought him incorrigibly lazy, and scolded him sharply, and begged him to stop idling and begin to study. But those hours she thought wasted in idleness were busier than those of the hardest working boy in England. They led to the invention of the steam engine, and the improvements of manufacturing which have made England the wealthiest country in the world. It would be well for many boys if their idle moments were put to as [illegible] use.

And remember, what one boy has done another can do. It is not always necessary that we all do the same thing, but we all can do something; and if we try real hard we will be able to do that "something" better than any one else can do it. And the world will be better because we have lived.

Get Up Steam

A locomotive without steam is dead, useless. A man without energy is like the steamless engine.

Get the pressure swing the indicator hand chock up to the pin. There are wheels to turn, if you would move ahead on the track of success. How much presure do you register?

Steam used tooting the whistle "just to hear it blow," is steam was'ed it's needed to work the pistons. Energy wasted in blowing about your ability is misspent. Save it for your business.

You'll need lots of steam when you hit the upgrade. If you come to a place where you can "coast" store it up against the hard pulls up the incline. Don't open the valve and let it blow away just because the running temporarily is easy. You're likely to strike a hill at almost any time.

Shepherds of Men

One of the insistent cries of our time is for leaders who are of the type of the Good Shepherd. The complexities of our modern human relationships are so intricate that only such leaders can get a following. Men and women are straying here and there, finding occasional pasturage at whatever convenient place they stop. An unrest characterizes the great mass of humanity. They want a guide who will not only suggst the way, but who will also go before them without fear. This was the sort of shepherding done by Jesus. It is the way he shepherds men today. Why is it that not more are in his flock? Is it because those already in have devised burdensome conditions of entrance? Is it because those already in fail to make known his care and satisfying protection? What an opportunity for the under-shepherds of Jesus Christ! The good shepherd never forces men into his flock, but if they will come he will lead them in ways of which they have not dreamed. Here is another opportunity for the adult class of men and women. Do the folks whom we invite to our class know that we have for a leader the Good Shepherd Jesus Christ? If not, what an argument we have to induce them to fellowship with us and know him for themselves.—Ralph Welles Keeler.

Young writers will do well to remember that Lord Bacon re-wrote one of his works twelve times; and Pascal his letters several times, and one of them thirteen times; while Edmund Burke had his works printed two or three times on a private press before offering them to a publisher.

Our Weekly Puzzle

"But in the end of the days it shall come to pass
That the mountain of the Lord's house shall be established as the top of the mountains,
And it shall be exalted above the hills;
And people shall flow into it.
And many nations shall go and say:

" 'Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord.
And to the house of the God of Jacob:
And he will teach us his ways,
And we will walk in his paths!'
For out of Zion shall go forth the law,
And the word of the Lord from Jerusalem."

What is the meaning of "the end of the days?" When shall they say, "Come, let us go to the mountain of the Lord?"

Where can this passage be found?

Answer next week.

Answer to puzzle in last issue:

The passage was written by Paul, and Silvanus and Timothy to the church of the Thessalonians. The hope here referred to is to again see, and be with their loved ones who have died. This shall be realized at the second coming of Jesus, and be accomplished through a "resurrection out from the dead."

The passage can be found in 1 Thess. 4:13, 14.

VOLUME 70 CLEVELAND, O. APRIL 16, 1918 NUMBER 15

HOME AGAIN!

We have wandered far in southern climes,
And distant fields of green;
Where flowers bloom from June to June,
And fruits grow ripe between.

Yet nought can ease the human heart,
And cause man not to crave;
For all is transient, fleeting here,
And leads man to the grave.

But there's an age that's soon to dawn,
When death shall be no more;
When Christ shall reign on earth o'er all,
With peace, from shore to shore.

And saints shall live forever then,
And nature ne'er grow old;
We'll not be tortured by the heat,
Nor suffer with the cold.

Oh may that day of glory come,
And spread this wide earth o'er;
When sin for aye has fled away,
We'll joy forever more.

BIBLE LESSONS ON FIRST PRINCIPLES

Lesson VIII

BY ROBERT G. HUGGINS*
Pastor of the Church of God, 10623 Lee Ave., Cleveland, O.

THE HOLY SPIRIT AND ITS GIFTS

I. The Spirit of God Is Divine, Radiant Power

The spirit of God is not a distinct person from the Father, but his radiant power and energy in universal diffusion (Gen. 1:2; Psa. 139:2-12; Job 33:4; 26:13; Psa. 104:30; Judges 14:6; Num. 27:18. Nehe. 9:30; 2 Pet. 1:21).

II. The Holy Spirit Is the Power of God In Official Manifestation

The Holy Spirit is God's "free spirit" gathered up, concentrated, and focalized for the work of creation, the bestowal of miraculous gifts, and the accomplishment of divine results (Psa. 51:11,12; Luke 1:35; Acts 10:38; 1:5, 8, 2; 11:15,16; 8:17-19; Micah 3:8).

III. The Gifts of the Holy Spirit Were Only Temporary Investments of Divine Power

The gifts of the Holy Spirit which were bestowed upon the official members of the church in the days of the apostles, accomplished the purpose for which they were given and, accordant with reason and revelation, they ceased from the earth, not to exist again until the kingdom of God comes. That they were only temporary gifts and powers appears from the considerations following:

(a) The gifts of the Holy Spirit are "the powers of the world to come" (Heb. 6:4,5).

(b) When they were bestowed upon men in the past, they were given in a limited and measured form, except in the case of Christ. They were but foretastes, firstfruits, earnests, and prophetic intimations of the feast of heavenly powers which we shall enjoy in full when the kingdom of God shall come (Matt. 10:7; 12:28; Luke 9:1; 11:20; Rom. 8:23; 2 Cor. 5:5; Eph. 1:13,14).

(c) Christ excepted, they have been seldom possessed and rarely exercised in the past (1 Cor. 12:27-30; Eph. 4:8-12; 1 Sam. 3:1; Luke 1:23-28; John 10:41).

IV. The Gifts of the Holy Spirit Are Not Extant Today

The following arguments are conclusive on this point:

(a) When the gifts of the Holy Spirit were possessed they were employed punitively in association with their benevolent uses (Ex. 4:6-8; 6:13,17,29; 9:22,29; Num. 12:10,12; 2 Kings 5:14,27; Isa. 38:1,2; Acts 5; 8:20,21; 13:9-11).

(b) The design and purpose of God in giving them was fulfilled in a confirmed word and completed revelation. Spirit gifts now are superfluous, and if they existed they would discredit the word of God (John 14:26; 16:12; Eph. 4:7,8,11-16; 2 Cor. 13:9; 1 Thess. 3:9,10; Col. 2:10; Acts 20:17-23; John 20:30,31; 1 John 5:10-13; 2 Tim. 3:15-17. Jude 3, Greek).

(c) The prophetic word requires the cessation of miraculous powers now, and existing facts corroborate the prophecy (Psa. 74:7-10; Micah 3:6-12; 1 Cor. 13:8-13).

SYNTHETIC REMARKS ON THE LESSON

I. The Spirit of God Is Divine, Radiant Power. "Thou shalt have none other gods before me" (Deut. 5:7). To those who believe in the personality and deity of the spirit, usually called "God, the Holy Ghost," it does not seem to occur that such a belief contravenes this divine prohibition and commits them, in spirit and in word, to idolatry. A moment's reflection upon the meaning of the words used would show them that "the spirit of God," which he calls "my spirit" (Gen. 1:2; 6:3), cannot be God, and that "the spirit of the Lord" (Acts 5:9) cannot be the Lord himself. The spirit "proceedeth from the Father" (John 15:26) and is therefore an emanation from God. The spirit is effluent from the Father, fills all space, and gives to God the attribute of omnipresence (Psa. 139). It is the influence and affluence of the Almighty, the instrument by which he works in creation, providence, inspiration, and miracle; his divine, radiant, and universally diffused power. "The spirit of God moved (brooded) upon the face of the waters" in creation (Gen. 1:2), renewed the face of the earth (Psa. 104:30), garnished the heavens (Job 26:13), created man (Job 33:4) and imparted life to him (Gen. 2:7). Instead of being another god or a distinct personality from God, the spirit is the breath of life in universal diffusion and sustains all animal life while it is retained (Psa. 139; Job 31:14, 15). It is called God's "free spirit" (Psa. 51:12) because it is in spontaneous and universal diffusion. "All the while my breath is in me, and the spirit of God is in my nostrils" (Job 27:3). If "the spirit of God" were a personality and a god, "the nostrils" would be a singular place for his habitation! "The spirit of God" in this Scripture is so obviously interchangeable with "the breath" in the first part of the text that we deem further comments upon either the text or the subject unnecessary.

II. The Holy Spirit Is the Power of God in Official Manifestation. Now when, under the fiat of God, this radiant, outflowing, spontaneous, and "free spirit" which is universally diffused in nature, becomes concentrated and focalized to inspire men (2 Pet. 1:21), to beget Christ (Matt. 1:20), to perform miracles, to bestow supernatural gifts, or to execute any divine behest that may "come forth" (Dan. 9:23) from God, it is then called "Holy (hagion) Spirit" (Psa. 51:11,12). The word "holy" means "separated, set apart." In essence "free spirit" and "Holy Spirit" are the same; the difference in them lies in relationship. The Holy Spirit is the same power in another aspect, "free spirit" being the operation of God's power in the domain of fixed law, while the Holy Spirit is the same power exercised independent of natural law. The following text from Paul throws much light upon the subject and should be studied carefully by the reader:

> "God hath revealed them unto us by his spirit: for the spirit searcheth all things, yea, the deep things of God. For what man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man which is in him? even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the spirit of God. Now we have received, not the spirit of the world, but the spirit which is of God; that we might know the things that are freely given to us of God. Which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Spirit teacheth" (1 Cor. 2:10-13). From this important Scripture the following truths are obvious deductions:
> (a) The "spirit of God" is the same as the "Holy Spirit";
> (b) It bears the same relation to God that "the spirit of man" does to man;
>
> (c) "The spirit of God" is opposed to "the spirit of the world"; and
> (d) As neither "the spirit of man" nor "the spirit of the world" are distinct from the individual or individuals who manifest them, so "the spirit of God" is not a distinct personality from God himself.

Divinely guided by the authority of inspiration we are brought to see that the spirit of God is his invisible energy, and that it forms the medium of his omniscient perceptions and is the vehicle of his omnipotent behests—in a word, the Holy Spirit is the power of God in variant manifestation. Power is not a person, but the manifestation of a person. That God's power is meant by his spirit, and not "the third person of the adorable Trinity," is forever settled by the following sample testimonies of God:

> "The Holy Spirit shall come upon thee, and the power of the Highest shall overshadow thee" (Luke 1:35).
> "Behold, I send the promise of my Father upon you: but tarry ye in the city of Jerusalem, until ye be endued with power from on high" (Luke 24:49).
> "But ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Spirit is come upon you" (Acts 1:8).
> "Give me also this power, that on whomsoever I lay hands, he may receive the Holy Spirit" (Acts 8:19).
> "I am full of power by the spirit of the Lo (Micah 3:8).

III. The Gifts of the Holy Spirit Were Only Tem rary Investments of Divine Power. Since the spirit God is the power of God, and the Holy Spirit this po in official manifestation, we are led to see that fo use God may display his power, and in the absence ause, hold it in abeyance. Scripturally speaking, th two attitudes of God are expressed as "stretching fo thine hand to heal" (Acts 4:30) and as withdrawing it his bosom (Psa. 74:11). Therefore we find God consi ently active at one time, and silent at another; doi miracles in one dispensation, and not in another. F centuries past God's attitude has thus been described himself: "I have long time holden my peace; I have be still, and refrained myself" (Isa. 42:14). To speak curately, partaking of the Holy Spirit is an enswath ment in "the powers of the world to come" (Heb. 6:5 These "powers" belong to "that world" (Luke 20:35), n this: there, not here. Paul's "world to come," to whic Holy Spirit "powers" primarily belong, is widely diffe ent from modern theological imaginations on the subje With those who know not the gospel of the kingdom it a "world to go to" rather than a world to come. Th conventional conception of "the next world" is associate either with regions astronomical or subterranean—th heaven or hell of pulpit discourse, in neither of whic is there use or place for the gifts of the Holy Spirit prophecy or healing. But readers of these lessons know that "the world to come" begins at the resurrection o the dead. Then "this world" ends and "that world" begins (Luke 20:34,35). Our bodies are then made like Christ's own glorious body "according to the working whereby he is able to subdue all things unto himself" (Phil. 3:21). The saints are thus made permanent embodiments of God's "mighty power" (Eph. 1:19) and surcharged with "the powers of the world to come," they proceed to assist Christ in subduing all things under his feet.

Now in advance of this "world" and the enjoyment of its "powers," some believers in the first century were "made partakers of the Holy Spirit" in a limited sense. They are said to have "tasted the powers of the world to come" (Heb. 6:4,5). They were given "power and authority over devils (demons), and to cure diseases" (Luke 9:1), and were sent out to proclaim, "The kingdom of God is at hand. Heal the sick, cleanse the lepers, raise the dead," etc. (Matt. 10:7,8). How did the healing of diseases and the raising of the dead show that the kingdom of God was at hand? When devils were cast out by the spirit of God, "then," says Christ in Matt. 12:28, "the kingdom of God is come unto you." Again he asserts: "If I with the finger of God cast out devils, no doubt the kingdom of God is come unto you" (Luke 11:20). Since the gifts of the Holy Spirit are "the powers of the world to come," when the spirit of God was present in Christ and his apostles and was exercised to cast out demons, heal the sick, and raise the dead, the kingdom of God, so far as its "powers" were concerned, had "come upon" that people. Remember, however, that Christ excepted, who had the spirit "without measure" (John 3:34), "the powers of the world to come" have only been given in a premature, measured, and limited way. "Of his fulness" the apostles only received a part (John 1:16). While the fulness of God's spirit raised Christ from the dead and perfected him in "eternal salvation" (Rom. 8:11; Heb. 5:9), only "the firstfruits of the spirit" were given to his disciples, which left them in pain, to suffer, groan, and travail; "the redemption of the body" being deferred to the future, when "the world to come" arrives, and the sons of God are given "glorious liberty" (Rom. 8:18-24). Until then we are only children and heirs (vs. 17), saved by hope (vs. 24). "Subject to vanity" like sinners and "the whole creation" (vss. 20, 22), we have nothing more than they except "the spirit of adoption" (vs. 15), heirship, and hope of "the glory which shall be revealed in us" when the sons of God are manifested and glorified in "the world to come." In commercial transactions where confidence is shown a property is purchased, the principal is agreed upon, and then a small amount of the principal is advanced as "earnest money" to ratify the contract, which satisfies both parties until the principal is paid. So it is with "the gospel of our salvation": after we believe it God "seals us with the Holy Spirit of promise, which is the earnest of our inheritance"—for how long? "Until the redemption of the purchased possession, unto the praise of his glory" (Eph. 1:13,14). "Ye are bought with a price" (1 Cor. 6:19,20). God has purchased us, has paid down "the earnest of the spirit" (2 Cor. 5:5), which binds the contract, "until the redemption of the purchased possession" takes place in "the world to come." To clamor now for more than these firstfruits and earnests of the spirit, as divine healers and others who claim miraculous endowments of the spirit, is a reflection upon the probity of the Almighty, and an unconscious confession on the part of the claimants of their want of faith in God. "The firstfruits of the spirit" left Paul with "infirmities" (2 Cor. 12:5), in groans, travail, and pain (Rom. 8:23). It left Timothy with a weak stomach and "often infirmities" (1 Tim. 5:23), and Trophimus it "left at Miletum sick" (2 Tim. 4:20). It seems clear from this evidence that Paul and prelatic Christians were only given a "taste" and "firstfruits of the spirit"—an "earnest of the spirit," not the principal. The unseemly claims and pretentions of modern healers are here justly and scathingly rebuked*; for they claim to cure all maladies, heal all diseases, and do all kinds of supernatural prodigies. In a word, they claim to have more of the Holy Spirit than Paul and other church dignitaries of the first century. While they had only a "taste," modern healers pretend to have a full meal; while they had only "firstfruits," modern curists claim to have the harvest; and while they were content with "the earnest of the spirit," latter day fanatics boast of having the principal! They have yet to learn that when "the powers" of the spirit were here that only "some" believers possessed its gifts (1 Cor. 12:27-30; Eph. 4:11), and that the greatest prophet ever born of a woman (Matt. 11:11; Luke 7:28) performed no miracle at all (John 10:41). And the few who did possess the gifts of the Holy Spirit rarely exercised them. Those who claim to do so much healing now need to be told that there were "many widows in Israel in the days of Elias, ... but unto none of them was Elias sent, save unto Sarepta, a city of Sidon, unto a woman that was a widow. And many lepers were in Israel in the time of Eliseus the prophet; and none of them were cleansed, saving Naaman the Syrian" (Luke 4:25-27).

IV. The Gifts of the Holy Spirit Are Not Extant Today. In the days when the miraculous gifts of the Holy Spirit were actual possessions and not empty pretenses as now, they were seldom possessed and rarely exercised by God's people. But today from the lying, wonder-working power of Rome and her emissaries down to the lowest form of fetishism all claim to speak in tongues, heal the sick, prophesy, or do something of a wondrous nature by the power of the Holy Spirit. Apostolic miracles are tame things compared with the arrogant pretentions of these modern fanatics. The Bible condemns them totally. It says the gifts of the spirit were given as a "sign" (1 Cor. 14:22). Of what were they a sign? In Christ they were a sign of the "greater works" he is to do when he returns from heaven to raise the dead (John 5:20,21); in the apostles they were tokens of the "greater works" they shall be able to do in "the world to come"—greater than even Christ did when he was here (John 14:12). These two aspects of the Holy Spirit gifts are beautifully illustrated by "the former rain" (Joel 2:23), which was followed by the abundant harvests when "the floors shall be full of wheat, and the fats shall overflow with wine and oil" (vs. 24). The downpour of the Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost and the miraculous gifts of the spirit manifested in the first century came as "the former rain," and were "the firstfruits of the spirit," "the earnest of our inheritance." It effected the mental and moral nature of those upon whom it was bestowed; but "the latter rain" of the spirit will be the harvest and "overflow" of the preceding "earnests": it will be such an inrush, upgush, and infusion of divine power into our substance as to change every atom of this "vile body" physically, and make it "glorious" like Christ's body, and we can "die no more" (Phil. 3:21; Luke 20:36). The "greater works" promised are then wrought by the saints. But mark: In the interval lying between the firstfruits and the harvest, the earnest and the principal, there are no gifts of the Holy Spirit at all. Attend, please, to the evidence which is now submitted in behalf of this proposition:

(a) When the Gifts of the Holy Spirit Were Possessed They Were Employed Punitively in Association with Their Benevolent Uses. The use of the power of the Holy Spirit in both these ways and often at the same time accords with God, from whom all power flows. "The Lord killeth" in the same chapter where it is said, "And maketh alive." "He bringeth down to the grave" in the same verse in which it is said, "And bringeth up" (1 Sam. 2:6). The same text that says he will heal and bind us up also says, "He hath torn; he hath smitten" (Hos. 6:1). "I form the light," says Jehovah, "and create darkness: I make peace, and create evil: I the Lord do all these things" (Isa. 45:7). He makes the dumb, the deaf, and the blind (Ex. 4:11). He put "diseases" upon the Egyptians (Ex. 15:26), smote the Israelites "with the botch of Egypt, and with the emerods, and with the scab, and with the itch, whereof thou canst not be healed. The Lord shall smite thee with madness, and blindness, and astonishment of heart" (Deut. 28:27,28). "Moreover he will bring upon thee all the diseases of Egypt, which thou wast afraid of; and they shall cleave unto thee" (vs. 60). He smote Jehoram "with an incurable disease" (2 Chron. 21:18,19). Will divine healers claim can they cure "an incurable disease"? And let them remember that the very power that cured in the word of God also afflicted; the spirit that healed disease inflicted the disease. The same God who cured Moses' hand of leprosy inflicted it with leprosy (Ex. 4:6,7,8); the same uplifted hand that stayed the plague of frogs made the plague (Ex. 8:6,13); the same power that cleansed the land of lice made lice (vss. 17,29); and the same God-given power that stopped the hail, thunder, and lightning, caused them to be sent forth (Ex. 9:22,29). The God who healed Miriam of leprosy placed leprosy upon her (Num. 12:10,13). Jehovah who healed Naaman of leprosy said to Gehazi: "The leprosy therefore of Naaman shall cleave unto thee, and unto thy seed forever. And he went out from hi presence a leper as white as snow" (2 Kings 5:11,27). The spirit of God in Christ healed one man, but at the same time it killed a whole herd of swine (Mark 5:15, 13); the Christ who blessed many cursed a fig tree and it "withered away" (Mark 11:21); the very Christ who raised Lazarus from the dead deliberately planned that he should die (John 11:25,13,4,6). And while it is true that the shadow of Peter healed the sick (Acts 5:15), it is equally true that his word struck others dead instantly (vss. 5,9). Paul's handkerchiefs did make diseases depart from the afflicted (Acts 19:12); but "filled with the Holy Spirit" he only looked at Elymas and said: "The hand of the Lord is upon thee, and thou shalt be blind, not seeing the sun for a season. And immediately there fell on him a mist and a darkness" (Acts 13 9 11). Now in all the fuss and feathers raised today by claimants of the Holy Spirit, none claim judicial and punitive power —not one. Their "testimonies" always relate to benevolence -the cure of leprosy, consumption, cancer, and other fatal maladies. It is a very suspicious circumstance that they never give us a testimony of how they have power to afflict people with leprosy, infect them with "incurable diseases," smite with blindness, and kill instantly with only a word! No; this kind of business does not seem to be in their line; this is a power none of them claim to possess! And this admitted fact demonstrates that their claim of Holy Spirit power is as spurious as Rome. Further,

*Pretenders of divine healing have formed the unhappy habit of abusing both medicine and doctors. They need to be told that in the Bible medicine is said to "do good" like a merry heart (Prov. 17:22). Luke is affectionately referred to as "the beloved physician" (Col. 4:14).

(b) The Design and Purpose of God in Giving the Powers of the Holy Spirit Has Been Achieved in a Confirmed Word and Completed Revelation. Christ left the earth with an unfinished ministry (John 16:12), and he sent the spirit primarily to complete that ministry: "Howbeit when he, the spirit of truth is come, he will guide you into all truth" (vs. 13). "He shall teach you all things" (John 14:26). Notice, "all truth," "all things"; not some truth and some things merely. Now as he sent the spirit to do this work and serve this purpose, we affirm that it came and perfected the saints, edified the body of Christ, brought it "into the unity of the faith," and that it grew up unto him "in all things"—attained to a "perfect man, the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ" (Eph. 4:7.8,11-16). Imperfect faith was perfected by a completed revelation (2 Cor 13:9; 1 Thes 3:9,10). The church was "complete" in Christ (Col 2: 10). The apostles were sent into all the world to preach the gospel: assisted to speak with other tongues as "the spirit gave them utterance" (Acts 2:4), they completed their ministry and "declared all the counsel of God" (Acts 20:17-32). "Signs confirmed the word" (Mark 16: 20). It "was confirmed . . . . God also bearing them witness, both with signs, and wonders, and with divers miracles, and gifts of the Holy Spirit" (Heb. 2:3,4) One of two conclusions must be reached from the evidence now before us: either

(a) The Holy Spirit did not come and do what Christ said it would (which would discredit the word of Christ and blaspheme the Holy Spirit) or

(b) It came and fulfilled the purpose for which it was sent (and if so, it is no longer needed).

Admit that the Holy Spirit came and revealed "all the truth," and then there is no truth for it to reveal now, and its possession would be superfluous. The work of the Holy Spirit being complete, the word of God is all-sufficient, which obviates clerical and priestly interference and interpretation, both of which are arrogant and presumptuous. To the dishonor of God and the Holy Spirit curists and spiritists ask us to believe, without a scintilla of proof, that the apostles failed to execute the commission of preaching the gospel in all the world, as they were commanded; and that the Holy Spirit came short of revealing "all the truth," as it was sent to do. Therefore to them the word of God is incomplete and inadequate. This position is a virtual repudiation of the word of God. Every sect which claims present gifts of the Holy Spirit has so discredited and dishonored the word of the Lord that they themselves feel the need of another Bible, and acting consistently enough, they have in each case invented or manufactured one, to wit: the Catholics, the popes, councils, etc.; the Mohammedans, the Koran; the Mormons, the Book of Mormon; the Russellites, Studies in the Scriptures; the Seventh-day Adventists, Mrs. White's Testimonies; the Christian Scientists, Science and Health, etc., etc. "O thou man of God, there is death in the pot" (2 Kings 4:40). Beware!

(c) The Prophetic Word Requires the Cessation of Miraculous Powers Now. Read "the sure word of prophecy" (2 Pet. 1:19) and see for yourself how modern healing cults, wonder-workers, and prophets defy the word of the living God:

"We see not our signs: there is no more any prophet" (Psa. 74:9).

"Night shall be unto you, that ye shall not have a vision; and it shall be dark unto you, that ye shall not divine; and the sun shall go down over the prophets, and the day shall be dark over them. Then shall the seers be ashamed, and the diviners confounded: yea, they shall all cover their lips; for there is no answer of God" (Micah 3 6,7).

"Charity never faileth: but whether there be prophecies, they shall fail; whether there be tongues, they shall cease; whether there be knowledge, it shall vanish away" (1 Cor. 13:8).

Thy Word, O Lord

"Thy word, O Lord, thy precious word alone,
Can lead me on;
By this, until the darksome night be gone,
Lead thou me on;
Thy word is light, thy word is life and power,
By it O guide me in each trying hour."

MINISTERS WHO ARE LOOKING FOR THE LORD

Readers of religious papers on both sides of the Atlantic have recently seen a remarkable document sent out and signed by some of the leading ministers of Great Britain. It was first issued "with the request that all ministers of religion in London and vicinity, who are in agreement with it, will forward name and address, with a view to a united meeting for considering the question of its further advocacy." The statement and the signers are as follows:

THE PRESENT CRISIS

"The Lord is at Hand"

The undersigned, under a profound impression, of the momentous nature of the present crisis, issue the accompanying statement:

1. That the present crisis points toward the close of the Time of the Gentiles.

2. That the revelation of our Lord may be expected at any moment, when he will be manifested as evidently as to his disciples on the evening of his resurrection.

3. That the completed Church will be translated to be "forever with the Lord."

4. That Israel will be restored to its own land in unbelief, and be afterwards converted by the appearance of Christ on its behalf.

5. That all human schemes of reconstruction must be subsidiary to the Second Coming of the Lord, because all nations will then be subject to his rule.

6. That under the reign of Christ there will be a further great effusion of the Holy Spirit upon al flesh.

7. That the truths embodied in this statement are of the utmost practical value in determining Christian character and action with reference to the pressing problems of the hour.

Dr. Campbell Morgan is as well known on this side of the water as in his own land; he has been one of the spiritual powerful factors at Northfield Conferences and elsewhere in America, as well as a centre of Bible teaching and preaching in London.

Dr. A. C. Dixon was for years pastor of the Moody Church of Chicago, and then was called to London to fill the pulpit made famous by the ministry of Charles H. Spurgeon, one of the largest Baptist churches in England.

The Rev. J. Stuart Holden is Honorary Secretary of the Mission Council of the great Victorious Life gathering known as the Keswich Convention, to which thousands have journeyed annually from all over the world for the past forty years, and, with multitudinous other duties, is also the Editor of The Christian, of London.

Prebendary Webb-Peploe, of London, has been one of the giant figures at the Keswick Convention for many years, and is known and loved for his ministry in ths country also.

Dr. F. B. Meyer, won a lasting place in the hearts of the Sunday School hosts of North America through his spiritual ministry at International and World's Sunday School conventions in recent years in this country and abroad.

The Rev. Dinsdale T. Young, minister at Westminster Central Hall, London, has had a fruitful service in the English Wesleyan ministry since 1879, and is widely known as a lecturer and author of spiritual books.

When ministers of this character, together with the others associated with them in the signing of this document, give public expression to such views, they are assured of a world-wide and profoundly interested hearing. From the 22nd to the 25th of January there is to be held in the Moody Tabernacle, North Avenue and La Salle Street, Chicago, a Conference in Behalf of Israel, the Call to which issue "to all interested in the Chosen People of God and the Coming Kingdom of Jesus Christ," was published in the Sunday School Times of December 8. Leading ministers and Bible teachers in North America are to take part in the program of this coming Conference; and the clarion call of the British ministers will undoubtedly be before the Conference for prayer and thanksgiving. The Sunday School Times will report the Chicago Conference in an early issue of this paper; and it hopes also to let readers know something of the results of the issuing of the British minister's statement on the other side of the water.

Meantime may all those who love his appearing (2 Tim. 4:8) so live and love and serve in the spirit of their coming Lord that their testimony to his power in their lives shall be true, sweet, and winsome, and shall cause many to pray with them. "Amen: come, Lord Jesus" (Rev. 22:20).—Selected by Brother W. M. Farley, from "Church News."

ETERNAL LIFE IN THE PRESENT TENSE

In reference to those passages in which the present tense is used in reference to the possession of eternal life, it is necessary to observe that a mistake would be made if it were supposed they taught the actual present attainment of it. The present tense, in reference to future events, is a peculiarity of speech dictated by inspiration. Paul in Rom. 4:17, defines this peculiarity as a "calling of those things which be not as though they were." This is illustrated in many parts of the Scripture. Mary, by the Holy Spirit, before Jesus was born, declared that "The Lord hath shewed strength with his arm . . . he hath put down the mighty from their seats, and exalted them of low degree; he hath filled the hungry with good things, and the rich he hath sent empty away" (Luke 1:51-53). So far were these things from being accomplished, during his sojourn in the flesh in Judea, that when "he was oppressed, and he was afflicted, he opened not his mouth" (Isa. 53:7). Not until he shall appear a second time, as the Lion of Judah, will these things writen of him have their fulfilment (Psa. 2:8, 9). Hundreds of years even before Mary spoke these things Isaiah had written, by the Spirit's guidance, "For unto us a child is born, unto us a Son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, The Mighty God, The Everlasting Father, The Prince of Peace" (Isa. 9:6). So with regard to the statement, "hath eternal life." It points to the certainty of future possession. Only those who believe the Gospel of the Kingdom and the Name of Jesus Christ, as the Life-Giver, have the promise of eternal life given them. They lay hold of it by faith, and when Christ, their life, shall appear, then will they receive the gift, and "die no more" (Luke 20:36).—Robert Roberts.

A Remark and a Reply.—Some years ago Rev. S. S. Roszell, of Baltimore, was pastor of a canting, puritanical hypocrite, who was a man of wealth, a very fluent Methodist class-leader, and a skin-flint. One day he shut up his nose and rolled up his eyes, and began to sniffle in this wise: "It isn't right to laugh. We read that Jesus wept, but we never read that Jesus laughed." "No," said Mr. Roszell, "and we never read that Jesus sold wood at four dollars a cord to poor, struggling Methodist seamstresses, while he sold it at three dollars to rich folks!" That was a rubbing of the raw place, was it not? West. Chr Adv.

EDITORIAL

Sister Lena L. Allen reports the death of her husband at Quincy Ill.

We have just printed a new edition of "A Letter to a Friend." This is one of the most popular booklets we have, and its popularity is deserved. It still sells at the low price of ten cents per copy.

Sunday evening, April 7th, the following were baptized after careful instruction in the gospel and an intelligent confession of the same: Daniel M. Miller, formerly Baptist, and his wife, Mrs. Mary M. Miller. Brother Miller is a brother in the flesh to our brethren Ernest and Eugene Miller.

Matter that had to be published has practically crowded out Brother Donaldson's page for the young people for the last two issues. We regret this, as many of our readers will. Next week, however, we hope to give the page its usual amount of space.

"BIBLE LESSONS" IN THE PUBLIC PRESS

Brother H. H. Hawkins, Secretary of The Fellow Helpers' Society, succeeded last week in getting Lesson IV, "The Things Concerning the Kingdom of God," printed in a popular religious weekly published here in the city, called "The Gospel Herald and Saturday Evening Call." Our brother's success in getting the truth before the thousands of readers of this weekly, and which is also sold on the streets of the city by a corp of missionary workers, deserves unstinted commendation. A new pathway of usefulness and service has been blazed out, and readers of The Restitution might take the suggestion and make it their own. In country places editors of papers can often be induced to print a lesson, especially if the request is accompanied with a dollar. We wish some of our readers would try the experiment and then let us hear about the result.

Bible Lessons are not copyrighted, and no restrictions forbid their publication. We realize they are public property the moment they leave our hands, and as such can be used and abused as men may please. And now that they are beginning to get public recognition they will provoke hostility among the heterodox, and we shall expect many "replies" and criticisms to be made to them. We ask our readers to watch for these, and to send us copies of all papers in which the lessons are assailed. We do not promise to make a rejoinder to all who may make adverse comments, but in cases where it is worth while we shall feel duty bound to defend the gospel.

THE VIIIth LESSON

All of the Bible Lessons published heretofore are of vital importance, as they elucidate "the first principles of the gospel of Christ"; but the VIIIth lesson on "The Holy Spirit and Its Gifts" deserves, if we may be allowed to express our opinion, a wider circulation than any of its predecessors. Erroneous ideas of the Holy Spirit blind the eyes of more people to the truth than any other caues in the earth. From those who have visions and claim prophetic gifts down to the ordinary Methodist who has had an "experience," all reject the truth and for the same cause: they misunderstand the teachings of the Bible about the Holy Spirit. The truth of the matter in all its vital bearings is elaborated in the VIIIth lesson, and it appears in this issue. There are four more of the series, and they will appear as time, strength, and financial ability permit. We wish to thank our readers for their financial help in publishing the lessons so far, and remind them that after postage is deducted all money received for them is used in publishing others of the series.

OCCUPANTS OF THE THRONE AND THEIR DUAL OFFICES

"And round about the throne were four and twenty seats: and upon the seats I saw four and twenty elders sitting, clothed in white raiment; and they had on their heads crowns of gold. And out of the throne proceeded lightnings and thunderings and voices: and there were seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which are the seven spirit of God. And before the throne there was a sea of glass like unto crystal: and in the midst of the throne, and round about the throne, were four beasts full of eyes before and behind" (Rev. 4:4-6).

I The Four Beasts and Twenty-Four Elders

1. These are the saints in dual capacity (vs. 4; 3:4, 5, 6; 11:7, 9, 13, 14; 4:6, 9-11; 5:4-10).

II As Kings the Saints are Called Four Beasts (Greek, "Living Ones")

1. Cherubim is a plural noun, "faces" (Gen. 3:24 (1); 4:14; Ex. 25:19, 20, 22; 36:35; 1 Sam. 4:4; Psa. 80:1, 7; Ezek. 1:4-14).

2. "Full of eyes" (vs. 6; Matt. 6:22, 23).

3. Four Faces (vs. 7; Rev. 5:5; 20:9; Num. 2:9).
(a) Camp of Judah, 186,000 men (Num. 2:9).
(b) Camp of Reuben, 151,450 men (Num. 2:16).
(c) Camp of Ephraim, 108,000 men (Num. 2:24).
(d) Camp of Dan, 156,700 men (Num. 2:31).

3. Wings: their banners (vs. 8; Ex. 19:4; Psa. 149:9; Ezek. 1:14; 10:11; Isa. 6; Num. 24:8, 9).

III As Priests the Saints are Called Twenty-Four Elders

1. The Levites, not incorporate under the four camps of Israel, pitched in the midst as a priestly order: they were non-combatants (Num. 1:45, 47-53; 2:33, 34).

2. In the days of David they were divided into twenty four priestly orders and officiated alternately (Psa. 132:16; Heb. 9:9, 23, 24; 1 Chron. 24:3-5; 25:1, 3, 7; Rev. 5:8; Zech. 6:12; Amos. 9:11; Rev. 14:3; 15:2-4; Heb. 8:5).

(1). Wav, translated "and" in Gen. 3:24, is an expletive, and is translated "even" in Mal. 3:1 and elsewhere.

COMMUNICATION

Dear Brother Huggins:

Please allow me space in your paper to give a short report of the services held with the Church of God at Guthrie Grove, S. C., on Easter Sunday, March the 31st, 1918.

Sunday morning dawned clear and bright after several dark and gloomy days, reminding us of the death and resurrection of our blessed Savior. At 10 o'clock services began with songs by the church choir, led by Prof. P. A. Guthrie. After singing several beautiful hymns we had several short but encouraging talks by the brethren. At 11 o'clock the pastor Elder A. N. Durham, preached from one of the most interesting subjects of the Bible, taking for his text the words: "Some men will say, How are the dead raised up ? and with what body do they come ?" Brother Durham handled his subject well, making it so clear it seems that a child could understand. After Brother Durham's sermon, dinner was served on the ground which every one seemed to enjoy. One hour was given for dinner,, and during that hour several of the sisters went down to Sister Mollie Pack's, which is but a short distance from the church, to see and cheer her up as she was ill and could not be with us. At the close of the hour they returned to the church, and after singing a couple of songs Brother Jesse Garrett, from Greenville County, preached a very interesting sermon. At the conclusion of Brother Garrett's sermon the Lord's supper was served, and we sang that beautiful hymn, "When I see the Blood, I will Pass Over You," and went out. We had a very large crowd and the best of order.

There were several of our brothers and sisters that could not be with us on account of sickness, which made the rest of us feel very sad. May God bless them and, if it is his will, restore them to their health, is the prayer of the writer.

Dear Brother, as this is my first attempt to write to you or your paper I will ask you to excuse me.

Oh, I want to be ready when Jesus shall come,
To gather his people to Eden, their home.
Oh, let me be numbered amidst that bright throng.
Salvation and glory the Conqueror's song.

Your sister in hope of God's soon coming kingdom.

TIRED OF GIVING ?

By S. Roxana Wince

Tired of giving to the Lord's cause ? Are you, dear ones ? Does the burden seem too heavy with heart-rending appeals coming in from every side and so little in the tithing-box ?

All the necessities of life costing so much and the pocket-book nearly empty ? But are there not two sides to that question ? I wonder if God ever gets tired of giving to us, giving, ever giving, day in and day out, year after year ? Giving rain warmth, sunshine, shelter, food, clothing, friends, happiness, peace, hope, and promise, with his own comforting presence and guidance, loved you, pardoned you, kept you in safety from those who would fain destroy you, made you custodians of his own precious book, and the keepers of his vineyard, and pledged his word to give you that same vineyard for your everlasting home if faithful in its tillage ?

Is not this a side of the question that ought to be looked at and gratefully remembered ? What if he should stop giving, withhold his air, his rain, his sunshine ? He does sometimes, when men forget him and all that they owe to his mercy, goodness and love. Then comes the hail, the flood, the cyclone, the drouth, the blight, the caterpillar, the killing frost.

How utterly dependent we are upon God for life and breath, and all things ! We the supporters and readers of The Restitution realize this. We have not forgotten our high calling in Christ Jesus our Lord. We know that disaster would follow if even one of us should fall asleep at his post; that we cannot afford to stop giving even in this dark hour when the whole world is shadowed by clouds of war.

You are not tired of giving, dear brothers and sisters. Others may be, but you have been tested and your faith stood the test. You reached out and God gave the Linotype: he will give you the Printing Press.

He knows how your hearts ache over the awful wickedness of the world—over the rapid spread of spiritualism in "death-stricken England." Since the publication of Oliver Lodge's book, "Raymond," over the spread of the same thing and of heathen doctrines in our own country, and over the turning back to Rome and to her debasing idolatries, in both these countries. He knows how much, how greatly, you long for the spread of the truth, and he will not deny your request, nor let your effort fail. "Treasures hid in the sand" the oil of the rock, the gold and silver of the hills, the ocean's wealth is his. He cannot fail us: he never has, and he never will.

Contemplate for a moment what the result would be if we should stop giving, can you guess? How would precious brands be snatched from the burning? How could the ignorant be taught the way of life? How those wild drunken, feasting, revelling Roman Catholics of Latin America be reached with the truth that they need no Mediator no Savior but Jesus? O love reaches out after these. They too, must have the gospel if only as as witness. We must give and give speedily and bountifully, that the blessed work of preparing a people for our Lord may be accomplished, the kingdom come, and his will be done on earth as it is done in heaven.

WHY ARE HUMAN GOVERNMENTS PERMITTED?

In view of the conditon of society at present the answer to the above question should be carefully canvassed. Those who are informed as to the history of these governments know that they have never accomplished what the founders purposed. The framers of our national constitution set forth six reasons why they presented it for the people to ratify. It is evident that there have been failures along these lines. Nevertheless we can not establish the charge that our government has been a failure. Very many blessings have been provided for its citizens. Our laws have been so framed that ample provisions have been made for the unfortunate citizen. Without these provisions we could not be secure in our homes. There is a turbulent class who would demand that the accumulation of wealth be equally distributed. If this were accomplished it would be for the benefit of an indolent class. If human governments have failed to accomplish all that their founders purposed, should their laws be disregarded and spurned as being for the benefit of the wealthy and political leaders? We think not.

In view of the instructions given to the church at Rome we would think that all who have obeyed the gospel could find their places in these troublesome times. The apostle says: "Let every soul be subject unto the higher powers. For there is no power but of God: the powers that be are ordained of God." When the pharisees asked Jesus if it were lawful to pay tribute to Caesar his answer implies that it was lawful for the reason that it was their duty to render unto Caesar the things that belonged to Caesar, and unto God the things that are God's. He recognized the right of the Roman government to exact their tribute tax. It was not an ordinary tax, but when paid it recognized that they, the Jews, were under bondage to Rome they were vassals under the Roman law. Therefore they should render unto the Roman government the services due to it.

"Yes," some of our people will answer, "it was right for the pharisees to be obedient to Caesar, but for Chrisians to be subject to a human government brings up a different proposition." They argue that in obeying the truth that our allegiance to human powers cease. Paul writes that in our changed relation we become fellow-citizens with the saints of the household of God. Our citizenship is recorded in heaven, and we will receive it when Jesus our Savior shall come. When we were aliens to that citizenship we could participate in all worldly enjoyments that came to us through the social and political arrangements. By being "a hail fellow well met" we enjoyed all worldly amusements. Then we paid a full tribute to Caesar's power. Now we are in struggles to form a perfect character to make us unto our God kings and priests to reign on the earth in the kingdom. Instead of spending our time in opposition to the government that protects us, it shoud be spent in meditating on the things that will give us peace with Jehovah and an abundant entrance into the kingdom of God. This furnishes us with the material that will establish us in the seven Christian graces.

The present struggle is for world dominion. We know that this can only be accomplished by Jesus and his saints. While human governments have been ordered by God, in the end all will receive a just punishment for sins committed. Their rule will terminate under the sounding of the seventh trumpet (Rev. 11:15). Our government will not, in this war, compel us to do an unreasonable thing, you are not required to purchase any of the securities put on sale by the government. Is it prudent for our people to utter disloyal sentiments? We are in such a relation, placed at a great disadvantage. The powers that be have the right to interpret our expressions. There are times in whch silence is golden. Are we in any way connected with this war? Under the selective service we are a part of the army as non-combatants. As a part of their government we must pay our tax, real and personal. If we are thrifty enough to have an income of $1000 or $2000 per year, we can not avoid paying our income tax. It is rendering to Caesar the things that belong to him.

If me buy and use postage stamps we are contributing to the war revenue. Previous to the war we could send a letter through the mail for two cents; now we pay 50 per cent more, which goes to a war tax. If we send a card we pay 100 per cent more, which will be used as a war fund. Do and say what we may we are in this war for victory or defeat. We notice that our young men who have come under the selective service law have obeyed it and gone as non-combatants. The power that is fully recognizes their rights. The Friends, Quakers, etc., who have had an exemption under other wars have accepted their privileges under the law and are raising a fund to be spent in constructing homes for the destitute of Belgium and France. Our advice is to do nothing that will make you recognized members of these societies. If you desire to contribute to the needs of the suffering, through them you can do so without committing a sin.

Last but not least, is it right to in any way recognize the importance of our flag above the material of which it is made? For some unexplainable reason I have a peculiar love and reverence for the stars and stripes. It is more to me than the silk of which it is made; no other flag thrills me as does this. For this reason we have avoided its display on our premises. If I were identified in any way with the institution of the government and asked to salute the flag, I would not refuse thus far to honor it. The protection the flag gives us today was secured at the awful cost of a half million of our brave men during 1861 and 1865. Does being disloyal to this government make us more loyal to the future government? I allude to the condition of the mind where disrespect is manifested against a power that is. Instead of meditating on the acts of the powers let us meditate upon the blessings promised us when we shall have been clothed with immortality. Let us study carefully 1 Pet. 4:15. "Let none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evil doer, or as a busy-body in other men's matters. Yet if any man suffer as a Christian let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf." If the time should come when we are persecuted for our faith, then we will be suffering for Christ. This article has been written that those who have been suffering for opinion's sake may take their bearings.

MARRIAGE

Millard G. Stookey and Florence B. Reed were united in marriage April 6th, 1918, by D. E. Van Vactor at his residence in Argos, Indiana.

Mr. Stookey is a prosperous farmer of Leesburg, where he has a farm ready for homekeeping. He comes from an old and favorably known family of that community, and by his experience and many good qualities is fully equiped to take care of his newly chosen helpmeet.

The bride is an accomplished young lady of Mishawaka, fully qualified by her practical experience to become a true helpmeet and manager of the new household. She was baptized at the Hillisburg conference, Aug. 1916, and united with the South Bend Church of God. May the blessings of temporal good attend them in their undertakings. May life's duties be so well performed that Jesus, the King, shall have use for them when he comes into his kingdom, is our prayer.

A MESS OF POTTAGE

S. H. Thomas

In the long, long ago there lived two brothers, sons of a noble sire. The elder was strong and aggressive and by virtue of his birthright was the rightful heir to the exalted privilege of becoming the ancestor of a line of kings, through whom God had promised to bless all families of the earth: but he cared more for the excitement of the chase and the pleasures of this life than for the purpose of God.

The younger brother was modest, docile, and industrious, and in all things and at all times feared and honored God, and placed his trust in him. These boys were called Jacob and Esau, the sons of Isaac.

One day Esau came in from the hunt, weak and faint from hunger, and Jacob was cooking a meal of pottage. Now Jacob placed a great value upon the inheritance which the chance of birth had given to his elder brother, and he knew that his brother valued it not at all; and he thought now is a good chance to buy it for myself and my children. So he said, "See this nice mess of red pottage: I will give it to you for your birthright." Esau consented to the trade because he was hungry, and despised his birthright which God had given him.

As we read this simple story we wonder if there has ever since lived another such a fool as was Esau. But a minute's reflection will show us that the world is full of them today, and has been so ever since his day.

Every child born into the world has a glorious birthright of eternal life in the ages to come. It is a free gift from a merciful and loving God; but millions like foolish Esau, despise it, and place no value upon it, and carelessly exchange it for a mess of pottage.

"To obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of lambs." Disobedience to God's law is man's greatest sin. From Adam down to the present time man has proved himself a rebel, stiffnecked and stubborn; he has ever rebelled under restraint and despised law. In the cradle his first conscious act is rebellion against restraint. As a little tot he fights and screams in impotent rage, when opposed by nurse or parent. As a youth at school he rebels against the rules of his teacher, and longs for the time when he will be of age and his own boss; and when that glad time comes he finds to his disgust that he must still bow to laws of God and man, or become an outlaw and an outcast. God requires him to diligently study of his word, and order his life in harmony with its teachings; but he rebels and prefers to study foolish novels and fables instead; his mind is occupied by his cattle, pigs, crops, business, society, or social functions to the total exclusion of God and his commands. He has no pleasure in the society, companionship or conversation of those who love God and his word, and is silent and tongue-tied in their presence; but among the foolish and giddy, who wink with the eye, who giggle and laugh, he is at ease and satisfied, and his tongue is loosed.

When God's people meet for worship, he welcomes with joy an excuse to be absent; and if by chance to be present, he manifests no interest, takes no part, and draws a deep breath of relief when the closing hymn is ended. 'At his home there are no moments of thanksgiving, and the voice of prayer in never heard at his fireside. His motto is, 'Let us eat, drink, and be merry,' for tomorrow we die;" let us join the jolly crowd, and share the fate of the multitude; let us spend the hour of prayer at the dance hall, and employ all our God-given talents to tickle the giddy, and win the laughter and aplause of the fools." He has exchanged his glorious and priceless birthright for a miserable mess of pottage. Its taste may be sweet at first, but it turns to gaul in the mouth; and bitter indeed is the dregs.

The Garden of Illusions

"Whatever you do, cling to your illusions. Believe that the work you can do is the one vital, important thing in the universe as far as you are concerned and it is, too. Nothing else on the face of the earth matters.

"I am putting my illusions out into the sunlight, watering them with my tears and watching the buds spread and smell, and some day they shall blossom again, only more beautifully than before, for they will be nourished by the decayed hopes of years; the fallen leaves of mist and earthly frost; the blood of a broken heart or two.

"There is really no reason why a man of forty should not have his little flower garden of illusions —in fact, there is every reason why he should, for he knows so much that is true that he can select his illusions more certainly, and he runs no danger of killing them by trying to make them real. You see he knows that illusions are the only real things of the spirit, and that he has but to wait a little and work a bit at weeding out the sordid growths that spring up in the night, and soon his garden will reflect the splendor of ages gone and to come."

I have always envied this man because of the wisdom he possesses. He is poor, if you judge him by the amount of money he has saved. But if spiritual values mean anything to you, you will call him a millionaire, when you know how richly he lives. One forenoon I found him in his study playing with the goldfish in a big home made aquarium. When I laughed at him for spending a precious morning with goldfish, he turned to me and said:

"Do you know that aquarium there gives me as much pleasure, I do believe, as Rockefeller's estates in the hills gives to him? I can see the whole world in that miniture world there. Every fish has his own characteristics. That big fellow over there is a capitalist. He fights for everything—and generally gets what he wants. Down in the corner is a meek fish—all he gets is what the capitalist does not want.

"In this little world I see all the comedy, all the tragedy, all the problems of the greater world outside. With imagination it is easy for all of us to be mult-millionaires. It is cheaper to be an Imaginary Multi-mlilionaire too. And the strain upon one's brain is considerably less."

The happiest family I know lives in a bit of a white cottage on the edges of a small New England town, and the most miserable man of my acquaintance paid $11,000 for a rug to put down on his living-room floor.

Happiness and money are not the same. Nor are they interchangeable. One can be very poor with millons of dollars, and one can be very rich without anything more substantial than the lasting beauty of one's dreams.

We are all living in gardens of illusions. Our illusions are glorious if but our thinking too, is glorious. By o thoughts we create the world we live in and make it what we will.

The Question

In far off ancient Galilee
He walked his lonely way.
In meekness and humility
He sanctified each day.

He glorified his wondrous hours
With prayer and Christly deeds
That blossomed forth like fragrant flowers,
To bless all human needs.

Because his ways are not as theirs
Men spurned the path he trod;
They scorned his sacrifice and prayers;
They slew the Son of God.

To Remain Young

"The best way to reman young is by learning the desires and ambitions of the young. Should the father not do this the boy will gradually drift away from him. Up to a certain age the son looks upon his father as a hero, and if the father does not continue to measure up to this ideal, he begins to loose touch with the growing youngsters."

Two Poems

Some time since we asked the question. "When is Youth and when is Age?" and the thought is again brought to our attention in looking over the following poems. The first, "Sunshine," was written by W. H. Orpen Sr., when in his 76th year, while the other, "The Sun and the Moon," is written by Frances Cothren, who is ten years of a e.

Sunshine

Walking alone in the sunshine;
Cearting new life from the sky,
Flowers and blossoms love sunshine,
Why shouldn't both you and I?

What would this life be without sunshine?
One ray of gladness kills gloom,
All lovely things grow in sunshine
'Tis there that they blossom and bloom.

When brooding 'mid sorrow and sadness,
All around, like a desert, is gloom,
A loved one just enters with gladness,
She shines like a rose in full bloom.

As war is destructive around us
It takes all our gladness away;
God's trumpet may sound to arouse us,
And then 'twill be sunshine to stay.

The Sun and the Moon

The stars they twinkled over head
And the Moon peaked into a little girl's bed.
But the Sun came up behind the hills,
So the Moon put on her cap with the frills.
Then the Sun called out in a big bright voice,
"Awake, little girl, the morning is here,
Awake, and go to your playmates, my dear."

CONFIRMATION

Positive proof that Abraham was an historical character is contained in a recently discovered document, we are told by a Yale University professor. At the same time this professor, who is a noted Assyriologist and Biblical archeologist, makes the general assertion that all archeological discoveries tend to confirm the historical character of the Bible.

And after the historical character of the Bible has been thoroughly and finally confirmed by archeologists, what are the librarians to do with the tons and tons of records and books that the research men, Bible analysists and higher critics elaborately compiled within the past century to disprove and belittle the Book now at last regarded by archeological authority as worthy of a place among the world's real histories.

There must necessarily be some shifting and readjusting. But the Book will continue to hold the place that it has occupied for more than 2,000 years.

The people have not waited for archeological confirmation. They have long recognized the truth of the one Work they have loved above all others. They have felt that its message was for them. They have loved the truth. They have known that it expresses the people's side in its account and views of events, that it is the one great work of far antiquity that places the people's cause above the cause of kings and despots, that it tells of events that actually occurred and of men who had a living, breathing, actual, historical entity.

The people will welcome the confirming announcement of archeology. But at the same time they will be glad that the world did not delay its approval pending that confirmation.—Editorial in Jewish Independent, March 22nd, 1918.

WHAT KIND OF LOOK DO YOU CARRY?

A poor little street girl was taken ill and carried to the hospital. While there she heard the story of Jesus coming into the world to save us. One day she whispered to the nurse, "I am having real good times here—ever such good times! S'pose I'll have to go 'way from here just as soon as I get well; but I'll take the good time along—some of it, anyhow. Did you know about Jesus bein' born?"

"Yes," replied the nurse, "I know. Sh-sh-sh! Don't talk any more."

"You did? I thought you looked as if you didn't, and I was going to tell you."

"Why, how do I look?" asked the nurse, forgetting her own order in her curiosity.

"Oh, just like most o' the folks—kind o' glum. I shouldn't think you'd ever look glum, if you knew about Jesus bein' born."—Sel.

O blessed Presence divine! How precious thou art to the soul! All thy goodness and mercy are ours. All thy victories over death and the grave belong to thy children. Thou dost place us on the bright side of every cloud with thyself, whispering softly, "All mine are thine, and thou art mine always."

Anywhere in the universe is your home, for God is there. The most untoward circumstance or calamity does not ripple your tranquility, for the peace of God is yours, and all the forces of nature and of the Godhead are marshalled to defend you.

If we learn to practice the presence of God we shall often dwell in heavenly places in Christ while yet in this world, and at the end of the journey we shall know that in God's presence is fulness of joy forever more. E. W. C.

To keep in line it is necessary to grow more proficient each year. You cannot stand still. Keep on a full head of steam. Hard? Yes, but you can work up to it and the result is worth the effort.

A great deal of good can be done in the world, if one is not too careful who gets the credit.

A PAPER REPRESENTING THE CHURCH OF GOD, AND DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF THE THINGS CONCERNING THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND THE NAME OF JESUS CHRIST" (ACTS 8:12)

VOLUME 70 CLEVELAND, O. APRIL 23, 1918 NUMBER 16

PEACE

Rejoice, O man of this sin-cursed earth,
For the day of peace hath come to its birth;
Peace to the world is God's decree;
Peace in the glorious jubilee.

Peace that our Savior nobly bought,
Peace for those who for it fought;
Peace for his chosen little band;
Peace for the battle-torn land.

'Tis not peace by man's decree,
Nor won by the sword of victory,
Though man may boast his valor here,
And say no war shall ever appear.

Sudden destruction then shall be,
To all who rule o'er land and sea;
The much boasted safety cry,
Shall savor of satan and his lie.

But the king of peace shall take his throne,
And reign o'er the earth from zone to zone;
Then Israel made free from the tyrants yoke,
By the command his God hath spoke.

Peace on earth, and good will to men,
When Jesus our Savior comes again;
The day of his coming is nigh at hand,
Proclaim the message o'er all the land.

"BE SUBJECT UNTO THE HIGHER POWERS"

Dear Brethren of the Church of God of the Abrahamic Faith, Scattered Abroad Throughout the World Christian Love and Greeting:

The book of Romans is a wonderful book, and its perusal will repay and enlighten all who carefully study it during these trying and serious times. In the 12th chapter an outline is given for the direction of our daily lives in our intercourse with God and our brethren. The 13th chapter deals with our duty and conduct respect-the government under which we may live. The minds and thoughts that are the clearest and the most rational should belong to God's children.

Paul in 2 Cor. 13:11 prays that the brethren may be perfect; of one mind and living in peace. In Phil. 1:27 our conversation be as it becometh the gospel, that we stand fast in one spirit, with one mind. In Phil. 2:2, 3 to be of one accord, of one mind, and to do nothing through strife or vain glory. And Peter in 1 Pet. 3:8 informs us that if we possess this oneness of mind and purpose we shall have compassion one of another; loving as brethren, pitiful and, as the original text has it, "humble."

Paul in writing to Timothy admonished him to "Hold fast the form of sound word which he had heard of Paul, in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus." To be able to do this, God hath not given us the spirit of fear, but of hope and love, and of a sound mind. Three things: the spirit of power (prayer or example); the spirit of love (kindness and submission); the spirit of a sound mind (wisdom and discretion).

Throughout the epistles in the New Testament, there is a unanimity among the writers that the children of God should obey and respect the governing powers of those representing the government. There is a vast difference in praying for exemption from military service as a combatant, purely upon religious grounds, which the constitution and laws of our government recognizes, and the absolute refusal to recognize the authority of the government when exercised by its duly elected and authorized agents. The Jews both as a nation and individuals were always getting into trouble and being persecuted because they entertained various scruples on the lawfulness of obeying heathen (Gentile) nations, or rather rulers and magistrates. Matt. 22:15-22 is a point in evidence. Jesus sharply differentiates between the things that belong to Caesar and those belonging to God. Because of the opposition of several of their prominent leaders to the Roman power, which they were subject to, there arose turbulent spirits that excited the people to scandalous and ruinous insurrection. Back in the times of Ezra (Ezra 4:12-24), Artaxerxes in looking up the record of the Jewish nation found "That this city of old time hath made insurrection against kings and that rebellion and sedition have been made therein." When Israel was in power "Toll, tribute, and custom, were paid unto them" by the nations they ruled over, showing that they recognize this principle as the law of nations under the law (Deut. 17:8-13). This spirit of obedience to those in authority was early established. So far as the writer understands the teaching of Scripture God has no where abrogated it under the present Gentile governments. Let us see.

"Put them in mind to be subject to principalities and powers, to obey magistrates, to be ready to every good work, to speak evil of no man, to be no brawlers, but gentle, showing all meekness unto to all men" (Titus 3:1, 2). Submit yourselves to every ordinance of man for the Lord's sake: whether it be to the king as supreme, or unto governors, as unto them that are sent by him for the puishment of evil doers," etc. Read 1 Pet. 2:13-17; 2 Pet. 2:10; Jude 8.

Paul surely recognized and obeyed the rulers of his day and generation, but under conditions that bordered on his commanding them to exercise the authority invested in them as officers of the government. See Acts 16:35-40; 22:22-30; 25:9-11. Which of you, whose life or estate may be in dangered through the malignity of an evil disposed person or neighbor, will not seek the strong arm of the law ? In doing this the power and authority of the government are recognized not only in the person of yourself in protecting you, but also its authority in punishing the evil doer. When we think of the monster of cruelty, caprice, and wickedness, almost unparalleled in the annals of mankind, of Paul's day--Nero--who murdered his own mother, yet Paul makes no exemption even on this account, but appealed to him for justice and redress when persecuted by his brethren after the flesh--the Jews.

A poor government is better than no government at all. The benefits of our own government are many and great. This must be apparent to all thinking and observant minds. It is the best government under present conditions. If the government demands my services as a combatant I shall protest, claiming exemption on the same grounds as the Friends and Christadelphians and kindred organizations, as this government in the past from time to time has recognized. If the government demands I serve it as a non-combatant capacity, I shall become acquiescent. If I am asked to salute the flag, I shall readily do so, because the flag is the symbol of the United States of America. Its authority as a government ordained by God I am enjoined by the Scriptures above quoted to obey and respect. "Honor all, love the brotherhood, fear God, honor the king" (1 Pet. 2:17).

I do not believe that the officers of this government after hearing an intelligent reason why I should not, will compel me to serve as a combatant. We should avoid being fanatical or rash in giving expression to our opinions for or against the enemies of the government. And like Moses, "Choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season, esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures in Egypt; for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward." And with Paul, daily realizing that God's grace is sufficient, for our strength will, like his, be made perfect in weakness. Most gladly therefore will we rather glory in our infirmities, that the power of Christ may rest upon us. Therefore we take pleasure in infirmities, in reproaches, in necessities, in persecutions, in distresses for Christ's sake: for when we are weak, then are we strong. It was the view of Christ's kingdom that sustained Paul: it is this view that will support us. It will inspire our hearts with a holy courage and confidence; it will arouse in us vigorous and energetic spiritual affection, enduing us with strength for service or suffering, animating us to self-denying and perilous labors, a sound and sober mind, wise and accurate judgment, sanctifying the Lord God in our hearts; and ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh us the reason of the hope that is in us with meekness and fear.

George B. Alldridge.

THE HOLY SPIRIT

"Prove all things; hold fast that which is good"

1. It was my first intention to review the whole of the correspondence, but as the Editor states that his reply in the October issue of the nature of a review (p. 115), it will greatly shorten the labor if I confine myself to his remarks.

2. The Editor, Mr. Weir, has all along led the reader to suppose that he considered the terms "Holy Spirit" and "Spirit of God" equivalent, and that the Holy Spirit was necessarily a personal being. Had he previously admitted that the Holy Spirit is the the "power of the Most High," the writer would not have entered into the discussion. Indeed, most readers feel that the Editor combatted this view, and will acknowledge that the admission referred to should have been made long ago.

3. His suggestion to substitute the New Testament wherever the term "Holy Spirit" occurs will, I am sure, be warmly repudiated by the reader as a gross misunderstanding of the subject in the way in which it was presented by myself, especially as he had previously accused me of accepting the term in one sene only, and in that sense in which he had just expressed agreement.

4. That the "Holy Spirit" is the same throughout Scripture, can be definitely proved in many ways and by many passages. For instance in 2 Pet. 1:20, 21, we read: "Holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit." In 1 Pet. 1:12, we have a similar declaration regarding the "gospel" through them that preached "by" or "in" the Holy Spirit. Acts 7:51 clearly shows that the same "Holy Spirit" was resisted by past and present generations (see Psa. 51:11; Isa. 63:10, 14). Mr. Weir's plea that a chosen spirit called "The Holy Spirit," apart from other holy spirits, will scarcely bear scrutiny, for if correctly applied it is reasonable to suppose that in each case where the definite article is used in conjunction with the term "Holy Spirit," it of necessity refers to one particular spirit. The definite article at once identifies it with every instance in which it is used. This entirely overthrows Mr. Weir's contention that the title refers to both a personal and an impersonal Holy Spirit. Two diverse spirits cannot both be the spirit.

5. With regard to the "alternative view" that Gabriel is the Holy Spirit, the idea is so novel, so lacking in scriptural proof, and so entirely refuted by Luke 1:35 we feel assured very few would entertain it.

6. Mr. Weir still lays stress on the words "hear" and "speak" claiming that a personality is proved by them, apart from the fact that in Scripture many instances do occur of impersonalities both "hearing" and "speaking" (Heb. 12:24; Gen. 4:10; Ezek. 36:4; Judges 9:10). We think there are more cogent reasons for disagreeing with Mr. Weir on this point, and have already answered his remarks re Acts 13:2. If our friend's contention is correct, the Holy Spirit still "hears" and "speaks" with God's people in articulate voice. Can Mr. Weir cite us a single instance of this occuring, and will he definitely state to what personality we have access who will thus speak to us in the literal sense indicated by him and from whom we may have (1) guidance into all truth, (2) testimony concerning Christ, (3) declaration of things to come, if the New Testament is not the manifestation of the Spirit of God concerning these things and at present our sole authority ?

7. Re "Preceedeth." Mr. Weir's line of argument here is certainly unique, an evident attempt to "turn the tables"; but as our desire is to form our conclusions on the basis of Scripture evidence, let us decide the question by its authority; we shall then have no fears regarding "unsound exegesis." Let our readers examine the following passages and judge if Mr. Weir's argument is satisfactory.

Gen. 24:50, "the thing proceedeth from the Lord."

Num. 30:2, "according to all that proceedeth out of his mouth."

Deut. 8:3, "by every word that proceedeth."

1 Sam. 24:13, "wickedness proceedeth from the wicked."

Eccl. 10:5, "as an error which proceedeth from the ruler."

Lam. 3:38, "out of the Most High proceedeth not evil ?"

Hab. 1:4, "therefore wrong judgment proceedeth."

John 15:26, "the spirit of truth which proceedeth."

James 3:10, "out of the same mouth proceedeth blessing and cursing."

Rev. 11:5, "fire proceedeth out of their mouth."

Rev. 22:1, "water of life . . . proceedeth."

Mr. Weir endeavors to make a cruical point of the word "proceedeth" as indicating the nature of the Holy Spirit. We think the above passages clearly answer this question without any comment being necessary. The reader will see the importance of this point, and how vitally it affects the question from either standpoint, for Mr. Weir defines the uses of the term Holy Spirit as "personal" and "impersonal." This particular passage he considers as referring to personality. We maintain the above quoted passages refute his claim. Mr. Weir's use of the word "necessarily," plainly admits that "proceedeth" has frequently the meaning commonly attached to it.

8. Re "Angels." Remarks re. angels are interesting, but are not all instances related in such a way as to leave no doubt as to the actual personality of the visitants ? Such is certainly not the case in the passages quoted by Mr. Weir; he is obliged to draw his conclusions mainly from supposition, not fact.

9. Has it occurred to Mr. Weir that the passages on which he lays so much stress, are explicitly stated to be spoken in "proverbs" in John 16:25-29 ? This possibly accounts for much of the difficulty in harmonizing them with the rest of Scripture, for the writer is of the opinion that but for these passages no support could be obtained for the idea of personality.

10. Re Prediction, Fulfilment. There is another point in question, viz., harmonizing predic- and fulfilment. That has never yet been completely nor satisfactoryily proven by orthodoxy, or even by Mr. Weir's novel suggestion re Acts 1:14; 2:1-4, for no person has come to take the place of the Lord Jesus during his absence from the earth. No one can dispute the fact that prediction and fulfilment do not bear the same precise relationship to each other that other prophecies do, constituting a strong argument against infidelity in support of inspiration. Read the record in Acts and you will find there is no mention of any person, there is no comfort, no guidance into all truth, no showing of things to come. Both Christ and Peter call it the fulfilment of the promise of the Father. Though Peter was evidently with Christ when the notable words in John were spoken he makes no reference whatever to them, and the words of Christ "which ye have heard of me," do not by any means necessarily refer to other than Joel's prophecy. I repeat, there is nothing of a personal nature portrayed in the account in Acts 1 and 2; and in order to gain his object Mr. Weir has to read into it an idea for which he has no warrant but his own. Whereas, if the New Testament is regarded as the inspired work of personal men through whom the gospel was preached (1 Pet. 1:12) by the Holy Spirit; if it is recognized as the only authoritative source of knowledge of things to come, guidance into all truth and testimony concerning Christ, we have every detail fulfilled. The objection as to time is not so forceful as it appears, for we find Paul's epistles are early acknowledged by Peter as inspired, and they were early known in the churches. Is it not remarkable that John 17 contains no mention of the spirit, but much of the word ?

11. I admit my remark re Spirit of God becoming Holy Spirit, is not strictly correct and therefore an unfortunate mistake, as Mr. Weir points out; but the very frequent repetition of the use of the term since the announcement of the birth of Christ suggests some reason for the thought. Can Mr. Weir give scriptural authority for his conjecture re the paternity of Gabriel ?

12. Re "Baptismal Formula." Mr. Weir's statement that the chief administrator's official name appears in the baptismal formula is incorrect, and we demand proof, and unhesitatingly affirm that the terms used are trms of relationship and not names (see facts 3 and 4, page 54, "The Student"). Only the name is referred to (Acts 4:12) viz., Jesus, the Christ. "There is none other name," and the terms Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are biographic and comprehensive of that name. The Baptismla Formula might well be called John 3:16 epitomized. We are apt often to forget that it was God, the Father, who so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son (begotten by the Holy Spirit, not by Gabriel) that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." And how do we get that life ? Friend, turn and read Rom. 6:23 and Rom. 8:11. Mr. Weir has been asked several most pointed questions such as occur on page 56 and in the postscript of the July issue; also in section 7 page 110 re. remark on pages 52 and 53, all of which have been entirely ignored and which we much regret.

"OCCUPY TILL I COME"

By S. Roxana Winee

"In work that keeps faith pure and strong,
In trust that triumphs over wrong." -Anonymous.

The Master may come almost any day, for the world's six thousand years are about up, and we seem to be living in the overlapping of the ages or dispensations, or in the brief period that lies between the gospel age and the millennium, when the dead are to be raised, and with their living brethren are to go up to meet their blessed Lord in the air and be for ever with him. But is that any reason why we should sit down by our firesides and fold our hands?

He says, "Occupy until I come." What does that mean? Be busier, more faithful, more zealous, more eager than ever to win souls for him. Faith cannot be kept "pure and strong" unless we do keep at work. I know this by my own experience. Never has my faith mounted higher than it did in my Linotype work. And if Jesus is coming soon is there not all the more need of haste that our set tasks may be finished when the trumpet calls.

There will be no time for them then. The printing press cannot be bought, papers and tracts be printed and sent out, when "one is taken and another left." What we do must be done now.

We Are Waiting

"Waiting because the Master stands
To watch the rising tide,
And he would have us cast the net
Upon the other side.

Waiting while skies still blacken
With storm clouds hanging low,
Eyes fail while looking upward,
To find the emerald bow.

Waiting because the Master's eye
Is on the ripening grain
The impatient sickle must be stayed
Waiting the 'latter rain.'"

And we shall have that "latter rain," thank God, if by making willing sacrifice, we prepare for it. The net will be "cast on the other side," when the printing press is ours and duly and solemnly dedicated to God.

Last December a devoted brother in the faith, sent me a dollar to be used in sending Mr. Winee's tracts as Christmas presents to those whom I thought would be interested and benefitted by reading them. I sent them instead as New Year's gifts. One of the recipients wrote me a short time ago, that "the tracts had been received, that they were good, and highly prized," and that she "wished everybody could have them and be helped," and said that her sister-in-law, a Mrs. Rosana Page, of Los Angeles, California, had been converted by them." What a star this will be in that self-sacrifing brother's crown! O it pays to give!

It is a blessed privilege to give, a joy that is almost beyond speech to express, if we give out of love for our perishing fellow man and out of love for God. So keep on giving, keep on working, in in obedience to Jesus, sure that he will take care of the results, and give all and more than we ask.

"Employ the gift thou hast
With true and earnest care,
And this endeavor shall not be thy last,
Each good performed another shall prepare."

YIELDING TO CHASTISEMENT

Jacob's children are known in Bible history as a stiff-necked people. Do we ever stop to think why they are so called? God demonstrated to them over and over again because of his great mercy and long-suffering spirit that his favor and guidance were with them when they returned to him in humbleness, willing to lay their honor in the dust by a confession of their sins. This was where the test came with them, and it is so today. By their works ye shall know them. The things that pertain to the pride of life and the lusts of the eye plainly constitute from a Bible standpoint, the things of the world we must constantly guard against. How it thrills and causes the heart to rejoice to see a brother or sister yielding willingly without an effort at self-justification, when the hand of God is plainly recognized in the chastisement of his children. In the first chapter of Paul's first letter to Timothy he confesses that he had been, among other things even a blasphemer; and although he did it in ignorance, was not willing to hide it in the skirts of self-righteousness, but put it on record for the church to know and also the world, if they care to consider it, that he was chief among sinners. How it hurts sometimes, and how easy it is when the crisis of a fire is poured out upon us, to borrow the characteristics of the cunning fox and look for loop-holes instead of sturdily acknowledging, acting the part of a man or woman yielding obedience and be willing to place ourselves at the mercies of a just God and trust in his protection.

Should we be dismayed and discouraged to feel the divine hand of correction in ourselves, or discover that its power is brought to bear upon others of the household of faith, whom we have loved and trusted with implicit confidence? We should not only welcome chastisement from above, but rejoice in it, for then we know we are the children of God and heirs to his promise through Christ, the Mediator between God and man. Do we fully realize the love and patience of Christ as our great High Priest? How careful we should be not to grieve the Holy Spirit of God, which was given into the hands of Christ without reserve, and which is extended to all in a measure who believe on his name—to as many as are called according to the purpose of God. The children of Israel grieved the spirit of God by their stubbornness in their sojourn in the wilderness to the land of promise. They did more. By refusing to yield and to trust in the strength of the living God, who delivered them and preserved them through all their adversity, then were turned back into the wilderness to perish. God is the same yesterday, today, and forever. May we not expect the same fate, and justly so, if we have a rebellious spirit and let pride, deceit, and unbelief be a stumbling block to humbleness, truthfulness, and implicit faith and trust in God, the source of all truth and light? All things indicate the near coming of Christ to judge the world in righteousness. Heaven and earth were to be shaken before the great day of the Lord. These conditions are upon us. The fire is being sent to test, purge, and purify all who profess the name of Christ. At Christ's coming his people will be of one mind and speak the same thing. Is it so today for those who claim to be his people? The church is passing through a most solemn experience. My brother or sister, are we trusting in God who is able to deliver and fulfill all his promises? If we have on any garb or false apparel God will reveal it to us before it is too late, if we are willing to listen. May the Lord soon come, and I pray that we all may hear him say: "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

J. E. Hammond.

A DESCRIPTION OF CHRIST'S PERSON

General Charles W. Darling Secretary of the Oneida Historical Society at Utica, New York, is authority for the statement, that in the Vatican at Rome is a sacred relic written by Publius Lentulis, who at that time was a ruler in Judea, It reads as follows:

There appeared in these days a man of great virtue, named Jesus Christ, who is yet living amongst us, and by the Gentiles is accepted for a prophet of truth, but his own disciples call him the Son of God. He raiseth the dead and cureth all manner of diseases. A man of stature somewhat tall and comely, with a very severe coutenance, such as beholders may both love and fear; his hair is of the color of the philbert full ripe, and plain almost down to his ears, but from the ears downward somewhat curled, and more orient of color, waving on his shoulders. In the midst of his head goeth a seam or partition of his hair, after the manner of the Nazarites; his forehead very plain and smooth, his face without a spot or wrinkle, beautiful with a comely red; his nose and mouth so formed as nothing can be reprehended; his beard somewhat thick, agreeable in color to the hair of his head, not of any great length, in the midst of an innocent and mature look; his eyes gray, clear, and quick. In reproving he is terrible, in admonishing courteous and fair spoken, pleasant in speech mixed with gravity. It cannot be remembered than any have ever seen him laugh, but many have seen him weep. In proportion of body, well shaped and straight, his hands and arms right and delectable to behold; in speaking very temperate, modest and wise—a man of singular beauty surpassing the children of men.—Sent by Sister Vira McIlrath.

MAY A CHRISTIAN DANCE?

Bob Burdett answers this question in his usual unique fashion: "May a Christian dance? Of course he may. He may swear and lie, too, but it would not make him a better Christian surely. Christians, you may dance, but dancing will never identify you as a Christian. What puzzles us is that you ask the question so often. Christians who don't dance never ask it. Christians, dance if you can't live without it, join hands with Salome, Herodias, and Herod, and circle to the left. But don't be surprised if you are mistaken for a goat. That is the side they are on.—Sent by a sister in New York.

DON'T FORGET THE HELPING FUND

We whose names are given below, believing it to be our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the manager of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. Those whose circumstances do not permit of the paying for the paper themselves should notify the manager, signifying their willingness to accept the paper, and it will be cheerfully sent from the proceeds of this fund.

EDITORIAL

One may give without loving, but he cannot love without giving.

Brother and Sister John E. Hogarth have returned from Florida.

As this month of April contains five Tuesdays, there will be no paper next week. The next issue will appear on Tuesday May 7th.

The Editor of The Restitution will preach at Moriah, Ill., Saturday and Sunday, April 27 and 28th.

"The Daily Timesett," a paper published in Chanute, Kansas, announces that W. L. Crowe, who was arrested some time since on a charge of disloyalty has been exonerated and his case dismissed from court.

Sister N. B. Robison, of Salem, O., has been carrying on a campaign for subscriptions for The Restitution during the past few weeks. Dating April 13th, Brother D. C. Robison writes of her continued canvassing, and sends another appreciated remittance. In this work our Sister sets a commendable example for others to follow in other places and churches.

THE THRONE OF JUDGMENT AND MERCY

"And out of throne proceeded lightnings and thunderings and voices: and there were seven lamps of fire burning before the throne, which are the seven spirits of God. And before the throne there was a sea of glass like unto crystal: and in the midst of the throne, and round about the throne, were four beasts full of eyes before and behind. And the first beast was like a lion, and the second beast like a calf, and the third beast had a face as of a man, and the fourth beast was like a flying eagle" (Rev. 4:5-7).

I. The Throne of Judgment

1. Lightnings, thundering, and voices (vs. 5; Ex. 9:23, 28; 19:16; 1 Sam. 7:10, 12-17, 18; Dan. 7:10; Zech. 12:6; Mark 3:17).

2. The seven lamps (torches borne aloft) are the seven spirit completely manifested in the judgments executed by Christ and his brethren (vs. 5; John 4:24; Heb. 1:7; 12:29; Ezek. 1:13, 14; Judges 7:16, 20; Nahum 2:3, 4; Isa. 4:4; Mal. 4; Zech. 4:6; Rev. 5:6; 14).

II. The Throne of Peace and Mercy

1. "Sea of glass," translucent like crystal; clear, calm, unruffled by wind, vitrified, ethereal, clearness, purity, calmness (vs. 6; Ex. 24:10; Ezek. 1:22; Job 37:18; Isa.26:9; Psa. 36:6; Ezek. 26:3; Dan. 7:2; Rev. 15:2, 3; Isa. 57:20; Rev. 16:3; 20:8; 21:1; Jer. 30:11).

III. Composite Attributes of the Throne; Or Judgment Mingled with Mercy

1. Oriental thrones of two kinds:
(a) Richly cushioned divan (called a "bed" in Esther 7:8); and
(b) Ornamental arm-chair (1 Kings 10:18-20).

2. First beats like a lion: strength (Prov. 28:1; 30:30; Rev. 5:5, 6).

3. Second beast like a calf: strength combined with sacrifice (Mal. 4:2, 3; 1:8, 13).

4. Third beast like a man: intelligence, sympathy, frailty, mediation (Job 4:17; 1 Tim. 2:5).

5. Fourth beast like a flying eagle: swiftness in both judgment and mercy (Job 9:26; Deut. 28:49; 2 Sam. 1:23; Isa. 40:31).

COMMUNICATIONS

"They shall make known unto you all things that are done here" (Col. 4:9)

Brother Huggins:

Sister Robison has been canvassing again for The Restitution. She encloses check for Mrs. W. A. Kent. We are all trying to do what we can to scatter the truth and think this a safe and sane way to do it. Several of the body are passing through a scourge of an epidemic passing over our city. I am one of its victims. May the Lord soon come and deliver us from these conditions. Your "Bible Lessons on First Principles" are fine.

With Christian love, we are your brother and sister, D. C. and N. B. Robison.

Dear Brother:

Many thanks for your letter and appreciating words. I can well understand your position. I expect your many duties are exacting and your time limited.

I am writing this time to ask you if you can spare them to send me twenty-four copies of this week's issue of The Restitution containing my article. I can place every one of them out among church people who know not the truth. Perhaps it may stimulate among some of them a desire to know more of the gospel of the kingdom. I expect later on to lay in a quantity of your excellent "Bible Lessons" series for missionary work in this community.

Regarding my paper on "Platonism: Its Influence Upon Church Doctrines and Creeds," I find that I shall have to revise and add to it somewhat; and as I am going away on business for about three months in a week's time, God willing, I will not have time to finish that article until I come back, perhaps in July. I hope to be able from time to time, God willing, to contribute my little bit towards the reading matter of your grand little paper, the staunchest for truth that I have ever come across.

Yours in the one hope, Geo. F. Haines.

Dear Brother Huggins:

The following Scriptures as appertaining to present conditions, have deeply impressed me, and if you consider them helpful to The Restitution readers you can use them.

"For behold the Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire. For by fire and his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh, and the slain of the Lord shall be many" (Isa. 66:15, 16).

"Take the winecup of this fury at my hand, and cause all the nations to whom I send thee, to drink it. And they shall drink and be moved and be mad, because of the sword that I shall send among them" (Jer. 25:16).

"The slain of the Lord shall be at that day from one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth" (Jer. 25:33).

"Babylon hath been a golden cup in the Lord's hand that made all the earth drunken of her wine: therefore the nations are mad" (Jer. 51:7).

"Flee out of the midst of Babylon, and deliver every man his soul; be not cut off in her iniquity, for this is the time of the Lord's vengeance" (Jer. 51:6).

"Come out of her my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues" (Rev. 18:4).

"Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

"Let your loins be girded about, and your lights burning, and be ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord, when he will return from the wedding, that when he cometh, and knocketh, they may open unto him immediately" (Luke 12:36).

"Let us therefore go forth unto him without the camp, bearing his reproach. For here we have no continuing city, but we seek one to come" (Heb. 13:13, 14).

M. Louise Atwell.

my Dad - David Russell

The foregoing was written by a friend and brother who has done much to help us to understand the admonition of our Lord and Master as given in John 14:23 and Rev. 3:20. We pass it on with the prayer that it may help others to understand the joy and confidence of this ever abiding presence. "No, I will not leave thee: no, no, I will not forsake thee." And "The Lord is my helper, and I will not fear: what can man do to me?" (Diaglott).

Rev. 3:20; John 14:23

To a Friend:

Have you learned to listen to the gentle knocking at your door? Yea; I always listen for the knocking at my door—amidst the noise and bustle of this sin cursed world. I often hear the gentle knocking at my door; and have learned to wait; and love to listen for that gentle knocking at my door.

The storm clouds are swiftly gathering, hear the awful din and crash, he has loosed the winds of heaven and his lightning fills the earth; who will stand amidst the burning (Isa. 3314, 15)? but they who have heard the gentle knocking at the door. Darker, darker grows the tempest, the world is rocking to and fro, all that is about me is falling with the storm, but my house is safely anchored (Matt. 7:24), for I learned to listen to the gentle admonition; delivered when I hear the knocking at my door. My ears are turned to listen, Hark! amidst that awful roar; I hear again that gentle knocking at the door. I fly to quickly open; (for I have learned to wait and love to listen for the gentle admonition delivered at mw door). This time my Master greets me with arm outstretched to save; for only the unshaken (Heb. 12: 26-29) will remain.

O my brother and my sister, learn before it is too late, listen to him who longs to guide us from this world of sin and strife. The self (devil) will quickly vanish if our ears are turned to listen to the gentle admonition delivered by our Master at the door.

THE TRINITY THE MARK OF THE BEAST

Commendation of Bible Lesson VII

Bible Lesson VII is so good, please send me a dozen. I will hear copy the first proposition:

"1. There is only one God, the Father. The 'one God' of the Old Testament is revealed as 'the Father' in the New Testament. The popular doctrine of the Trinity confuses the revealed relations of the Father, Son and Holy Spirit and destroys monotheism to make room for polytheism—supplants Christianity to establish Paganism (Deut. 6:4, 'Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord;' Mark 12:29, 'And Jesus answered him, The first of all the commandments is, Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord;' 1 Tim. 2:5, 'For there is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus;' Eph. 4:5, 6, 'One Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all;' John 17:3, 'And this is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Chrst whom thou hast sent'").

Now the question is in order, Who destroyed monotheism to make room for polytheism, and supplanted Christianity to establish Paganism? The doctrine of the Trinity did the work; but what power originated the doctrine—and enforced it? The answer is the power that in the Revelation is called "the beats" (Rev. 13:2, 4, 7, 14, 15, 17, 18; 19: 19, 20).

"The beast" is the symbol of the Roman power. He was first a Pagan, dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly (Dan. 7:7) and is always known by his ten horns. In chapter 12 he is a great red dragon persecuting the mother of the man-child. In chapter 13 he is "the beast like a leopard," professing Christianity, but finally develops into the Papacy; but he always has the ten horns (chap. 17:3). Now inasmuch as the teaching of this power by the doctrine of the trinity has "supplanted Christianity to establish Paganism," what objection can be offered to the conclusion that the doctrine of the trinity is "the mark of the beast?"

The solving of the question is made much easier if we realize that "the beast" is a symbol of the Roman Empire, and that "the mark of the beast" is in fact the mark of the empire. And farther, that the mark is the mark of the empire during its Christian phase, and that that phase was during the period that elapsed between the time of Constantine and the rise of the Papacy.

OBITUARY

James E. Leslie

The Church of God at Brooklyn has suffered a severe loss through the death of Brother James E. Leslie who, in his seventy-third year, fell asleep, awaiting the coming and appearing of Jesus the Christ, the Son of the living God, to establish that kingdom he so longed for and loved to speak about, and of which we hope he shall have a part.

Brother Leslie has been a resident of Brooklyn for about forty-five years, all of which time he was connected with the Church. For many years he was totally blind. The immediate cause of death was diabetes.

Readers of the "Young People's Page" may remember an article Aug. 21st last, entitled "Alone, Yet Not Alone," of which this paragraph was a part:

"Can you imagine a greater isolation than a man both poor and blind? We know such a man. He is a member of the Church of God at Brooklyn; and he says that daily he thanks God for the loss of his sight, for when his eyes were removed desire and temptation went with them. Our brother is a large, powerfully built man, good head, active brain, agreeable talker, and pleasing personality. As you look at him your first thought is one of sympathy, but he does not sympathize with himself, for his companionship with God has taught him that 'in whatever state he is, therewith to be content.'"

This paragraph referred to our late deceased brother.

SEND THEM TO BED WITH A KISS

O mothers, so weary, discouraged,
  Worn out with the cares of the day,
You often grow cross and impatient,
  Complain of the noise and the play;
For the day brings so many vexations,
  So many things going amiss;
But mothers, whatever may vex you,
  Send the children to bed with a kiss!

The dear little feet wander often,
  Perhaps from the pathway of right;
The dear little hands find new mischief
  To try you from morning till night;
But think of the desolate mothers
  Who'd give all the world for your bliss,
And, as thanks for your infinite blessings,
  Send the children to bed with a kiss!

For some day their noise will not vex you,
  The silence will hurt you far more;
You will long for their sweet, childish voices,
  For a sweet childish face at the door;
And to press a child's face to your bosom,
  You'd give all the world for just this!
For the comfort 'twill bring you in sorrow,
  Send the children to bed with a kiss!

Training Little Children

Often mothers say to me, "Don't all the things you do with your children take most of your time?" By no means. I am a mother of three, and do all my own work, except washing and ironing, and I have to do sewing without end. A busy mother will make suggestions which can be carried out while she is busy at household tasks. Stories may be told. For instance, baking will suggest the story of "The Gingerbread Man." This can be found in "Best Stories to Tell the Children," by Sarah Cone Bryant. Paring an apple or a squash makes the opportunity to tell about the seeds hidden in the cradle, how in the winter they go to sleep, and so on. Make a whole story of it. A few days ago I told my three year old baby this story and sang to her:

I know of a baby so small and so good,
Who sleeps in a cradle as good babies should,
Sleep, baby, sleep.
I know of a mother so kind and so warm,
Who covers this baby from all cold and harm,
Sleep, baby, sleep.

Several days later we had another squash to prepare, and immediately she said, "Mother, sing about the baby." Later, on request, she told her older brother and sister the story of the seed babies.

It is well to make much of holiday celebrations. Have the children prepare little gifts for a birthday. Perhaps it may be only to draw a picture. On Valentine's Day we always make valentines. Use scrap pictures and past them on colored cardboard. Or use paper doiles, cutting out the centre and pasting on a piece of cardboard, with an appropriate picture underneath. This makes a pretty little valentine of paper lace. Cut out hearts of red cardboard or paper and string them together in graduated sizes, on red ribbon or twine.

Let me urge fathers as well as mothers to enter into the life and play of their children. For only when the father lends his aid in the process of all training can there be perfect unity. By working together mother and father can lead the children to understand the life about them. They can teach them to know and to love nature. They can direct the emotions, develop the intellect, and strengthen the will. And as a result the children will naturally come to feel and understand the Divine love which lies only half concealed behind all things.

Our Weekly Puzzle

"And they brought young children to him, that he should touch them; and his disciples rebuked those that brought them. But when Jesus saw it, he was much displeased and said unto them, Suffer the little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the kingdom of God. Verily I say unto you, Whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child, he shall not enter therein. And he took them up in his arms, put his hands upon them, and blessed them."

What is the meaning of the word "suffer" as here used? What is meant by "whosoever shall not receive the kingdom of God as a little child"? Where can this passage be found?

Answer in next issue.

Answer to puzzle in issue of April 9th:

The meaning of "the end of the days" is the end of Gentile times, or rule, which time shall bring Jesus to this earth in his second appearing, and it will be at this same time that the kingdom of God shall be established and Israel shall say, "Come, let us go to the mountain of the Lord."

The passage is in Isaiah 2:2, 3.

Children's Hymn

Open my eyes that I may see glimpses of truth thou hast for me,
Place in my hand the wonderful key that shall unclasp and set me free.
Open my mouth and let me bear gladly the warm truth everywhere;
Open my heart and let me prepare, love with thy children thus to share.
Silently now I wait for thee, ready my God thy will to see,
Open my eyes, illumine me, Father divine.

A Bible Reading

O taste and see how gracious the Lord is; blessed is the man that trusteth in him. O fear the Lord, ye that are his saints, for they that fear him lack nothing. The lions do lack and suffer hunger, but they who seek the Lord shall want no manner of thing that is good.

STUDIES

No. 11

"And what I say unto you I say unto all, Watch" (Mark 13:37). The exhortation to watch lest we be found sleeping found in Mark 13:35-37 is surely said to the saints today. Farther, it must be expressly intended for us at this time. Never in the history of the world have we had so great and convincing proof that the Lord is at the door. Like a moving picture, sign after sign has been flashed from the political heavens. The signs in the political sun, moon, and stars have followed each other with such rapidity that the finite mind can scarcely grasp them. One year ago today America was nominally at peace with the world. One year ago Russia seemed, as one writer expressed it, to be standing on the threshold of her greatness as the latter day king of the north. One year ago the Euphrates power still sway over the city and land of God. How is it today, and what do these things mean? Turn to Joel 3:9. The mightiest nation on the earth has responded to the call of Jehovah. Vainly she said, "We will not drink of the cup"; but centuries before her birth as a nation God said, "Ye shall certainly drink" (Jer. 25:28).

Turn again to Ezekiel 38th chapter, Gog and Gomer. Has God's word failed of fulfilment? "My word shall not return unto me void," says the Most High, "but it shall accomplish that which I please (or will), and it shall prosper in the thing whereto I send it." What is God's decree respecting Gog and Gomer? They shall go together into the land of Israel. Together they will join forces against the merchants of Tarshish. One year ago Gog and Gomer were warring against each other. How is it today? One year ago the Euphrates was overflowing the land of Israel, carrying destruction and death before its onward rush. How is it today? One year ago Daniel's people were still waiting for the end of the 1335 days when the desolating power should come to an end. What do we see now? In October, 1917, the Turks ceased to count time by the moon and adopted solar time. What happened then? Why the very next moon (month) the British were in Palestine. Jerusalem is now freed from the desolating power of centuries. The first real joy in nineteen hundred years, says a Jewish paper.

Truly "God works in a mysterious way, his wonders to perform." When the British were on the Gallipoli peninsular, when Constantinople seemed to be tottering to its fall, I know some of us at least thought Russia would soon enter upon her work as the latter day king of the north; I know some of us were sorrowful and perplexed when all this failed. I remember a dear brother wrote to me words something like these: "Oh why does not God strengthen the arms of the Allies?" How short sighted are our mortal eyes! Not Tarshish and Gog go up together, but Gog and Gomer. Tarshish is now just where Ezekiel places her for the last battle, and surely now we see more hope for the prophetical alliance of Gog and Gomer as foes of the merchants of Tarshish. "All of them clothed with all sorts of armor." It is almost miraculous the weapons of war that have been conceived in the mind of man and fashioned into being by his hand. "A great company and a mighty army." Never before in the history of our earth have such numbers of men been brought into union. Such training is too wonderful to be understood that millions strike at once as one man. "To take a spoil and to take a prey." What is the key to the great East Indian possessions? Whoever holds the land of Palestine holds the key. When Gog and Gomer come up to take a spoil and a prey they must first turn their hand upon the desolate places that are now inhabited. We know the end. They fall upon the mountains of Israel to rise no more.

But before this something of the most vital importance to the saints takes place. That for which the elect ones have prayed and looked, that which has been the hope of the church through all ages since the chosen few "beheld that wondrous journey to the skies." "Behold I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth." As a thief cometh so is his coming to the world. They see not nor know, and so the Lord cometh and taketh away his jewels and the world knows nought of it. But to those who are taken he comes not so. Long have they looked and waited and longed for this coming. They have oil and their lamps are trimmed and burning. As it was in the day when Israel was taken out, Egypt was in darkness but Goshem had light; so it is when the saints are called away—darkness covers the earth, but light shines upon the elect. But alas and alas! some of the virgins are asleep, and so with the world: they know not of his coming and awake just too late. To those who look for him, to those who are awake and watching is the promise that he will appear for their salvation (Heb. 9:28). And so it seems all the forces of sin are working to take our eyes off his coming. Many are saying, "My Lord delayeth his coming," and they are eating and drinking with the drunken and smiting the fellowservents of Jesus, those who are sober and watching.

I have a tract entitled, "Our Lord's Personal Coming," by Alexander Campbell. This is an extract from Mr. Campbell's notes written in 1832. Of this tract H. V. Reed says: "In the foregoing statement from Alexander Campbell we have a clear and scriptural argument, showing our Lord's return from heaven is to be personal and tangible. We most heartily commend the view set forth in the article from his pen written in 1832." About a month ago I saw in our local paper that a Campbellite minister would preach on the subject, "Is the World Coming to an End?" I went to hear him and this is in substance what he said: "The world is growing better every day. Before the personal return of the Lord peace and good will shall prevail among men for a long period. The Lord's coming is a spiritual coming to the hearts of men. There are no signs of a personal coming, and those who teach that he will come soon in like manner as he went into heaven, are doing more harm than Ingersoll in all his speaking and writing."

Surely a deep sleep has fallen upon many, and even this time of peril and trouble, such as never was, is powerless to awaken them. Again we say, everything is working to close our eyes and take our minds from the command of Jesus to watch. One thing that personally (I speak for myself alone) I believe is taking the eyes of many off the Matser, and turning them in another direction, is the looking for a personal antichrist to arise. When I have talked to some of those believing this: and have pointed out the unmistakable sign that our Lord is near, the answer is: "Oh the antichrist must first be manifested," and of necessity they are watching for him, and not for our Redeemer. And strange to say I have never talked with one who could tell me how we could know when he came, or from what quarter to look for him to arise; and it seems there is some doubt as to recognizing him when he does appear until he has reigned some little time. Of course if this be true and according to Scripture, we cannot take heed of Christ's command to watch for his appearing, but must be bending all our powers of observaton to discern the coming and reign of this great adversary. Worldliness, which John defines as the lust of the flesh, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life, are undermining the watchfulness of some. It is not necessary that we become base to lose the mind of Christ. It is just when the adversary of God appears to us as an angel of light that our danger of falling is the greatest.

This is especially true of many worldly organizations of today which in themselves and of themselves are good; but nothing that takes our mind and time from the service of our Master is lawful for the saints. We cannot serve two masters. That all who are asleep to this command to watch are not outside but are in the name of the Body is evident by the term "Virgins." What is the trouble? They have the lamps (light of doctrine) but no oil (works of God) in them. For proof see Matt. 24:41 to end of chapter. We are told in Isaiah that Jesus was anointed (with the oil of gladness, Heb. 1:9) to do these very works of love. Let us who are of the day awake and put on the whole armor of God that we may be able to withstand all the fiery darts of the adversary. Let us exhort one another daily. Our great theme, the Lord is at hand. While those who are of the night are distressed and their hearts are failing them for fear of these things which are upon the earth, let us who are of the day lift up our heads and rejoice, because to us they are sure signs that our redemption is near. "Watch therefore that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man" (Luke 21:36).

IN HIS STEPS

A Paper Read at the Meeting of the Sisters in Cleveland

Dear Sisters:

I have chosen this subject for my lesson because wonderful things are taking place in these times. We stand as it were on tiptoe with expectation wondering what is coming next. I am sure it behooves us to follow closely in the footsteps of the Master. "For hereunto were ye called, because Christ also suffered for us, leaving us an example that ye should follow his steps."

In what way can we follow his steps? Dear sisters, the book is full of examples. "If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me."

The words of the Master show us plainly that we must always be on the alert. We know the world is ready to point the finger of scorn at us. "If the world hate you, ye know that it hated me before it hated you. If ye were of the world the world would love its own: but because ye are not of the world, but I have chosen you out of the world, therefore the world hateth you." Christ also said to his followers: "Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid, neither do men light a candle and put it under a bushel, but on a candlestick, and it giveth light unto all that are in the house. Let your light so shine before men that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father who is in heaven." We can understand clearly if we let these words sink into our hearts, that we who profess to be daughters of God cannot mingle with the world and its pleasures. If we do we are no better than they. I do not mean that we are not to be friendly with people outside the truth: there is a difference between being friendly and partaking of their pleasures. We are told if possible to be at peace with all men. Christ ate with the publicans and sinners, yet they could find no fault in him; he always glorified his Father in heaven—and if we are walking in his steps we must imitate him in all things.

Let us remember that a sympathetic word spoken to one in distress will often cause him to listen to the truth, but we must use discretion at all times when presenting it. Peter tells us to "be ready always to give a reason for the hope that is in you;" but we must give it in love. As an illustration, I know a brother in England, who was a very able speaker. His words were always kind and encouraging. In his humility he seemed a pattern of Christ. One day as he was engaged in a walk, his attention was arrested by a number of people. He stopped to see the cause of the gathering and he found another brother arguing with a gentleman and saying such hurtful and unChristianlike things that the first brother walked away, blushing with shame, and loath to call such an one a brother.

Another thing I would like to mention is false pride, which we sometimes find even among ourselves, and which all acknowledge is wrong, especialy when it happens in a case like this: One sister having just a short distance to go to meeting dressed in a clean wash dress, and as she was going she was passed by another sister dressed in the height of fashion, who would not condescend to speak to the more lowly sister. This truly is not the spirit of Christ. Suppose, dear sisters, the Master had passed by: do you think he woud have called that sister? No; I am afraid she would have been like the virgins who had no oil in their lamps; she would have been left behind, and the sister in the clean house dress would have gone in, although she was not as old in the truth. It is not the length of time we are in the truth; it is how we use the time that counts. Dear sisters, we know the Judge of all the earth will do right; our wrong actions cannot be hid by a pleasing outward appearance.

We know not the day nor the hour that the Master will come, but it matters not so long as we are looking for him. He may come in our day; I hope he will. Some of us may be about our household duties, or attending our little ones; others may be visiting the sick, but it matter not what it is if we do it unto the Lord.

In the Master's footsteps let us walk
  The narrow path he trod,
'Tis the only road, dear sisters,
  That will lead us unto God.

We must keep a firm step if the way is rough,
  Then, we'll neither slip nor slide.
We cannot lose the way if we just keep
  In the footsteps of our Guide.

What terrble suffering our Savior passed through,
  And yet it was not for his sin.
He died that awful death on the cross
  That we life eternal might win.

How happy, dear sisters, we all ought to be
  To know we are watching for him!
Let us keep in his footsteps, that when he returns
  We'll not be convicted of sin.

LIFE'S CONUNDRUM

If life moved onward like some turbid stream,
And man had nought to do but eat and dream;
If day by day the usual joys of life
Were not marred by necessity and strife;
Could he repose 'mid roses on a bed of down?
Would he be happy, never wear a frown?

With sluggard's sleep, and sumptuous meals between,
Man would be like some motionless machine;
Paled by the sameness of an idle life,
Prefer he would, strenuousness and strife;
Work for the hands faithfully performed,
Some battle fought, some fort stormed.

Work relieves the mind from worry and regret;
Needed sleep banishes sorrow and fret;
Work is a solace for a weary life;
All should labor in this age of strife.
If you'd be happy, live a life of toil;
In shop or factory, or tilling of the soil.

Then with conscience clear you may repose,
Free from worldly carês, and mortal woes;
Some objective hoped for, some purpose gained;
Or, from some vice the appetite refrained.
With a conscience clear, we eat our daily bread;
And thankful be for the bounteous spread.

DANIEL'S IMAGE
By Permission of Review and Herald

THE question of interest to most people now is, "What will be the outcome of this great war of [illegible]?" Let us consider.

First, the Babylonian; second, the Medo-Persian; third, the Grecian, all of which have passed away; and following these comes the fourth, or Roman, in which we are now living. How long is this one to continue? This is the point of interest at the present time. Why? Because when this fourth kingdom is passed away, the fifth and last kingdom will be ushered in, which will be entirely different from those which preceded it, and it will stand forever. Daniel 2:44: "And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand forever." Note that this kingdom smites the image on the feet in which we are now living (Dan. 2:34).

This kingdom will be different from the others in that it will be a righteous kingdom. It will be God's kingdom establishehed in the earth, with Christ as King. Isaiah 32:1: "Behold, a king shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment." This time has never come, as we all very well know. Satan is the prince of this world now, and has been ever since he deceived our mother Eve in the garden of Eden; but we have the promise that the seed of the woman will bruise the serpent's head, which means that Christ is to destroy the power of satan (Gen. 3:15; Heb. 2:14; 1 John 3:8; Rom. 16:26).

We do not know the exact date for the establishment of the fifth kingdom, but we are told that there will first be a time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation; and it seems as if the time was almost upon us when our Lord will descend from heaven in all his glory to take unto himself his great power and reign. Acts 3:20, 21, 21: "And he shall send Jesus Christ which before was preached unto you, whom the heaven must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." Also read Rev. 1:7.

Reader, are you looking for him and ready to welcome him at his coming? Or are you of the class that will call upon the rocks to fall upon them and hide them from the face of him that sitteth on the throne (Rev. 6:16, 17)?

Surely the wickedness of man is great. God is not in all their thoughts. The love of money and love of worldly pleasure is crowding out love for God and his precious Son, who shed his blood upon the cruel cross that we might have life. What greater love could he show? Without his death the whole human race would have slept a perpetual sleep. But by his death and resurrection he made it possible for all who believe in him to obtain a resurrection from the dead also.

ity is a gift which will be bestowed upon all who are Christ's in the resurrection morning, when he comes to raise the dead and change the living to immortality (1 Thess. 4:16). Christ was not immortal until after his resurrection. If he had been immortal he could not have died. He did not receive his reward until the third day when he was resurrected to immortality. He remained in the grave and knew nothing until the third day. He did not ascend to the Father until after that time, for he told Mary that he had not yet ascended into heaven (John 20:16, 17).

He is the firstfruits of them that slept (1 Cor. 15:20). Therefore we see that he was the first one who received immortal life; the first resurrected from the dead. All the righteous dead are now peacefully sleeping in their graves. Their thoughts have perished, and they know not anything. They are in an unconscious state, but on the resurrection morning they will come forth and receive eternal life.

I beseech you, dear reader, if you are not in Christ, to arouse from your slumbers and live a godly life. Believe the gospel first, then be baptized into the all-saving name of Christ, and if you continue in him you will receive the approbation, "Well done, good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

What a beautiful earth this will be for the eternal abode of the righteous, when the curse is removed from it, and it becomes like the garden of Eden. Then the desert shall blossom as the rose. Sorrow and sighing shall flee away, and death, the great enemy, will be destroyed. "For he must reign until he hath put all enemies under his feet. The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death" (1 Cor. 15:25, 26).

Then, and not till then, will wars cease.

Then it will be said, "The desire of all nations has come."

Glorious day! may it soon be. Let us search the Scriptures daily for hidden treasures, and let our daily prayer be, "Thy kingdom come."

"THIS DO IN REMEMBRANCE OF ME"

Synopsis of Sermon Preached March 17, 1918

How we delight to remember those who are absent from us. How we value the smallest token, a book, a trinket, any article, so long as it brings to our minds thoughts of the absent one. The intrinsic value of the article, to us, bears no significance: its value and preciousness rests upon the association it had with the giver. Hence as I read a book presented to me by a sister or brother who has gone to reside in a far distant city, its very pages seem to be illumined with their presence. My spirit (mind) communes with her or his spirit, and for the time thus occupied we are one.

Notice, if I had never known or loved this sister or brother, I could not intelligently remember her, so to remember Christ I must first know and then love him. We remember the absent ones ory of them soon fades away out of our mind and lives. To remember Jesus does not necessarily mean his doctrines or his precepts, but it does mean when we gather round the Lord's table to redember him, Jesus, "The chiefest among ten thousand." "Yea, he is altogether lovely." "The rose of Sharon, the lily of the valley. As the apple tree among the trees of the wood, so is my beloved among the sons. I sat down under his shadow with great delight, and his fruit was sweet to my taste. He brought me to the banqueting house, and his banner over me was love" (Cant. 2:1-4). Read John 15:8-17. As I nestle up close to him by the eye of faith and lay my head upon his bosom I recall Deut. 33:27, "The eternal God is my refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms;" and then Jer. 31:3, "Yea, I have loved thee with an everlasting love, therefore with lovingkindness have I drawn thee."

As I meditate upon these things a spiritual fervor takes hold of my being; a flush of joy and gratitude swells up in my soul, as I recall to mind Jer. 9:23, 24, "Thus saith the Lord, Let not the wise man glory in his wisdom, neither let the mighty man glory in his might; let not the rich man glory in his riches; but let him that glorieth glory in this, that he understandeth and knoweth me, that I am the Lord which exercise lovingkindness, judgment, and righteousness in the earth; for in these things I delight saith the Lord." Thus I muse and begin to enumerate some of the things why I delight to remember him.

1st The absolute trust and confidence in him I find repose in my heart (Prov. 3:26).

2nd. The One that is worthy of my love and gratitude (Eph. 1:3 7).

3rd. The Lord and observer of my daily life and conduct (Prov. 15:3).

4th. The centre of all my joys and happiness (Neh. 8:10).

5th. The One who represents me before our Father in heaven (Heb. 9:24-28).

6th. The fulfilment of all my hope (Col. 1:27).

7th. The source and the fountain of my immortal life, hid with him in God (Col. 3:1-4).

The feast which I eagerly look forward to during the week is commemorative of the death of Jesus. It is a manifestation of God's grace, his love and favor to me. It is prophetic of future glory we hope to share with Jesus in his kingdom. And beloved brethren, as I look upward by faith into the presence of God, these elements —the bread and wine—become the real presence of Jesus. As I read Matt. 26:29 and Luke 22:15-18 I am carried away in spirit (mind) to the glad fulfilment, "The marriage of the Lamb" (Rev. 19:1-9). So I see him before me, the man Christ Jesus, a sacrifice for sin; the great High Priest, my Advocate before the Father, the coming King and Bridegroom—Jesus my husband and beloved.

We start at the cross, standing there, looking across the dry valley of sorrow and suffering. We shudder and turn our face away toward the city of joy and comfort. But we hear a word behind us, saying, "This is the way, walk ye in it, when ye turn to the right hand and when ye turn to the left" (Isa. 30:21). Then we recall John 16:33: "These things I have spoken unto you, that in me come the world." Then in a flash it occurs to our mind that Jesus is now in heaven for that very purpose. Then we close our eyes and softly repeat John 14:1-7. Jesus then comes very near and is in an ecstacy of delight we whisper, "Even so, come Lord Jesus; come quickly."

I open my eyes—these emblems become spirit and life to me. John 6:48-58 is clear as the noonday sun. I eat his words and drink his spirit (life): I am spiritually renewed and invigorated, I see the power and deep significance of 1 Pet. 1:19: "We are redeemed with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot," and John too: "Thou wast slain and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kinured, and tongue, and people, and nation, and hast made us unto our God kings and priests and we shall reign on the earth" (Rev. 5:9, 10). Paul agrees who says to he elders: "Feed the church of God which he hath purchesed with his own blood" (Acts 20 28). Again in 1 Cor. 10:16, 17, "The cup of blessing which we bless, is it not the participation of the body of Christ? For we being many are one loaf." Beloved brethren, it took many grains of wheat to make this one loaf; it took many grapes to fill this cup with wine; but after they are crushed and ground, they all become one. So beloved, we with him are made one, one in joy, love, fellowship, yes, and one in suffering (1 Pet. 1:10-12; Gal. 1:24; Heb. 2:9-12).

How we need to keep this feast, "as oft as ye drink it." Jesus knows our frequent needs. Read Rom. 3:23-26; 1 John 2:12; Rom. 5:6-11; Eph. 1:7. Beloved, the command is, "Drink ye all of it." By all drinking of this one cup we see the symbol of peace between God and us, and the oneness existing with God and one another. I must recite this precious Scripture; if I give the text only you may not look it up and thus lose the blessing Listen: "And having made peace through the blood of his cross . . . . and you that were sometimes alienated and enemies, in your mind by wicked works, yet now hath he reconciled in the body of his flesh, through death, to present you holy and unblameable and unreproveable in his sight" (Col. 1:20122). And again: "If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood (life) of Jesus his Son cleanseth us from all sin" (1 John 1:7):

In 1.Cor. 11:26 Paul says: "For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup, ye do show the Lord's death till he comes." How can we better memorialize Jesus than by showing forth his death, and thus proving we remember him? Read Eph. 2:13-22. If we constantly remember that it is this covenant relation which we bear in him. "The new covenant in my blood shed for the remission of sins;" that in Adam our covenant with him brought sin and death (Rom. 5:12), which we cannot forget; how much more should we remember our covenant in Jesus which brings "glory, honor, immortality, eternal life" (Rom. 2:7; 1 Cor. 15:20-23). Read also carefully Heb. 13:12-14.

Lastly, we should recognize that in keeping this feast we receive Jesus. It is possible to prolong the life of a dying man by transfusing the blood of a healthy man into the life channels of the dying one. So as we are dying daily, it is possible in attendance in eating and drinking in this ordinance to experience an answer to Paul's prayer: "that he would grant you according to the riches of his glory, to be strengthened with might by his spirit in the inner man" (Eph. 3:16-19). "For none of us liveth to himself, and no man dieth to himself. For whether we live, we live unto the Lord, and whether we die we die unto the Lord. Whether we live therefore or die, we are he Lord's, For to this end Christ both died and rose, and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living" (Rom. 15:7-10).

In conclusion, let us try always to remember, beloved brethren, that we must frequently assemble together around the Lord's table, as the means of remembering him, without which we will forget him and eventually deny him and he then will deny us (Heb. 10:22-31). Because others stay away should stimulate us to be present, not as a criticism regarding their forgetfulness and negligence, but rather an evidence to the Lord of our faithfulness in seeking the means and opportunity of remembering him (Mal. 3:16-18). The feast if intelligently observed upon the first day of every week, will become to our hearts sweet, cheering, sanctifying, quickening and inspiring. It will set forth in its symbols of bread and wine, the signs as it were which display to the eye of faith the person of our Lord Jesus as really man, substantial flesh and blood. As they lie upon the table, their presence betokens our Lord's dear familiarity with us, and our nearness to him. As the elder breaks the bread and pours out the wine, it will show his sufferings. Separated, the bread apart from the wine, his flesh and blood divided, which declares his death for us. As we partake of the emblems, eating the bread and drinking the wine, we symbolize the life sustaining powers of Jesus as our reception of him into our innermost selves, the new man begotten by the word of truth. As the deacons return the fragments to the table it should remind us that there is enough and to spare, that the Lord's grace is all-sufficient.

Let us here remember only Jesus, forgetting other themes and affairs of a secular character, even considering it of more importance that the sermon which to us means a great deal. Some one has well said, "It is better to see Jesus, than to hear him talked about." O beloved, let us then in he words of the poet do this.

"For memory of thy cross and shame.
I take this supper in thy name;
This juice of grape and flour of wheat,
My outward man doeth drink and eat.
Oh, may my inward man be fed
With better wine and better bread;
May thy rich flesh and precious blood
Supply my spirit's daily food;
I thank thee, Lord, thou diedest for me;
Oh, may I live and die to thee."

A COMMENTARY ON THE APOCALYPSE

Chapter One

> The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto him, to show unto his servants things that must shortly come to pass; and he sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John (vs.1).

In the words, "which God gave unto him," we have revealed the source, the fountain from which the revelation comes. It is from him that knows the end from the beginning; and with whom the past, the present, and the future are one eternal now. In harmony with this truth we have the testimony of "the true witness." In speaking of the last day, he says, "But of that day and that hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father" (Mark 13:32). The things revealed were "short' to come to pass;" that is, they were soon to commence to be fulfilled. Another important point is that the events were "signified" to John; the angel taught John by signs; and if we forget this fact we shall fail to understand the vision.

> Who bare record of the word of God, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, and of all things that he saw (vs 2).

This verse is easily understood; no figures of speech, no symbols are used. Nevertheless there is one statement it may be well to mention. The testimony of Jesus." Here its meaning cannot be misunderstood: he bore faithful testimony to what God revealed to him concerning this revelation. It is found in chapter 12:17; 19:10. In 12:17 it is joined with the commandments of God, and is made to do service for the present day, would-be-prophets; but in 19:10 it is rendered in the Emphatic Diaglott as follows, "The testimony of Jesus is the spirit of this prophecy," which is evidently the true meaning.

> Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein: for the time is at hand (vs. 3).

This much neglected book is here honored by having a blessing pronounced on its readers, and those that hear, and keep those things that are written therein, for the time is at hand. The general opinion according to the evidence is that John had the vision about A. D. 96, and that the accession of Nerva to the throne of the Roman Empire in A. D. 98 marks the opening of the first seal: therefore the revealing of the future events noted in the Revelation was near at hand to be fulfilled when the truc witness revealed them to John, on the lonely isle of Patmos in the wild Agean Sea.

> John to the seven churches which are in Asia: Grace be unto you, and peace, from him which is, and which was, and which is to come; and from the seven spirits which are before his throne (vs. 4).

"John to the seven churches which are in Asia: Grace be unto you, and peace, from him which is, and which was, and which is to come, and from the seven spirits which are before his throne." In this salutation we find the number seven, which is so prominent in this book; and the question naturally presents itself, Why are only seven churches addressed? Has the Master no care for the churches of Rome, of Corinth, of Galatia, Philippi, of Colosse, and of Thessalonica? The only answer is that the book is largely constructed on the number seven. Fulness and completeness is symbolized by that number, so that what is said to the seven is applicable to all the churches. "He that was, is, and is to come" is God who sits on the throne. The seven spirits that are before the throne is God's Holy Spirit, in sevenfold manifesation.

It is God's spirit by which he brought order out of choas, when creating the earth; and by which he garnished te heavens, and formed the crooked serpent (Job 26:13). "Not by might, nor by power, but by my spirit, saith the Lord of hosts" (Zech. 4:6). This spirit is universally diffused throughout the universe, as it is written, "Whither shall I go from thy spirit? . . . . If I ascend up into heaven thou art there: if I make my bed in hell, behold, thou art there. If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea; even there shall my hand lead me, and thy right hand shall old me" (Psa. 139:7-10).

> And from Jesus Christ, who is the faithful witness, and the first begotten of the dead, and the prince of kings of the earth. Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood (vs.5).

Jesus Christ is pre-eminently the true witness. Isaiah prophesied of him, saying, "Behold I have given him for a witness to the people" (Isa. 55:4). And Paul testifies that he witnessed a good confession before Pontius Pilate when on trial for his life. In the Revised Version and in the Diaglott the text reads "first born of the dead," which seems to be the right reading, when speaking of the resurrection of the dead, of whom Christ is the first (chief born) from the dead. And upon the fact of his resurrection depends the life or death of all his brethren.

Figuratively, we are washed in his blood; the blod being the life of the flesh. And by his spotless life he redeemed us from the law of banishment from the garden and the tree of life; as it is written, "As in Adam all die; so in Christ shall all be made alive:" on the same principle our wisdom is to make sure by obedience that we are "in Christ."

> And hath made us kings and priests unto God and his Father; to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever Amen (vs.6).

Speaking of the saints as kings and priests, in the present tense, should be read in the light of Paul's testimony: "As it is written, I have made thee a father of many nations, before him whom he believed, even God, who quickenth the dead, and calleth those things which be not as though they were (Rom. 4:17). It is a well established doctrine of the Scriptures that the saints are to reign with Christ in his kingdom. "And Jesus said unto them, verily I say unto you, that ye which have followed me, in the regeneration, when the Son of Man shall sit on the throne of his glory, ye also shall sit upon twelve thrones, judging the twelve tribes of Israel" (Matt. 19:28).

> Behold, he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also that pierced him: and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. Even so, Amen (vs. 7).

Clouds are symbols of majesty, and accompany heavenly messengers. The Revised Version reads, "And all the tribes of the earth shall mourn over him." The Emphatic Diaglott, "All the tribes of the land shall mourn over him.' Probably the Common Version does not give the correct idea of the passage. When he comes he comes to destroy them that destroy the earth (chapter 11:18), preparatory to the establishment of his kingdom in mercy and righteousness.

It is probable that the mourning here is what is described in Zech. 12:10 when Christ reveals himself to his Jewish brethren according to the flesh as their true Messiah: "And they shall look upon me whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only son, and shall be in bitterness for him, as one is in bitterness for his first-born." There is not a more pathetic scene in all the Bible than the one described here: They preferred a murderer to their true Messiah; they pierced his feet, his hands, and side, and said, "His blood be on us and our children." The superabundant fulfilment of their request adds to the pathetic nature of the scene.

> I am Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the ending, saith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty (vs. 8).

Alpha and Omega the first and last letters of the Greek alphabet, expressing the past, present, and the future of, the one that, according to the Bible, is without a beginning or ending. He alone can say, "I lift up my hand to heaven and say, I live for ever." We may get an idea of the ever living One by his works: "One generation goes and another comes; but the earth abideth forever." The alternative of day and night, cold and heat, summer and winter, with the exact movements of the planets for thousands of years, gives us some idea of the architect of the Universe.

> I John who also am your brother, and companion in tribulation, and in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ, was in the isle that is called Patmos, for the word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus Christ (vs. 9).

Much has been written as to who this John is, and the general opinion is that it was the apostle John, the beloved of the Lord; and it seems that he is the one most likely to be the honored instrument, chosen by the Master to convey to the church the wonderful things revealed in this most wonderful book. He had been their companion in tribulation, in the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ. To the church of Philadelphia it is said, "Because thou hast kept the word of my patience, I also will keep thee from the hour of temptation, which shall come upon all the world to try them that dwell upon the earth." A precious promise to be kept from a great temptation. The testimony of Irenaeus is positive that John was banished to Patmos toward the end of the reign of Domitian; that is, about A. D. 95 or 96. He was a disciple of Polycarp, bishop of Smyrna, who was a disciple of the apostle John. His testimony expresses the belief of his age.

George Francis.

A CRITICISM OF THE EDITOR

Dear Brother Huggins:

I would like to write a short article for the Restitution to make clear for the brethren an error I believe you have made in your book, "The Bible: Its Principles and Texts," page 163.

Regarding the forbidden fruit we read in Genesis 2:15-17: "And the Lord God took the man and put him into the garden of Eden to dress it and to keep it. And the Lord God commanded the man saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat: but of the tree of good and evil thou shalt not eat of it: for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die."

God said nothing about touching the fruit. Gen. 3:1: "The serpent said unto the woman, Yea, hath God said ye shall not eat of the tree of the garden" (no touching here). Second verse: "And the woman said unto the serpent, We may eat of the fruit of the trees of the garden." Third verse: 'But of the tree which is in the midst of the garden God hath said, Ye shall not eat of it, neither shall ye touch it" first lie, because God did not say ye should not touch it).

Fourth verse: "And the serpent said unto the woman, Ye shall not surely die" (second lie).

Now on page 163 of "Bible Principles and Texts,' I will quote our Editor's own words: "To touch the tree of good and evil would just as surely have brought death upon them as the eating of it did" (an error). I think our esteemed brother has not closely examined this statment of our God. He fails to note that the saying of Eve to the serpent is an addition to God's words (therefore a lie).

To prove that God told Adam the truth when he said within the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die we will turn to Peter's words in 2 Pet. 3:8 "But beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years (with man), and a thousand years is as one day." Now in Genesis 5:5 we read: "And all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years (930), and he died." Now if a thousand years with man is as one day with the Lord, then we may readily see that Adam died within the one day of the Lord.

Your brother in defense of the whole truth, and the hope of the soon coming of our King.

H. S. Lasher.

P. S. I know, dear brother, that you ask criticism of your explanations when other brethren see errors, or think they do. So I hope you will take this kindly and weigh the evidence here given and see if you do not think my explanation is correct. H. S. L.

COMMUNICATIONS

Dear Restitution:

I love to address you as "Dear Restitution" and not as to Editor; for like the church is not composed of one member, just so this dear little weekly visitor is not edited by one member, and we have learned to love each of those members by their writings. It has been such a consolation the last two month, especially as our little "Avery bunch" have been through two fiery trials; but we also know "whom the Lord loveth he chasteneth," so he must have loved us. And we pray we have come through that fire a more "refined bunch." We know our faith is so much stronger, and without faith we cannot please God.

Let us all "be faithful unto death" and receive as a reward "a crown of life."

Much love to every one of the sisters and brothers.

Yours for the truth, Mrs. M. E. Bray.

Dear Friend:

A number of statements and articles have appeared in the periodical press of the United States recently with regard to the views of the Society of Friends on the subject of peace. Some of these have been copied in the religious press. The yearly Meeting of Friends held at Fourth and Arch Streets, Philadelphia, on Third Month 29th, 1918, issued a comprehensive statement on this subject, of which a copy is enclosed. This statement is in accord with the position taken by the Society of Friends consistently since its origin. It was adopted without a dissenting voice as the official statement of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting of Friends.

The Yearly Meeting will be grateful if the statement can be given as wide publicity as possible.

Sincerely,

Davis H. Forsythe

A STATEMENT BY PHILADELPHIA YEARLY MEETING OF FRIENDS

Third Month 29th, 1918

This decisive hour of history summons our Society to make its utmost contribution to humanity's deepest needs. Believing that this requires us to meet the moral and spiritual issues of the times simply and fearlessly, we feel called to make clear our Christian faith as applied to war.

Our Society's opposition to all war as un-Christian has been maintained throughout its history. In 1660 our forefathers declared:

> "We utterly deny all outward wars and strife, and fightings with outward weapons, for any end, or under any pretence whatever; this is our testimony to the whole world. The spirit of Christ by which we are guided is not changeable, so as once to command us from a thing as evil and again to move unto it; and we certainly know, and testify to the world that the Spirit of Christ, which leads us into all truth, will never move us to fight and war against any man with outward weapons, neither for the kingdom of Christ nor for the kingdoms of this world."

These convictions have been re-affirmed by Friends in all generations and during the present war our Yearly Meetings throughout the world have given clear evidence that they are steadfast to the same principles.

The basis of our opposition to war is much more than any single command of the Old or the New Testament. It is our faith that the way of love by which our Master, Jesus Christ, met and conquered evil, remains for his followers today the true method of combating wrong. For us, as for him, this involves refusal to use means which, like war, violate love and defeats its ends; but it does not mean a weak neutrality toward evil. For us as for him, it means a life of action devoted to the heroic purpose of overcoming evil with good. The unspeakable sufferings of humanity are now calling us and all men to larger sacrifices and more earnest endeavors to put this faith into practice. To such endeavors we dedicate ourselves.

In accordance with this faith, we desire to maintain all our relationships today.

To our beloved country, we affirm the deep loyalty of grateful hearts. We long to help her realize her noblest capacities as a great Republic dedicated to liberty and democracy. But we believe that we best serve our country and all humanity when we maintain that religion and conscience are superior even to the State.

To President Wilson, we declare our appreciation of his steadfast and courageous efforts to keep the aims of the United States in this great conflict liberal, disinterested and righteous.

To our fellow countrymen, who are following the leadings of conscience into ways where we cannot be their comrades, we give assurance of respect and sympathy in all that they endure.

Finally,

For all men, whether they be called our enemies or not, we pray that the sacrificial love of Christ, stirring us to repentance, may reconcile and unite all mankind in the brotherhood of his spirit.

Adopted by the Yearly Meeting in Session at Fourth and Arch Streets, Philadelphia, Third Month 29th, 1918.

EVANGELISTIC WORK

The Roll Church of God commenced a series of meetings March 27th, with D. E. Van Vactor as speaker for three evenings, and then continued with F. L. Austin as speaker over two Sundays, closing Sunday evening, April 7th. The church had intended to hold a week longer, but sicknss and other adverse conditions prevented. One young man came forward for baptism and was baptized and received into the church at the regular meeting April 14th.

The Burr Oak Church of God commenced a series of services with Brother Austin as speaker on Wednesday evening April 10th, and continued over Sunday April 21st. A good interest was aroused here, and five were baptized the last day, namely, Leta Olive Osborn, Goldie Overmyer, Grace Fetters, Mrs. Earl Overmyer, and William Hiser. All these converts are excellent young people, and we rejoice to see them starting out in the morning of life to develop a character on the higher plane after the manner and fashion that Jesus has shown us through his own life and teaching, and that of his holy apostles. May they succeed and thereby glorify the heavenly Father to the laud of his Son and to their own everlasting joy and blessing.

Brother Austin also spoke one evening at South Bend and at North Salem on his way to Burr Oak.

"BUT THEY HAD NO COMFORTER"

By S. Roxana Wince

So I returned and considered the oppressions that are done under the sun, and behold the tears of such as were oppressed, and they had no comforter; and on the side of their oppressors there was power; but they had no comforter (Eccl. 4:1).

What have these mournful words to do with the getting of a printing press for The Restitution? Much, very much, for unless we realize the suffering, the ignorance, the oppression, the great need there is in the world for a comforter like Jesus, we will keep our money in our pockets and be satisfied with things as they are. But when we know that "the whole creation groans, waiting for the adoption," it is a different thing.

In chains that their poor puny hands cannot break. Groping in the darkness for the light, the rest, the peace they cannot find, longing for the comfort their priests cannot give. Suffering from want and misery of which we can have but the faintest conception, and living under the rule of men who count them of no worth, save as stepping-stones to wealth and power—that is how it is with the millions of earth today. They are born, they live, they die, that priest and pope, Napoleons, and Williams, may reach the pyramid heights of earthly glory. Do we not care? Is there no pity in our hearts for the helpless ones that have no comforter? Jesus cared, he pitied, he became poor for our sakes. Born of royal lineage, and of a mother whose husband, though but a carpenter, was of the same descent as herself, and surmised to have been a man of wrath, he gave it all up that he might preach the gospel of the kingdom to the people, and that that same gospel might be preached on and down to the end and that the glorius kingdom come. There must be a change. Things cannot go on as they are going. Human hand, ruling never so wisely, cannot right things. But we dear brethren, can help to right them, we can be fellow-helpers with Jesus, to bring nearer and still nearer the time of his coming. We can "hasten the coming of the day of God," that blessed time when the yoke of the oppressor will be broken, when the needy and the poor will have a helper. When men will be unbound and allowed to think, when the tears of the oppressed ones will be dried, and they will be comforted indeed. We want Jesus to come. We want sin to have an end, we are so tired of it, so tired of the awful effects it brings. So tired of hate and robbery, of burning homes, of driving of peaceful innocent people into exile. So tired of hearing of sunken ships, of wholesale massacres, of awful battles.

So we must give and keep on giving. We must not, we dare not say, "I can't." God can give us the means; we must give and trust. He can take care of us if we take care of his cause. The truth must go because it is the truth that saves; it is the truth that takes out of the world a people for his name.

Other people give. The Salvation Army established a school for neglected girls on the Hawaiian Islands. It was so successful that a similar school was asked for for boys, and in a short time $70.000 was raised for this purpose and land given besides. We can surely raise $1,000 with the blessing of God. We can do nothing without him. He is our shield and our buckler, our helper in every time of need. We look to him; we have faith in him; we rely implicitly upon him.

BEREAN COLUMN

Edited by National Berean Society

Notes of Interest

Brother and Sister J. A. Dickinson of Florence, Montana, have recently joined us. We are pleased to have them interested in our Berean work.

Sister C. Seely, of 508 Brown St. Healdsburg, Somona, Co., California, writes that she has enjoyed the letters from us immensely. She is one of the lonely ones and has no chance of hearing a minister and has only our papers and the Bereans to encourage her. Mrs. Seely has written me asking me to thank all the Bereans who have written to her. She is an elderly lady and also crippled in her right hand, so it is hard for her to write individual letters. I trust all who have written her will do so again.

Taught of God

Dear Bereans:

I am coming again with a few thoughts that I hope will not be out of place, but on the other hand will at least do some good.

My greatest desire in life is to do the least harm possible and the greatest amount of good in my power.

Jesus said, "And they shall be all taught of God" (John 6:45). It is appalling to me when I look around and see how few are taught of God, and how men are taught by men. It makes me tremble when I look back over my past and see how I thought I was taught of God, but was really taught by men.

God alone can teach us of his ways, and how anxious we should be to have him teach us and to know his will perfectly. That should be the aim of every Berean, and we should be so in earnest that we should never allow our society to drift into mere form. Our whole aim should be to be taught of God, for what it means now and what it means for the future. This earnestness can only be maintained by constant thought of what we are to receive for our efforts here.

It is necessary for us to keep our hearts pure by thinking of the kingdom of God where the pure only shall dwell. God alone can teach us how to get there. "Teach me, and I will hold my tongue; and cause me to understand wherein I have erred" (Job 6:24). When God speaks we must hold our tongue. We must accept it without reply, but no doubt we have all in times past have "replied against God." Then God has caused us to understand wherein we erred.

How terrible it would have been if we had allowed our stuborn will to prevent us from being taught our error. Our chances for the kingdom would have been gone. Then if we have allowed God to teach us, our hope of the kingdom is assured, what cause for rejoicing we should praise God day and night. In being taught of God we learn how to teach others. Instead of using slang and idle words before our friends we are taught to use words that have force. "How forcible are right words!" (Job 6:25). This we know to be true, and knowing it to be true how accurate we should be in our speech!

In being taught of God we learn that he teaches us many ways, sometimes by affliction and sorrow; and if we could only learn that they are for our good we will have been taught a good lesson. We are apt in the midst of trials to become despondent and for the time being forget that God sends no affliction upon us without having our good in view. "Lo, all these things worketh God often times with man" (Job 33:29). Then if God teaches us through affliction, we must not charge God with wrong. "Therefore hearken unto me, ye men of understanding: far be it from God, that he should do wickedness; and from the Almighty, that he should commit iniquity" (Job 34:10).

That the above version is true we learn from the following Scripture: "In a dream, in a vision of the night, when deep sleep falleth upon men, in slumberings upon the bed; then he openeth the ears of men, and sealeth their instruction, that he may withdraw man from his purpose, and hide pride from man. He keepeth back his soul from the pit and his life from perishing by the sword. He is chastened also with pain upon his bed, and the multitude of his bones with strong pain" (Job 33:15-19).

So let us be taught by these words and rejoice whether in pain or otherwise knowing that the sunshine will come in God's good time.

Behold, God exalteth by his power: who teacheth like him? (Job 36:22).

OBITUARY

Robert Charles McChesney, son of Robert and Jeannette McChesney, was born in Marshall County, Indiana, November 10th, 1871, and departed this life at his home, near La Paz, April 14th, 1918, aged 46 years, 5 months, and 4 days. His last sickness, broken by a few times of apparently returning health and borne without a word of complaint, commenced last October.

June 2nd, 1900, he was married to Dora A. Kunz, and to this union were born two sons and two daughters, namely Elmer C., Ethel V., Doris M., and Glenn Robert. He also leaves two brothers and two sisters, Schuyler C. McChesney, and Mrs. Frances Pierce, of South Bend, and I. C. McChesney, and Mrs. Jeanette Conger, of Plymouth. He also leaves a large circle of other relatives and friends.

He has been a member of the Church of God since early childhood, having been baptized into the faith in 1896 by Brother J. F. Wagoner. He lived in hope of his Lord's coming; and his co-believers in Jesus' return confidently expect him to be called into newness of life at his Savior's appearing. He was a loyal friend, a good neighbor, and a kind husband and father. Since his life was a preparation for Jesus' return to this earth, the message of his life to us is that we all, too, should prepare for Christ's coming.

We learned to love the father's care,
And with him every burden share.
But now he lays in peaceful rest:
For him, perhaps, it is the best,
While we are left to mourn and weep
Till Jesus comes and wakes his sleep.

Funeral services were held from Fairmont Church, April 17th, 1918, at 2 o'clock, conducted by D. E. Van Vactor. The house was filled to overflowing with friends and neighbors, and many floral gifts showed their love and esteem.

Leroy Austin.

HUSH

What's the best thing you ever have done?
The whitest day,
The cleverest play
That ever you set in the shine of the sun?
The time that you felt just a wee bit proud
Of defying the cry of the cowardly crowd
And stood back to back with God?
Aye, I notice you nod,
But silence yourself, lest you bring me shame
That I have no answering deed to name.

What's the worst thing that ever you did?
The darkest spot,
The blackest blot
On the page you have pasted together and hid
Ah, sometimes you think you've forgotten it quite,
Till it crawls in your bed in the dead of the night
And brands you its own with a blush.
What was it? Nay, hush!
Don't tell it to me, for fear it be known
That I have an answering blush of my own.

But whenever you notice a clean hit made,
Sing high and clear
The sounding cheer
You would gladly have heard for the play you played.
And when a man walks in the way forbidden,
Think you of the thing you have happily hidden
And spare him the sting of your tongue.
Do I do that which I've sung?
Well, it may be I don't and it may be I do,
But I'm telling the thing which is good for you!

AMBASSADORS

2 Cor. 5:20

Our little lesson today is based on a very familiar word. It is "ambassador." The modern dictionary gives these definitions of the word which will help us to understand the truth better: First, "An accredited representative of a sovereign." Second, "One with a special mission." Third "An agent of high rank."

Every one who has been born again has the opportunity of being an ambassador. We are not called to represent an earthly sovereign, but to represent the King of kings, and to carry the greatest message that has ever been intrusted to an ambassador—the glorious message of the gospel of Christ. We would all consider it an honor to represent an earthly kingdom, and yet these are fast falling and passing away. If we would feel it a privilege to represent these things which are perishing, why not accept the call to represent a King who abides forever?

An ambassador is one with a special mission. Here, again, we can be helped by this simple definition. Every ambassador has his own peculiar work to do. He receives his instructions from headquarters. Even so, Christ's ambassadors have their special work to do. Their mission is to seek to reconcile the unsaved to a reconciled God. His just claims have been and he is willing to meet men now at the foot of Calvary, and to listen to their confession of sin that he may cleanse them from all unrighteousness. What a wonderful message we have to carry to all mankind—life, life eternal, as a free gift.

I do not know of a harder place for an ambassador to be in than to have communication with headquarters cut off. We can find many of heaven's ambassadors in this condition. This state of affairs need never be necessary. We can always be in touch with headquarters and talk directly with the King.

They must be of high rank. Here again we meet the requirements, for we are born of God. We are children of the King. This is well expressed in that old, familiar hymn:

My Father is rich in houses and lands,
He holdeth the wealth of the world in his hands;
Of rubies and diamonds, of silver and gold
His coffers are full, he has riches untold.
I'm a child of the King, a child of the King.
With Jesus my Savior, I'm a child of the King.

Ambassadors are recalled for mixing in the private affairs of the country to which they are commissioned. It behooves us, friends, as his ambassadors, to keep as free from this world as possible, especially so since the King is about to return. We shall all be required at that time to give him an account of our mission and shall then receive our rewards. May we, as his ambassadors, be ready at his appearing to receive his "Well done thou good and faithful servant."

Our Weekly Puzzle

"Bue we preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews a stumblingblock, and unto the Greeks foolishness; but unto them which are called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ the power of God, and the wisdom of God."

Who wrote the above? To whom was it written? Why was "Christ crucified" a stumblingblock unto the Jews, and foolishness unto the Greeks? Where can the passage be found?

Answer next issue.

Answer to puzzle in last issue:

The meaning of the word "suffer" is let, permit, allow. To receive "the kingdom of God as a little child" means that as a "little child" places full faith and confidence in his earthly father, accepting his every word and act as absolute, so we must place our faith and confidence in our heavenly Father, believing every word he says, trusting him for all things, and doing willingly every act he commands. The passage is found in Matt. 10:13-16.

Training Little Children

By Mrs. John Henry Hammond

The other day I was reciting to my little five-year-old son the old nursery rhyme:

"Here am I, little jumping Joan,
When nobody's with me I'm all alone."

"What does that mean?" asked the child.

"Why, when nobody's with you, aren't you always alone?" I questioned.

"No," he replied, "because God is always with me."

How shall we measure the significance of this early realization of our Father's presence everywhere? For with the knowledge that God is present to help at all times, our children lose the sense of fear and there is no greater lesson that we can impart to them. From earliest infancy we can begin to awaken in our children the sense of the all-presence of God.

Froebel, in his "Mother Play," a series of songs and games which he devised for the mother to play with her child, always seeks to make her look from the things which are seen and temporal to the things which are unseen and eternal; the father is to manifest so much patience and love towards his little ones as to make the transition of idea from the earthly to the heavenly Father simple and natural. The child is to be trained to look upon himself as a necessary and responsible part of a great whole, and to be taught that the whole can only be as strong as the weakest link. And from his earliest infancy he is to be taught to show gratitude to all who aid in ministering to his needs.

In these days, when so much is written about sense testimony, and so much is done to meet the physical needs of our children both in the home and at school, there is a tendency to forget the teachings of Froebel and to give our children only a partial education, an education which stops short of their spiritual needs.

A momentous question, and one which all parents must answer individually, is "Do we want our children to be merely healthy little animals with a certain amount of superficial learning, or do we wish to develop their deeper natures so that one day they may be able to take their place in the world, and through their spiritual insight into things, become powers for good in the community?" For parents cannot turn over their own responsibilities to the teachers and expect them to lay the foundations of character. The home is the place where this must be done and it is for us to prove to our children that it is only as we are good ourselves that we help those around us. Then, imitation being one of the earliest and strongest instincts of childhood, our little ones, taking knowledge of us, begin practicing in their own lives what they see in ours. And living in an atmosphere of love and harmony, they come early to understand that love is the greatest power in the world.

What Kindness Does

Did you ever take a magnet and hold some nails up close to it? What happened? Why, the nails were drawn to the magnet by some strange power that you could not see, and they stuck fast to it until you pulled them away, didn't they? If you never have tried it, just do it for yourself and see.

Kindness is like a magnet. It draws people to you just as the magnet draws the nails. When you are kind and unselfish other people want to be your friends and be near you, for they love you. If you are not kind, you do not make a good chum or playmate, for nobody likes a boy or girl who thinks only of self. So if you want to be like the magnet and draw people to you, you must be thoughtful of your playmates, obedient to your parents, and kind to everyone.

The Folded Leaf

A folded page, old, stained, and blurred,
I found within your book last night.
I did not read the dim dark word
I saw in the slow waning light;
So put it back and left it there,
As if in truth I did not care.

Ah, we have all a folded leaf
That in Time's book of long ago
We leave: a half-relief,
Falls on us when we hide it so.
We fold it down, then turn away.
And who may read that page today?

Not you, my child; nor you, my wife,
Who sit beside my study chair;
For all have something in their life,
That they, and they alone, may bear —
A trifling lie, a deadly sin,
A something bought they did not win.

My folded leaf! how blue eyes gleam
And blot the dark-brown eyes I see;
And golden curls at evening beam
Above the black locks at my knee!
Ah me! that leaf is folded down,
And aye for me the locks are brown.

And yet I love them who sit by,
My best and dearest —dearest now.
They may not know for what I sigh,
What brings the shadow on my brow.
Ghosts at the best; so let them be,
Nor come between my life and me.

They only rise at twilight hour;
So light the lamp, and close the blind.
Small perfume lingers in the flower
That sleeps that folded page behind.
So let it ever folded be
'Twill be unfolded when I die.

I Would Rather Be Right Than Be President

It was Henry Clay who said, "I would rather be right than be president." It was spoken by Clay in the United States Senate in 1850 in a debate on what were called the compromise measures, intended to allay the slavery agitation. And Solomon displaying the wisdom that God had given him, writes in the Proverbs, "A good name is rather to be chosen than great riches, and loving favor rather than silver and gold." And again, "He that trusteth in his riches shall fall: but the righteous shall flourish as a branch." And of Moses we read, "He refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasure in Egypt: for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward." And of Christ we read, "For verily he took not on him the nature of angels, but the seed of Abraham."

The lesson to us is this: If Henry Clay, Solomon, Moses, and Christ thought it more profitable to be right with our honor, than to receive the plaudits of men and yet be wrong, we too can afford to be with the minority—serving God in God's own way—during our life on this earth, knowing that when Christ shall come—and we expect him very soon—we shall have an abundant entrance into his everlasting kingdom, to go no more out forever.

Did you ever think that what we do for Christ we do for ourselves? Christ gets no benefits from our deeds of love, mercy, and charity, the reward is ours.

We can afford to suffer a little for Christ, for

Naughty Days

When I'm grown up and may be have
A little child or two,
When they are bad I'll tell you now
Just what I'm going to do.

I'm going to say, "My son, I know
You gave that priceless plate a fling
And busted it, but think of all
The days you never broke a thing!"

I'm going to say, "My darling boy,
I know you disobeyed your ma,
But think of all the days and days
You've honored and obeyed your pa."

But do my family ever think
When I have happened to be bad
Of all the times that I've been good,
Or all the spankings that I've had?

A Prayer

My God, my Father, while I stray far from my home on life's rough way, who teach me from my heart to say, Thy will be done. Though dark my path and sad my lot, let me be still and murmur not, or breathe the prayer divinely taught, Thy will be done. If thou shouldst call me to resign what most I prize, it ne'er was mine, I only yield thee what is thine, Thy will be done. Let but my fainting heart be blest with thy sweet spirit for its guest, my God, to thee I leave the rest, Thy will be done.

DON'T FORGET THE HELPING FUND

We whose names are given below, believing it to be our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the manager of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. Those whose circumstances do not permit of the paying for the paper themselves should notify the manager, signifying their willingness to accept the paper, and it will be cheerfully sent from the proceeds of this fund.

VOLUME 70 CLEVELAND, O. MAY 14TH 1918 NUMBER 18

LIFE

Childhood is the morn of life
Then all is fair and gay,
When springtime flowers deck the green.
Scattered by the way;
Youthful days are happy then,
As on and on they go,
Surrounded by the joys of life
No sorrows may they know.

But soon those pleasures fleet away,
And sorrows take their place;
The child is eager for the day,
To run his little race;
Full soon he treads the beaten path
His father's trod before;
His wisdom he must dearly buy
As those have bought before.

But he is anxious for the fray,
To reach a man's estate,
And finds he's missed the joys of youth
When 'tis at last too late.
But on he rushes with the throng,
A fortune to obtain;
He sees his idol slip away,
But works with might and main.

Perchance success may favor him,
And he may reach his goal,
And seize the bauble he may prize
Drifting on life's shoal;
And when at last his race is run,
And life is ebbing low,
The pleasures he was fain to grasp
Still onward fleeting flow.

Yes, this is life with toil and greed,
Vexation comes to all;
No earthly joy can satisfy,
Nor relieve poor Adam's fall.
Yet onward through perplexing life
Each one must take their way,
No cosy haven do we find
To hide us from the day.

But there's a hope revealed to man,
Then seize it while you may,
'Tis life forever for the just,
To live through endless day;
'Twas purchased by our blessed Lord,
He died that we might live;
To all of those who follow him,
This life he'll freely give.

Synopsis of Discourse Preached by Brother Huggins, Sunday Evening, April 14th, 1918 *

THE TRUTH ABOUT GOD AND THE BIBLE, IS THERE A GOD?

"Remember the former things of old: for I am God, and there is none else; I am God, and there is none like me, declaring the end from the beginning, and from ancient times the things that are not yet done, saying, My counsel shall stand and I will do all my pleasure" (Isa. 46:9, 10).

In this life there are many questions and problems which demand an answer or solution. The consequences and issues herein involved are bounded and limited by time. These questions are political, social and racial. But when we consider questions which are religious, especially in this, the most tremendous of all—"Is there a God?" We realize that no subject comes near this in the immensity of the issues involved. Time cannot answer this question in all its fulness. It is in its very nature eternal. "This is life eternal, that they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent" (John 17:3).

A Definition of God

If asked to explain or define the name "God," we answer: By "God" we mean a conscious being possessed of intelligence and organizing energy sufficient to produce and sustain the system of nature. This being must possess attributes consistent with one, which we easily recognize throughout the vast realm of the universe, as its Creator, the Being which we instinctively worship and adore as God.

Common Sense Defined

The sense of recognition on our part, that is, the creature towards its creator, is nothing more than the exercise of sound common sense. By common sense we mean the faculty of receiving impressions of truth, without being able to formulate the reasons therefore such as gravitation, ventilation, exercise, etc. It is not necessary to understand all the mysteries of the law of gravitation to perceive that it is in operation. The fact that the apple falls from the tree to the ground demonstrates this. By opening our windows and thus filling our homes with pure air, proves by the fact of our bodies being energized and stimulated that ventilation is conducive to health. The invalid becomes strong in the weakened parts of his body, as those members are exercised, yet as to the secret of the blood imparting strength and vitality through exercise may never be known to him only its results.

Common Sense Leads Us To Believe There Is A God

All recognize that the earth exists, but cannot understand the conditions existing prior to its existence. The strata reveals this. Everywhere we recognize the intention of nature in its every part to reproduce itself. Especially is this characteristic of the great animal world, of which we form a part.

Some one may ask which was formed first, "The egg or the chicken." Before answering, may we ask which is the easiest to create, the egg or the chicken? Notice the duckling emerging from its shell knowing by instinct how to swim without being taught. Many of our intellectual giants, if thrown into the water, will sink because they lack this knowledge. The chick instantly begins to pick up corn and is able to discriminate accurately between food that is injurious and that which is wholesome. Can man, who questions the existence of God, do this without at first subjecting his food to a chemical anaylsis.

How can we know the mind of a man? Only by the expression of his thoughts, either by speech or writing. "For out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh. A good man out of the treasure of the heart bringeth forth good things: and an evil man, out of evil treasure, bringeth forth evil things" (Matt. 12:34, 35). It is possible to know the kind of a man Shakespeare was by simply reading his writings. This is possible relating to all great minds whose writings are in our possession. The Bible is a transcript of God's mind.

The Bible is a Transcript of God's Mind

Joseph Smith's followers claimed he was a prophet because he predicted that the Civil War would break forth in South Carolina, and that it would involve all nations. His knowledge was very limited as the sequel shows. Mrs. White as a prophetess, agreeing with the views of Miller, taught that Christ would return to earth in 1844. The value of their predictions rests upon their fulfilment. But when we open the Bible we are amazed how accurately all the prophesies, relating to the past, present, and future events have and are being fulfilled exactly as God said they would.

(a) The Jew Imperishable

Observe the imperishableness of the Jew. Let us read Jer. 30:11, 16: "For I am with thee, saith the Lord, to save thee, though I make a full end of all nations whither I have scattered thee, yet will I not make a full end of thee; but I will correct thee in measure, and will not leave thee altogether unpunished." "Therefore all they that devour thee shall be devoured; and all thine adversaries, every one of them shall go into captivity; and they that spoil thee shall be a spoil, and all that prey upon thee I will give for a prey."

Beloved, are these Scriptures being fulfilled in Russia today? We know they are. Again, in Jer. 46:38: "Fear thou not, O Jacob my servant, saith the Lord: for I am with thee; for I will make a full end of all the nations whither I have driven thee: but I will not make a full end of thee, but correct thee in measure; yet will I not leave thee wholly unpunished." What is God's purpose in doing this? The answer is found in Amos 9:8: "Behold, the eyes of the Lord God are upon the sinful kingdom, and I will destroy it from off the face of the earth; saving that I will not utterly destroy the house of Jacob, saith the Lord." Once more: in Deut. 32:43: "Rejoice, O Jerusalem with his people; for he will avenge the blood of his servants, and will render vengeance to all his adversaries, and will be merciful unto his land, and to his people."

England and America, our own land, are standing behind the Jew. God is using these two nations to bring about the fulfilment of those wonderful prophecies. But how about the other nations involved? Who have persecuted the Jew most in modern times? Russia, Germany and France. Notice the deep significance of Micah 4:11-13: "Now also many nations are gathered against thee, that say, Let her be defiled, and let our eye look upon Zion. But they know not the thoughts of the Lord, neither understand they his counsel; for he shall gather them as the sheaves into the floor. Arise and thresh, O daughter of Zion, for I will make thine horn iron, and I will make thine hoofs brass; and thou shalt beat in pieces many people; and I will consecrate their gain unto the Lord and their substance unto the Lord of the whole earth."

The Jews then, though sinful, are yet to become a mighty nation in the kingdom of God.

(b) Continuous Existence of the Papacy Until The Lord Comes

Again, God declared through Paul his servant that there should be a continuous existence of the Papacy for 1260 years. Read 2 Thess. 2 for a full description of this beastly power. From the days of Gregorius Gregory the Great, who died in the year 604, unto the present incumbent—Benedictus, have fulfilled this Scripture: "Who opposeth and exalteth himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped; so that he, as God, sitteth in the temple of God, showing himself that he is God." Paul wrote these words under inspiration in the year A. D. 54. Daniel saw this fourth beast as revealed to us in Dan. 7, as a sinful power It was to be a continuous power wearing out the saints of the Most High, until Jesus shall come and smite it with his presence. This power —The Papal power—has followed out the divine description exactly, causing more wars and bloodshed than any other power in the world's history. And brethren, it is not innocent in causing the present terrible strife. Its sympathy and influence are with the Central Powers; it is pro-German, hoping for the success that it may be restored to temporal power. But God has pronounced her doom. See Rev. 17 and 18 chapters. Apparently the present pope will be the last.

(c) Militarism A Characteristic Of the Last Days

Again God's word is proven true by its description centuries ago of the spirit of militarism and war as it exists today. A few years ago the cry heralded forth was "Peace, peace"; but God in Isa. 57:21 declares, "There is no peace, saith God, to the wicked." Prior to our declaration of war, our country was full of pacificists, Carnegie erecting and establishing the Palace of Peace. Now heart-broken because his dreams of universal peace and settlement of disputes by arbitration are unfulfilled; William J. Bryan, one of our cleverest and wisest statesmen, issuing circulars and scattering them broadcast throughout the land claiming that Isa. 2:4 is about to be fulfilled: "And they shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruninghooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

Henry Ford fitted out a Peace Expedition to Europe. He found that he was on the unpopular side. Today he is devoting his money and talents towards speeding up the war. The Hague Tribune today, for all the good it can do, can hang out the sign "For Rent." These premises must be vacated for want of business. They tried, as Jeremiah said they would, "They have healed also the hurt of the daughters of my people slightly, saying, Peace, Peace, when there is no peace" (Jer. 6:14). We wonder why Sir Edward Grey and other ambassadors returned recalled to mind Isa. 33:7. Behold their valiant ones shall cry without: the ambassadors of peace shall weep biterly." Why this weeping? Because, as Paul says, "The way of peace have they not known" (Rom. 3:17). But rather the cry now is, as Joel said it would be, "Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles; Prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near; let them come up, Beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruninghooks into spears, let the weak say I am strong." Read the following verses and see how God is gathering the nations to the valley of Jehoshaphat. See also Rev. 16:16.

The nations may patch up some kind of a brief peace, which 1 Thess. 5:1-6 seems to suggest, but it cannot last long: sudden destruction will burst upon them, while peace is upon their lips.

(d) The Prince of Peace Will Reign Over A Warless World

But bless God peace will come, but only in the God-appointed way, when it can be said "Thy God reigneth" (Isa. 52:7); when the Lord becomes exalted in the earth (Psa. 46:9-11); when the temple of God shall stand in Jerusalem (Psa. 68:29,30; Zech. 6:12, 13): when his dominions shall be from sea to sea, and from the river even unto the ends of the earth (Zech. 9:10); when the Prince of Peace shall reign in righteousness (Isa. 9:6; Isa. 60:17); when the desire of all nations shall come, though now they do not realize it (Hag. 2:7-9). Neither Germany nor the Allies can usurp this rule or authority. The pope is scheming and laying plans for this honor, but he too will fail to grasp it.

We cannot be deceived. Whether this is Armageddon or not, it does not matter, God's word is our infallible guide. Its notes ring out clear. The hands on the prophetic dial point to the hour and consummation of all things spoken by God by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began (Acts 3:20-22). We are endeavoring to keep our garments clean and white, unspotted from the world, ready to go in with him to the marriage supper of the Lamb (Rev. 19:7). Then with the angels we will sing: "Glory to God in the highest and on earth peace, good will toward men" (Luke 2:14).

"Great God to thee my grateful tongue
  My fervent thanks shall raise;
Inspire my heart to raise the song,
  Which celebrates thy praise.

"In celebration of thy praise
  I will employ by breath,
And walking steadfast in thy ways,
  Will triumph over death."

BIBLE LESSON IV

With Texts Quoted in Full

The Things Concerning The Kingdom of God

I. What the Kingdom of God Is

"And in the days of these kings shall the God of heaven set up a kingdom which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever" (Dan. 2:44).

"I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of Days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that shall not be destroyed" (Dan. 7:13, 14).

"And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever" (Rev. 11:15).

"Behold a king shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment" (Isa. 32:1).
32:1).

"They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord as the waters cover the sea. And in that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign for the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek: and his rest shall be glorious" (Isa. 11:9, 10).

"And I will overthrow the throne of kingdoms, and I will destroy the strength of the kingdoms of the heathen; and I will overthrow the chariots, and those that ride in them; and the horses and their riders shall come down, every one by the hand of his brother" (Hag. 2:22).

"Ask of me, and I shall give thee the heathen for thine inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession. Thou shalt break them with a rod of iron; thou shalt dash them in pieces like a potter's vessel" (Psa. 2:8, 9).

II. When the Kingdom of God Will Be Set Up

"And he shall send Jesus Christ, who before was preached unto you: whom the heavens must receive until the times of restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began" (Acts 3:20, 21). "Simeon hath declared how God at the first did visit the Gentiles, to take out of them a people for his name. And to this agree the words of the prophets; as it is written, After this will I return, and will build again the tabernacle of David, which is fallen down; and I will build again the ruins thereof, and I will set it up" (Acts 15:14-16). "Thou shalt arise and have mercy upon Zion: for the time to favor her, yea, the set time is come when the Lord shall build up Zion, he shall appear in his glory to declare the name of the Lord in Zion, and his praise in Jerusalem" (Psa. 102:13, 16, 21).

"I charge thee therefore before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ who shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom" (2 Tim. 4:1).

"He said therefore, a certain nobleman went into a far country to receive for himself a kingdom and to return. And he called his ten servants and delivered them ten pounds, and said unto them, occupy till I come. But his citizens hated him, and sent a message after him, saying, We will not have this man to reign over us. And it came to pass, that when he was returned, having received the kingdom, then he commanded these servants to be called unto him, to whom he had given the money, that he might know how much every man had gained by trading" (Luke 19:12-15).

"And when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight. And while they looked steadfastly toward heaven as he went up, behold, two men stood by them in white apparel; which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? this same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven" (Acts 1:9-11). "I saw in he night visions, and behold, one like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of Days, and they brought him near before him. And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed" (Dan. 7:13-14).

"These great beasts, which are four, are four kings, which shall arise out of the earth. But the saints of the Most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom for ever, even for ever and ever. Then I would know the truth of the fourth beast, which was diverse from all the others, exceeding dreadful, whose teeth were of iron, and his nails of brass; which devoured, break in pieces, and stamped the residue with his feet, until the Ancient of Days came, and judgment was given to the saints of the Most High; and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom. Thus he said, the fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon earth, which shall be diverse from all kingdoms, and shall devour the whole earth, and shall tread it down, and shall break it in pieces. And the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise and another shall rise after them; and he shall be diverse from the first, and he shall subdue three kings. And he shall speak great words against the Most High, and shall wear out the saints of the Most High, and think to change times and laws: and they shall be given into his hand until a time and times, and the dividing of time, But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and destroy it to the end. And the kingdom and dominion and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the Most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him" (Dan. 7:13-27). "When the Son of Man shall come in all his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory; and before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another, as the shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats; and he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left. Then shall the king say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world" (Matt. 25:31-34).

III. Where the Kingdom of God Will Be Located

The Kingdom of God will be established on earth in the land bequeathed to Abraham for an everlasting inheritance. It will be the kingdom of Israel restored..

"In that day, saith the Lord, I will assemble her that halteth, and I will gather her that is driven out, and her that I have afflicted; and I will make her that halted a remnant, and her that was cast off a strong nation; and the Lord shall reign over them in Mount Zion from henceforth, even for ever and ever. O tower of the flock, the stronghold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even the first dominion; the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem" (Micah 4:6-8).

'In that day will I raise up the tabernacle of David that is fallen, and close up the breaches thereof; and I Will raise up his ruins and will build it as in he days of old: that they may possess the remnant of Edom, and all the heathen, which are called by my name, saith the Lord that doeth this. Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that the plowman shall overtake the reaper, and the treader of grapes him that soweth seed; and the mountains shall drop sweet wine; and all the hills shall melt. And I will bring again the captivity of my people Israel, and they shall build the waste cities, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and drink the wine thereof; they shall also make gardens, and eat the fruit of them. And I will plant them upon their land, and they shall no more be pulled up out of their land which I have given them, saith the Lord thy God" (Amos 9:11-15).

"And say unto them, thus saith the Lord God; behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and I will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land: And I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel; and one king shall be king to them all: and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all" (Ezek 37:21, 22). "And I will gather the remnant of my flock out of all coutries whither I have driven them, and will bring them again to their folds, and they shall be fruitful and increase. And I will set up shepherds over them, and they shall fear no more, nor be dismayed, neither shall they be lacking saith the Lord. Behold, the days come saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth. In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely; and this is the name whereby he shall be called, The Lord Our Righteousness. Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that they shall no more say, The Lord liveth which brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt; but the Lord liveth which brought and which led the seed of the house of Israel out of the north countries whither I had driven them; and they shall dwell in their own land" (Jer. 23:3-8).

"And the Lord said unto Abram, after that Lot was separated from him, Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward; for all the land which thou seest, to thee will I give it, and to thy seed forever. And I will make thy seed as the dust of the earth; so that if a man can number the dust of the earth, then shall thy seed also be numbered. Arise, walk through the land, in the length of it and in the breadth of it, for I will give it unto thee" (Gen. 13:14-17).

"By faith Abraham, when he was called to go out into a place which he should after receive for an inheritance, obeyed; and he went out, not knowing whither he went. By faith he sojourned in the land of promise, as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles with Isaac and Jacob, the heirs with him of the same promise" (Heb. 11:8, 9).

"These all died in faith, not having received the promises, but having seen them afar off, and were persuaded of them, and confessed that they were strangers and pilgrims on the earth. Now to Abraham and his seed were the promises made. He saith not, and to seeds as of many; but as of one, And to thy seed, which is Christ" (Gal. 3:13, 16).

"Then will I remember my covenant with Jacob, and also my covenant with Isaac, and also my covenant with Abraham will I remember; and I will remember the land" (Lev. 26:12).

"Thou wilt perform the truth to Jacob, and the mercy to Abraham, which thou hast sworn unto our fathers from the days of old" (Micah 7:20).

Prosperity and Adversity

Prosperity makes us suspicious of, while adversity makes us trust in each other.

Awake to righteousness, and sin not."

FIVE MINUTES AFTER DEATH

We find that the chief support of the current belief on soul immortality rests in sentimental views on the death-state. To cast aside a view unsupported by Bible, reason, or common sense is to lose the cherished idea that our dead friends are in heaven, and that "five minutes after death they know more than could be known during life." Heaven at death is the delusion most fondly cherished. Let us say right here, that no amount of sentiment can be permitted to stand in the way of bible declarations. A "Thus saith the Lord" is of more weight than all the emotional vaporings of fanatical preachers and writers. A man five minutes after death is dead, and will remain so until he is raised from the dead. It is useless to say that the body is dead, but the soul or spirit is alive in consciousness. Death does not make one person into two, and it is the man who dies. Get that fact well into the mind as a common sense, reasonable, scientific, and Biblical fact, and all the sentimental talk about life in the death-state will be scouted as just so much froth from that brew of paganism which is still imbibed by those who ought to content themselves with the nourishment supplied by the word of God.—The Bible Standard.

WHOSE COMING IS AFTER

Paul says, "And then shall that wicked (one) be revealed, whom the Lord shall consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming (parousia), even him, whose coming is after the working of satan, with all power and signs and lying wonders, and all deceivableness of unrighteousness," etc (2 Thess. 2: 8, 9).

Says Dr. Albert Barnes, commenting on this:

"Even him, whose coming is after the working of satan, Greek, kat' energeian tou satana. According to the energy of satan; that is, the energetic or efficient operation of satan. The word rendered after, It need not be said to one who looks at the Greek, does not refer to time, but is a preposition, meaning, according to; in conformity with; meaning that the manner of his appearing would be accompanied by such works as would show that the agency of satan was employed, and such as he only could produce. It does not mean that the coming of the Lord Jesus would be after satan had worked in this manner, but that the manifestation of that wicked one would be with such demonstrations of power and wonder as satan only could effect." Dr. Adam Clarke takes this view also.

The Revisions (both English and American) render it. "Whose coming is according to the working of satan." This is the correct rendering. The Greek simply will not yield to the thought that Jesus' coming is after the working of satan. Neither had Paul any idea of such a thought.—Messiah's Advocate.

To be reliable is ofttimes more to be desired than to be brilliant

EDITORIAL

During the week we have enjoyed visits from Brother Eugene Miller, of Camp Mead, and Sister Coy, of Salem, Ohio.

We are sorry to report that we have lost, for the time being, the fellowship of Brother Harold Baker, who has gone to Camp Sherman, Chillicothe, Ohio. He reports kindly and satisfactory treatment at the hands of the officials of the Camp.

THE BOOK, THE LAMB, THE SAINTS, AND THE DENOUEMENT

Revelation 5th Chapter

I. The Sealed Book

1. "Sealed with seven seals:" inaccessible knowledge (vs. 1; Dan. 12:4, 8; Isa. 29:10, 11; Rev. 10:4; Mark 13:32; Acts 1:6, 7).

2. "Written within and on the outside": full of information: the writing "within" referring to things ecclesiastical; the "outside" having to do with things political (vs. 1; Ezek. 2:9, 10; Rev. 11:2; 21:27; 22:15; 2 Cor. 5:6).

II. The Slain Lamb

1. Lamb (Greek, "Little Lamb"), diminutive (vss. 6, 9, 12; Isa. 53:7; Matt. 12:20).

2. Lion-like, with seven eyes and seven spirits: fulness of perception and aggressive power (Isa. 11:1-3).

III. The Singing Saints

1. Weeping saints take up their harps and bowls of incense and sing the new song (vs. 4; 4:1; vss. 8, 9; Psa. 33:2; 141:2; Rev. 8:3, 4).

2. Angels and the whole creation sing responsively, and the saints conclude the lyre with "Amen" (vss. 1-14; Rom. 8).

IV. The Denouement

1. With lion-like strength Christ redeems the saints, inaugurates their reign, and fills the earth with his praise by opening the seven seals. Will the Futurist please wait until the seals are opened before these results obtain? (vss. 8, 10; Eph. 16:15; Eph. 1:7).

COMMUNICATIONS

Dear Brother Huggins:

Just a few lines to let you know of my welfare and to tell you how much I miss your splendid sermons each Sunday morning. I can truly sympathize with dear Sister Wood in her isolation and in her desire to hear the word of God preached; but the weekly visits of The Restitution help a great deal. I have enjoyed it so much this winter.

Mother sent me quite a number of the "Bible Lesson" tracts, which I distribued among the ministers here. One set I kept myself, and as I found a dear old lady who was willing to read them through with me, she and I spent three evenings a week looking up the references and discussing the lesson. I am so glad to have found her, for she believes much as we do; and I am hoping her eyes will be further opened to other truths.

My work has been along the usual lines that I have always pursued, and I am enjoying it although I miss the companionship of my mother very much indeed, and hope we may soon be together again. The Lord will be here in a short time, and then there shall be no more partings, and our loved ones shall ever be with us.

I was sorry to learn that you had not been well and hope you will guard your health, for without it we can do very little. With Christian love to you and yours, I am,

Your sister in the one hope,

Vira McIlrath.

A few words to The Restitution. First I would like to know the present address of Brother James Delozier, who some time last year moved from Texas to somewhere in Arkansas.

Well, dear brethren and sisters, I am laboring on the farm, preaching somewhere every Sunday. I am anxious to get out in the field in regular ministerial work. When I think of the great time of trouble that now pervades the whole world, and of the signs of Christ's coming, it makes me think we should do our best to get the truth before all the people that we can. We are living in perilous times. The latter day signs are fast fulfilling. The Gentile times are fast closing, and the coming of the great King draws near when he will occupy David's throne that has so long been vacant. What a glorious day is soon coming when the beloved of God that sleep in the mighty deep shall live on this earth once more. Brethren and sister, will we be ready to stand before the Son of Man, and be associated with him in the great work of the next age, when all nations are to be blesssed through Abraham's seed.

Many may read these few lines whose faces I have never seen; but I write with the hope of seeing them in the sweet by and bye, in the kingdom of God, in that Edenic home, where the tree of life will bear its glorious fruit, and where sickness, sorrow, pain, and death will never come.

Owen Jones, Reczl, Okla.

EXPLANATION WANTED

By S. Roxana Wince

A dear sister writes: "I notice your urgent appeal to The Restitution for money for a printing press, cutting machine etc., so thought I would just write you a few lines to see what it all meant, as I cannot seem to understand. I supposed when we got the Linotype machine we were all fixed in good shape. I am not up on printing necessities of course; so that is the reason I am all at sea and write to you for an explanation as I suppose you know all about these things. We like to know what we are about when we contribute to anything and as you seem to be the leader in this move you are the one to ask."

No, my dear sister, I do not know all about printer's necessities, but I do know that some other things besides a Linotype are needed. I knew when we got the Linotype that we also needed a printing press, and would gladly have gone on with my part of the work to secure it at that time had our dear Editor thought it wise to do so. I do not know just why we need the press, but Brother Griffiths knows and will tell you, and other dear ones, who like you, want to know what it all means." He is a devoted Christian, and is gladly giving his time, his talents his strength and his means, to keep our paper alive, and to make it what we so much want it to be, an instrument in God's hands for the saving of men.

He says in a late letter: "I have every confidence that we shall have the money required because it is needed for God's work, and I am hopeful of prayers being fulfilled when they are for something that will glorify God."

Even in this awful war that we would fain see come to an end, God hears and answers prayers when things must be done to fulfill his word. The time had come for Jerusalem to be taken from the hands of the Turks, that it might shake itself from the dust and "awake and sing." General Allenby was told that "it would require a million men to make the capture," but he had not forgotten "there was the Lord," who "saves not by many or by few," and he knelt and prayed, and besieged the city with the men he had, confident that God would give him the victory as he so wonderfully did.

Another general, whose name I cannot recall, in a time of great and appaling danger on the west front knelt and prayed, and the tide of battle turned against the terrible Huns. And so it was with Lieutenant Colonel Dalzell Walton, who commanded the 8th Battalion Royal Iniskillen Fusiliers in France in April, 1916. He was badly gassed in that very month, but seeing the gas cloud coming, turned his face toward Jerusalem and prayed that the gas might be turned back on the Germans. His prayer was almost instantaneously answered, for the wind changed and the Germans were caught in their own trap, and so many were asphyxiated that no attack was made! I love to read such incidents as these, for they serve to strengthen my faith that God is at the helm in all the affairs of men, and will see to it in his own time and way.

"That girded right with holy might Shall overthrow the wrong."

I think if these British and Scotch commanders can look for God in the storm of battle, confident that he will hear and answer, why should not we, who are in a nobler grander fight, except to be heard and answered.

Well may Brother Griffiths be "confident that we shall have the money required." For a thousand miles as the crow flies in British Columbia stretch inexhaustible mines of gold and silver. What think you of that? Is God's bank going to break? Surely not, he is able to foot all bills, for work done for him, and he will do it, never fear.

He can foot all our debts, care for all worthy charities and see that all our earnest efforts to send out the gospel message are successfully carried on.

"ONE SHALL BE TAKEN AND THE OTHER LEFT"

Oh the anguish and despair of the ones who are left! How bitterly they will regret the neglected opportunities and duties of their high calling! Saving faith must be srong enough to change the whole life of the individual; strong enough to create a chasm between him and the world; strong enough to make him feel separated from, and with but very little in common with, it; strong enough to change his daily manners and conversation so as to cause him to be pointed out as a peculiar person; strong enough to gradually change his whole mind and being, so that in time he will actually come to "hate the things he once loved, and love the things he once hated."

Dear ones, I wonder what proportion of those who have started out so bravely in the race for eternal life will reach the goal; How many will be found among the overcomers, for we know that only such will be taken; all others will be left. Belief of the gospel, and obedience by baptism are but the first steps in the race for eternal life. Many after baptism settle back in fancied security, thinking God requires no further effort or sacrifice, and so live out their lives in no way different, separate, or distinct, from the world around them.

Dear reader let us visit one of our country church gatherings, and I will try to show you what I mean. This church that we are visiting was organized some years ago by Brother Adams, or some other dear brother, and for a time the members exhibited much enthusiasm. There are thirty members on the church book, but only twenty are present. That the weather looks a little threatening, and made it a bit sloppy, is considered sufficient excuse by the absent ones for setting aside the Lord's command to "neglect not the assembling of ourselves together."

The good old elder, whose duty is to open and conduct the simple service, waited for the tardy ones a few minutes past the usual hour for starting, and then with an expression of patient sorrow on his face, gives out the opening hymn. No doubt he is thinking that if the object of meeting had been a dance, or some popular social function, little rain or mud would not have kept them away.

After the opening hymn, the elder proceeds with the lesson, but not being gifted with eloquence, or fitted for public effort, and receiving little or no response or signs of support and encouragement from his congregation, the exercises are a trifle dull. After the lesson, opportunity is offered for questions or remarks, and one brother, and one sister, respond with questions, which are correctly answered by the elder. The remainder of the congregation manifests no interest, and asks no questions; and they heave a deep sigh of relief when the closing hymn is given out.

After dismissal the congregation divided into little groups and engaged in animated conversation one group is discussing the weather conditions and crop prospects; another principally composed of sisters, are going over latest methods in Red Cross work, and ladies aid activities. All are now alert, animated, and eager to express an opinion. In a quiet corner of the room sits the aged elder, and with him one brother and one sister: they are earnestly discussing the signs of the times, and the prospects of the soon coming of the Lord. For them no other theme can take the place of this. During this hour of worship these three have no room in their thoughts for cattle, horses, pigs, or crops, nor for any worldly theme with which the others are absorbed.

The above pen picture is a faithful one of many churches whose members claim to be God's people, and expect to rise to meet him when he comes; but I very much fear that the ten who were absent because of the slightly unpleasant weather, have allowed their love of God and his purpose to grow cold, and will be found among those who are left.

I am also very much afraid that those brothers and sisters who are dumb when the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, are discussed, but who have an eloquent flow of language when crops, or cattle, hogs, or horses, business, social functions, or worldly pleasures, are the theme; I am afraid such will be left. Oh I hope not, for there are so many such, who think they stand among the overcomers. But dear ones, I am afraid for them, and I will tell you why.

Speaking of this very class the spirit says: "Because ye are neither hot nor cold, but lukewarm, I will spue thee out of my mouth." Again, "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." Therefore if the heart belongs to God, and is full of love for him and his purpose, the conversation will turn to those themes, as surely as the needle to the pole; and as only those whose heart belongs to God and is full of his purpose, will be taken, I fear that many who rest in fancied security will, when too late, hear a voice saying, "I know you not."

Memory Verses: Micah 6:8; Titus 2:13, 14

Golden Text: Prov. 4:1-3

Be The Fellow That Your Mother Thinks You Are

While walking down a crowded city street the other day,
I heard a little urchin to a comrade turn and say:
"Say Jimmie, don't yer know I'd be happy as a clam,
If I only was de feller dat me mudder t'inks I am.
She t'inks I am a wonder, and knows her little lad
Would never mix wit' nothin' dat was ugly, mean or bad,
I often sit and t'ink how nice t'would be—gee whiz,
If a feller was de feller dat his mudder t'inks he is."
So, folks, be yours a life of toil or undiluted joy,
You still can learn a lesson from the small, unlettered boy;
Don't try to be an earthly saint, with eyes fixed on a star—
Just try to be the fellow that your mother thinks you are.—Sel.

Mother's Day

Sunday, May 12th, is what is known as "Mother's Day," when men and women, girls and boys, pay a silent tribute to their mothers by wearing a carnation. There is a couplet that runs:

"For mothers living, blossoms bright,
For mothers memory, blossoms white."

For "mothers living" a carnation, blood color, is said to be correct. The second line needs no explanation. To me the idea of a day being specially set apart in honor of mothers, is most appropriate. It first was suggested by Anna Jarvis, of Philadelphia. I trust that some day a day will be set apart in father's honor, for we must admit that he too, poor fellow, is of some use in the world.

The Old Folks at Home

Dr. Aikman, in his "Life at Home," urges children not to forget the old folks at home. He says: "There is always a liability, when sons and daughters have gone away from the home of their childhood and have formed homes of their own, gradually to lose the old attachments and cease to pay those attentions to their parents which were so easy and natural in the olden time New associations, new thoughts, new cares, all come in, filling the mind and the heart and, if special pains be not taken, they crowd out the old love. This never ought to be. You should remember that the change is with you, and not with those you left behind. You have everything new, much that is attractive in the present and bright in the future, their hearts cling to the past; they have most in memory. When you went away from home, you knew not and never will know till you experience it, what it cost them to give you up, what a vacancy you left behind. They have not, if you have, any new loves to take the place of the old. Do not then, heartlessly deprive them of what you still can give of attention and love.

Visit your parents. If you live in the same place, let your steps be, perhaps daily, a familiar one in the old home; if you are miles away, make it your business to go to them. In this matter do not regard time or expense; the one is well spent and the other will be fuily, a hundred fold repaid. When some day the word reaches you, flashed over the telegraph, that father or mother has gone, you will not think them much, those hours of travel that last bore you to their side.

Write to your parents. I have known father and mother to wait with sick hearts through weary months, longing that some word might reach them from an absent son. They have watched in mails till in despair they have ceased to expect any more; and while they may not have the grief of a great bereavement, they have what almost is as bad the bitter consciousness that they are not in mind enough to even call out a few poor lines from one whose infancy and early years they watched with sleepless eyes. Sons are often guilty of this crime—I can not call it less—from sheer neglect or indolence. While an hour, perhaps a few minutes, would suffice to write a letter which would give unspeakable satisfaction, they let months and even years slip away in utter indifference to all the pain they are causing. Oh. how full is many a mother's heart of sorrow and foreboding, when just a few words from an absent son would fill it with joy and praise! Such indifference or neglect is shameful and wicked. One need not wonder that sons guilty of it are not prospered, they wait in vain for those arms of fortune which will send them home, as they dream, to surprise the old neighborhood with their wealth. Their thoughtlessness has been productive only of disaster.

Keep up your intercourse with father and mother; do not deem it sufficient to write when something important is to be told: do not say, "no news is good news." If it be but a few lines, write them; write if it be only to say, "I am well;" if it be only to send the salutation that says they "dear," or the farewell that tells them that you are "affectionate" still. The little messages shall be like caskets of jewels, and the tears that fall fondly over them will be treasures for you. Say, with a warm hearted son:

"The hills may tower, the waves may rise,
And roll between my home and me;
Yet shall my quenchless memories
Turn with undying love to thee."

The garden of life holds one flower more precious than all the rest. It grows without tending, blooms all the year round, and never dies. We call it

Mother Love

Mother is a most wonderful person; other folks can love you, but only your mother understands. She works for you, looks out for you, loves you, forgives you anything you may do, understands you. The only bad thing she ever does to you is to die and leave you.

Mothers

Mothers live for their children, make self-sacrifices for them, and manifest their tenderness and love so freely that the name mother is the sweetest word in language. And yet son, aged and youthful, know but little of the anxiety, the sleepless nights and painful solitude which their mothers have spent over their thoughtless waywardness. Those loving hearts go down to their graves with those hours of secret agony untold. As the mother watches by night, or prays in the privacy of her closet, she weighs well the words which she will address to her son in order to lead him to a manhood of honor and usefulness. She will not tell him all the griefs and deadly fears which beset her heart and mind. She warns him with trembling lest she may say over much. She tries to charm him with cheery love while her heart is bleeding. No worthy and successful man ever yet knew the breadth and depth of the great obligation which he is under to the mother who guided his heedless steps at the time when his character and purity were so narrowly balanced against a course of vice and ignominy. Let the dutiful son do his utmost to smooth his mother's pathway. Let him obey as implicitly as he can her wishes and advice. Let him omit nothing that will give her peace, rest, and happiness; and yet he will part from her at the tomb with the debt to her not half discharged.

"Blessed art thou among women" (Luke 1:28).

Be The Man God Would Have You Be

Patient with others, but strict with myself;
Loving to give, and refusing all pelf;
Doing the right, though it brings me no fame;
Honoring Christ, because signed with his name;
Helping the downcast, and cheering the sad;
Living our creed, till it makes the world glad;
Fond of our work, of our friends, of our land;
Walking by faith, daily led by God's hand;
This is the pathway the saints all have trod;
This is the life hid with Christ's life in God.

A Man

A man that is clean inside and outside; who neither looks up to the rich, nor down on the poor; who can lose without whining; who can be successful without bragging; considerate to women, children, and old people; who is too brave to lie; too generous to cheat, and too sensible to loaf; who takes his share of the world's goods with acknowledgment and thankfulness to God for providing them; and without coveteusness lets others have their own share—this is the ideal conception of a true gentleman.

Mother

Whose love can equal the love of a mother;
  Whose the devotion so loyal and true!
Who suffers so much with such joy for another
  Who works with such pleasure as mother for you!
You hail with delight the friendship of others,
  You revel in love of the sweetheart you won;
Yet, where do you find a friendship like mother's
Unbroken till death calls, and life's work is done.

Our Weekly Puzzle

Greatly desiring to see thee, being mindful of thy tears, that I may be filled with joy. When I recall to remembrance the unfeigned faith that is in thee, which dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice; and I am persuaded that in thee also."

Who wrote the above, and who was he desirious of seeing?

Can the names Lois and Eunice be found in any other part of the Bible?

Where can the above passage be found?

Answer next issue.

Answer to puzzle in last issue:

The passage was written by the apostle Paul unto the Church of God at Corinth.

"Christ crucified" was a "stumbling block" to the Jew because he claimed to be "the Christ, the Son of the living God." This would constitute him the Messiah of Israel, the "King of the Jews." The Jews rejected Christ as their Messiah, their King, and the fact that he died through crucifixion at their demand confirmed them in their disbelief of his claims.

"Christ crucified" was foolishness to the Greeks because they did not believe in Christ or his claims, they had no interest in him. hence there was no need of his crucifixion.

The passage can be found in 1 Cor. 1:23, 24).

Domestic Arithmetic

It is related in the St. Louis Globe-Democrat that Colonel J. Slocum Ridgley, in answering the toast, "To Mother," said:

"Let me tell you a 'mother' story

"In my youth, when I was teaching school in Siloam, I said one morning to a bright little fellow:

" 'Tommy, my boy, if a family consisting of a father, mother and six children should have a cherry pie for dinner, how much would each receive?"

" 'A seventh,' the little fellow answered.

" ' Carefully,' said I, 'Remember, there are eight people.'

" 'Yes, sir, I know,' said Tommy, 'but mother wouldn't take any for fear the others wouldn't have enough.' "—Selected.

WHAT IS COMING?

In order to answer the above question intelligently we must know something of present conditions. Each day brings us nearer that much prayed-for time. "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven." Yes, our hearts cry out, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly." We know that our heavenly Father has promised that when he shall send his Son from his right hand that the sleeping saints will be raised and the living saints will be changed (1 Thess.4:13-18). These words comforted the ancients so they do us.

Now this is just what the world is not looking for. The Allied powers are striving to establish a universal democracy and thereby bring about a world peace. This mistaken idea is causing the sacrifice of thousands of precious lives and the expenditure of billions of the treasures of the world. It seems now that it will continue until there will be but little left to fight for. With these terrible conditions before us we know that in the end the Lord's purpose will have its fulfilment. We may remain under these conditions until our faith is tried as gold is purified by the washing of water and the heat of the furnace. We know that Jehovah will care for his own if they are but faithful.

We see two classes now striving for the kingdom: one class is standing for the truth; the other is half hearted and conforming themselves to the present evil world. The latter class will be left to the tribulations of the age to come. Prophecy teaches that there is just before us the greatest time of trouble that the world has ever seen. This will embrace all that are left after Jesus has ransomed his saints. Are we justified in saying that there are evidences that this storm is fast gathering? The present will continue and grow until it will be said, "My spirit shall no longer strive with man, for that he also is flesh." When this edict goes forth the Lord will descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God. The redeemed saints will be taken into the secret chamber where the indignaion will not reach them. Since the world has done violence to the Holy Spirit it will no longer strive with them. When the body of Christ, the church, is removed the spirit will be with it. Then woe to the inhabitants of the world! This will usher in a time when Jehovah's face will be veiled.

If darkness now covers the land and gross darkness the people, what will then be the conditions? We are enlightened on this subject by a few evidences. There is in the future a famine, not for bread, but for the word of God. None will be able to interpret the word. Men will seek for death, and will not find it. Some will call for mountains and rocks to fall upon them and hide them from the face of him who sitteth upon the throne. What power will rule during this indignation period which will meet with utter destruction? The apostle John and others have written of an antichrist who was working in those days. They no doubt saw the working of the little horn of Daniel 7:8. This power belonged to the fourth beast, which was the Roman beast. Rome first existed as Pagan and then as Papal Rome. This power flourished as a political and ecclesiastical power until she was forced to yield her political phase. Since then she has been more or less fretful, desiring a voice among the nations of the world. During the latter years the Catholic power has received many favors from the world powers When the head of this power speaks the rulers of this world give an attentive ear. Every suggestion that has been voiced by the pope has met with a ready response. He is destined to become the leader of a mighty force whose ojbect will be to dominate the earth as a world power.

We ask our readers to study with care the second chapter of the Thessalonian letter. Herein the apostle lays bare this power and its purpose, In this chapter Paul is instructing the church concerning the coming of the Lord. He says: "Let no man deceive you by any means; for that day will not come except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition." The falling away and the revelation of the man of sin must occur before their hopes could be realized. The hope of this church was with the soon coming of the Lord. Paul's instruction was surely a revelation to them. The character of this chapter. Has this horn power fulfilled the prophman of sin is fully described in verse four of this ecy of the apostle? We think not. This same power has made war with the saints and prevailed against them. It is recorded (Dan. 7:26): "But the judgment will sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and destroy it." This prophecy was no doubt fulfilled when the pope was deprived of his temporal power over Italy, since which time he has been a prisoner in the Vatican. He has had an opportunity to reflect and plan.

Present conditions seem favorable for the ripening up of the future of this power. The present pope is a born diplomat and has come for a special purpose. In following Paul's revelation to the church we learn that the "mystery of iniquity doth already work." There are different conditions under which this iniquitous system works. First, it prevailed against the saints for a season. Second, was deprived of political power. Now without hindrance it can complete its plans. The political powers are seeking a universal democracy—an opportune time for the union of the ecclessiastical and political powers. When the saints are removed these two forces will be left. What are the indications today that the "mystery of iniquity" will prevail? First, the period of the apostacy of which Paul wrote has expired. We think present conditions prove it. Second, the coming of the Lord is at the door. This iniquitious system will embrace the two elements, viz., the political and religious. The federation of the churches is here with us. "The Ministerial Association" of our city declared this during the last winter. Doctrines were ignored and all declared that there was need of their forming a union. All adhere to the iniquitious doctrine of the Holy Trinity. This is in violation of the command, that, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me."

When the saints are removed there will be no faith on the earth. When this wicked one is revealed his workings will be satanic with all power and signs and lying wonders. This is because they received not the love of the truth, that they might be saved. This is the time when God will send them strong delusions that they should believe a lie. In our day the religious world is sending out delusions. They are preparing the world in which they live for the coming indignation. The old harlot and her daughters will reap what they have sown. Having sown to the flesh they will reap corruption. They will have attained their place among the forces of the earth but as Paul wrote, "Whom the Lord will consume or destroy with the brightness of his coming." The head of this system will find his place as described in 2 Thess. 2:4?

Let me, in conclusion, admonish those who have taken upon themselves the name of Jesus the Christ that we are living in perilious times. You must keep yourselves unspotted from the world. Now is no time to barter with the world's trade to lay up treasures on earth where the moth doth corrupt and thieves break through and steal. Accept Paul's admonition, "With food and raiment be content." The night has been long and dark. No voice save through his word has come to us. The prophetic word has furnished the only means for us to see the forbearance of our Father in heaven, and to know the future that he has provided for those who love him. This message has too often fallen upon deaf ears and they have turnaway and said, "Where is the promise of his comcontinue as they were from the beginning of creaing? for since the Fathers fell asleep all things tion."

A Biblical Defense

A man in St. Louis has presented as a claim for exemption from the draft law that he recently got married and, to support his plea, he quoted this passage from the Bible:

"When a man hath taken a new wife he shall not go out to war, neither shall be charged with any business; but he shall be freed at home for one year and he shall cheer up his wife which he hath taken" (Deut. 24:5).

VOLUME 70 CLEVELAND, O. MAY 21ST 1918 NUMBER 19

ISRAEL'S BLESSINGS

O Israel, once more from thy bondage set free
Art thou ready to welcome the glad jubilee?
Will thou worship thy Savior thy prophet and King?
When he cometh in triumph salvation to bring;
Will thou weep when beholding the scars in his hands?
When thou hast been gathered from far distant lands.

Art thou stiff-necked, perverse wilt thou be?
He will purge out the rebels once more from thee;
And thou once again shall pass under the rod,
And know 'tis the hand of thy Father's God;
Thy waiting shall be ended, thy sorrows all gone,
Thou shalt worship thy Savior, God's only Son.

He will rule thee in justice, thy oppressor be slain;
Thy fetters and chains shall not gall thee again;
Living waters from the throne of thy God shall then flow;
And the tree of life by the river shall grow;
Forests and fields fruit in abundance shall yield;
Flocks shall dwell safely in thy open field.

Kings shall bow in subjection, and come unto thee,
When thy King reigns forever o'er land and o'er sea;
The fig tree and vine shall flourish once more;
And the rose of Sharon shall grow by the door;
'Neath arbors laden with fruit ripe and rare,
Thou shalt repose free from sorrow and care.

Then the God of salvatioon shall be ever at hand;
Peace and prosperity shall cover the land,
Prophets and patriarchs and the righteous of old,
More precious to God than silver and gold;
Shall awake from their slumber, to eternal life,
Relieved from all sorrow affliction and strife.

Then the earth forever from the curse made free,
The glorious garden of thy God shall be;
Then hasten the day, O Lord may it come!
When thy chosen are called to their glad Eden home;
Then all shall be happy forever and aye;
And praise thee their Savior through endless day.

SERVING ONE ANOTHER

Synopsis of Address Sunday Evening April 28 1918
By Brother Alldridge

"I am among you as one that serveth" (Luke 22:27).

It is beyond human power to accurately analyse human character as displayed by our words and actions. The motive and secret thoughts lying behind them are known only to God. For "the heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked, who can know it? I the Lord search the heart, I try the reins, even to give every man according to his ways and according to the fruit of his doings" (Jer. 17:9, 10). Hence Solomon says, "He that is of a proud heart stirreth up strife; but he that putteth his trust in the Lord shall be made fat. He that trusteth his own heart is a fool; but whoso walketh wisely, he shall be delivered" (Prov. 28:25, 27). There are many things the Lord hates. God hates every false way (Psa. 119:104). God hates vain thoughts (Psa. 119:113). God hates and abhors lying (Psa. 119:163).

Solomon in Prov. 16:19 gives us a compendious statement as to just what God abhors and hates: "These six things doth the Lord hate: yea, seven are an abomination unto him (that is, he hates the six but the sevent is an abomination):

"A proud look, a lying tongue, and hands that shed innocent blood, an heart that deviseth wicked imaginations, feet that be swift in running to mischief, a false witness that speaketh lies, and he that soweth discord among brethren."

Going back to the context of our text this singular and startling fact with regard to the apostles, Christ's own immediate friends and brethren, presents itself: "Which of them should be accounted the greatest," and "which of them should betray his Master"? "And they began to enquire among themselves which of them it was that should do this thing." "And there was also a strife among them, which of them should be accounted the greatest."

Beloved, in every religions community these conditions exist: Those who betray the brethren, and those who are seeking fame, notoriety, and position. James expresses this clearly: "From whence come wars and fightings among you? come they not hence. even of your lusts that war in your members?" (James 4:1). If among God's people the spirit of humility abounds, the opposite spirit of betrayal and unlawful ambition to achieve selfish ends cannot and will not intrude. "Humble yourselves in the sight of the Lord, and he shall lift you up. Speak not evil one of another, brethren" (James 4:10). "Better it is to be of an humble spirit with the lowly, than to divide the spoil with the proud" (Prov. 16:19). Whosoever therefore shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. 18:4). "For whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased: and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted" (Luke 14:11).

How did Jesus seek to eliminate this condition of spirit existing among his apostles? By precept? of so, it had failed; for he had been preaching to them and explaining the laws of his kingdom for over three years. What remedy did he use? He used the remedy of his own sweet and humble conduct (John 13:12-17). Is there any service more menial than this? Jesus took the lowest position of all, a servant of servants. "And whosoever of you will be the chiefest, shall be servant of all, for even the Son of Man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many" (Mark 10:44, 45).

Moses saw him in type (Exod. 21:5, 6; Psa.40:5, 6). Jesus entered into covenant with God as a servant, a bonded slave. A servant never exercises his own will; he knows only the will of his master or employer. "Jesus saith unto them, My meat is to do the will of him that sent me, and to finish his work" (John 4:34). Again, "For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me" (John 6:38).

Paul makes this clear in Phil. 2:7, 8: "But made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of man; and being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross." Only slaves and criminals of the worst character died upon the cross.

Beloved, it is hard when we are considered of little importance in the church, and are assigned the most insignificant service, and often no service at all. But listen: "Who, when he was reviled reviled not again; when he suffered he threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously" (1 Pet. 2:23). How many of us possessing as Jesus did, an accurate knowldge of the honor, power, and glory invested in us by God himself, as ruler of this world, could condescend to fill the office of slave, washing one another's feet? Jesus did, "But I am a worm and no man; a reproach of men, and despised of the people" (Isa. 22:6). "He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief; and we hid as it were our faces from him; he was despised and we esteemed him not" (Isa. 53:3). Read Col. 1:15-19, and remember that this wonderful man Jesus, was in character the express image of his Father, and the creator of everything pertaining to the new creation, who could in the days of his flesh say as no other man could say with truth, "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father" (John 14:9). We forget that this same Jesus who was the servant of servants was able and did rebuke the winds and the sea; and there was a great calm, that even men marvelled asking "what manner of man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey him!"

In our enthusiasm we often testify, "I am thankful that I chose the Lord, and made him my portion"; that would be taking the place of a servant indeed; but did you choose him? "Nay, rather Jesus chose us, 'Ye have not chosen me, but I have chosen you, and ordained you that ye should go and bring forth fruit, and that your fruit should remain, that whatsoever ye shall ask of the Father in my name, he may give it you. These things I command you that ye love one another" (John 15:16 17).

Beloved, if this thought would take hold of us, that Christ is serving us, what a different spirit would take hold and fill us! How we would delight to serve and not be served! I wonder how often this thought was in Jesus' mind? "As the Father has loved me, so have I loved you; continue in my love" (John 15:9). Again, "Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us; and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren" (1 John 3:16).

How can we serve one another?

First- In cheerfully choosing to fulfill the duties of the most lowly offices.

The streets were muddy and the crossing was wide,
The water rushed past on either side,
The wind whistled by with a terrible moan,
As I wearily wended my way alone.
As I crossed the street I chanced to meet
A little boy in the arms of a wee toddling lass,
"Isn't he heavy, my dear little mother?"
"Oh no sir" she replied, "why he's my baby brother."
Your burden may be heavy, your way may be long,
The winds of adversity, bitter and strong,
But your way will seem bright if we love one another,
And our burden will be light if we carry our brother.

Second—In manifesting great lowliness of spirit and humility of bearing. "I therefore, the prisoner of the Lord, beseech you that ye walk worthy of the vocation wherewith ye are called, with all lowliness, and meekness, with longsuffering, forbearing one another in love; endeavoring to keep the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace" (Eph. 4:1-3). "Let nothing be done through strife or vain glory, but in lowliness of mind let each esteem other better than themselves" (Phil. 2:3). "Likewise, ye younger, submit yourselves unto the elder; yea, all of you be subject one to another and be clothed with humility; for God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble" (1 Pet. 5:5).

Third—In laying ourselves out for the good of others. Let self-sacrifice be the rule of our existence. "And I will very gladly spend and be spent for you, though the more abundantly I love you, the less I be loved" (2 Cor. 12:15). Beloved, this is hard service, but we must do it to win as a servant.

Fourth— Gladly bearing injustice rather than break the peace, avenge ourselves or grieve others. "For this is thankworthy, if a man for conscience toward God endure grief, suffering wrongfully. For what glory is it, if when ye be buffeted for your faults ye shall take it patiently? but if when ye do well, and suffer for it, ye take it patiently, this is aceptable with God" (1 Pet. 2:19, 20).

Beloved, the joy of doing good brings more happiness to me than anything else in this life. I would rather serve than be served. I would rather take your hand and see the love of God beaming forth from your eyes and as you warmly grasp mine and say, "Brother Alldridge, God bless you," than any other reward you could bestow.

"God Bless you."
O how cheery
This tender speech doth steal
Unto our hearts grown weary
God's deep love to reveal.

"God Bless you."
In affliction,
In shadow and in shine,
Its constant benediction
Shall beat this heart of mine.

"God Bless you."
And possess you!
O message potent sweet,
God bless you and God bless you
Soft doth the heart repeat.
I cannot find a truer word,
Nor fonder to caress you,
Nor song, nor poem I have heard
Is sweeter than "God bless you."

A COMMENTARY ON THE APOCALYPSE

Chapter One

I was in the spirit on the Lord's day and heard behind me a great voice, as of a trumpet (vs. 10).

"I was in the spirit." The spirit took possession of John, putting him in a condition so that he could see whatever the spirit willed him to see. For instance, the seven golden candlesticks, and the seven stars, which had no substance in fact; they were like the symbolic beasts, made to appear for the purpose of the lesson to be taught. They were only symbols, like the metallic image of Dan. 2. In John's natural conditions he could not see such things.

"On the Lord's day." Sabbatarians claim this was Saturday, the Sabbath day; other say it is "the day of the Lord," which is future, and that John was carried forward by the spirit into that day. The most reasonable claim is that it refers to the first day of the week, the day of Christ's resurection. It was so understood by the early Christians.

Saying, I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last: and, What thou seest write in a book, and send it unto the seven churches which are in Asia: unto Ephesus, and unto Smyrna, and unto Pergamos, and unto Thyatira, and unto Sardis, and unto Philadelphia, and unto Laodicea (vs. 11).

"Alpha and Omega, the first and the last, is supposed to be an interpolation as it is omitted in the Revised Version and also in the Diaglott.

Now the question presents itself as to why seven churches are addressed, and no more, when there were others in existence at that time.

First, the book is largely constructed by sevens.

Second, the symbolism of the number seven is fulness and completeness. And this book is largely symbolic.

And I turned to see the voice that spake with me. And being turned, I saw seven golden candlesticks (vs. 12).

Here again we have the symbol seven; gold symbolizing purity. The candlestick is a light bearer, fit symbol of the church of Christ, the light of the world. "I am come a light into the world, that whosoever believeth on me should not abide in darkness" (John 12:46).

And in the midst of the seven candlesticks one like the Son of Man clothed with a garment down to the feet, and girt about the paps with a golden girdle (vs. 13).

This picture reveals the Son of Man in the midst of the candlesticks, seeing and knowing everything that is going on among them. His title "Son of Man," is the same as in Dan. 7:13, where he comes with clouds to the Ancient of Days; and there is given him "dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him." "And thou O tower of the flock, the stronghold of the daughter of Zion, until thee shall it come, even the first dominion; the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem." (Micah 4:8). The first dominion was given to Adam, but he lost it by disobedience; and it is to be given ot Christ on account of his obedience.

The Master says: "Labor not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of Man shall give unto you: for him hath God the Father sealed" (John 6:27). In verse 51 he says, "And the bread that I will give is my flesh, which I will give for the life of the world." In the light of this testimony I would remark that no one but this one of our race could redeem us from the condemnation that came by Adam's transgression. "For as in Adam all die; so in Christ shall all be made alive. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead" (1 Cor.15:21, 22).

His head and his hair were white like wool, as white as snow; and his eyes were like a flame of fire (vs. 14).

The appearance here of the Son of Man is like that of the Ancient of Days, "whose garment was white as snow, and the hair of his head like the pure wool" (Dan. 7:9). The scene is judicial. "The Father judgeth no man, but hath committed all judgment unto the Son." Eyes like a flame of fire is one of the divine attributes given to the Son of Man by which he has the wisdom and the knowledge necessary for his official position as judge of man.

And his feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace; and his voice as the sound of many waters (vs. 15).

"His feet like unto fine brass, as if they burned in a furnace." Compare Ezekiel 1:7. "And they (the feet of the living creatures) sparkled like the color of burning brass." The purity of his feet, like the metal that is purified in the furnace, is the lesson taught here. The feet of his brethren are purified in the furnace of affliction. How applicable to Christ is the Scripture: "How beautiful upon the mountains are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace . . . . . that saith unto Zion, Thy God reigneth" (Isa. 52: 7).

"His voice as the sound of many waters." Compare Ezekiel 43:2: "And behold the glory of the God of Israel came from the east: and the sound of his voice was like the sound of many waters: and the earth shined with his glory." The comparison of the voice to the roar of the ocean is often referred to in the Scriptures (Rev. 14:2; 19:6).

> And he had in his right hand seven stars: and out of his mouth went a sharp two-edged sword: and his countenance was as the sun shineth in his strength (vs. 16).

"And he had in right hand seven stars." The stars are the symbols of the angels or elders of the seven churches; and being in his right hand indicates that he has control of them. The sword out of his mouth is the word of God. "And take the helmet of salvation, and the sword of the spirit, which is the word of God" (Eph. 6:17).

The symbolism of this verse is grand and lofty, ending with his countenance compared to the sun in its noon-day strength. Although he had the meekness of a lamb, in strength he is the Lion of the tribe of Judah.

> And when I saw him, I fell at his feet. And he laid his right hand upon me, saying, Fear not; I am the first and the last (vs. 17).

John was overcome by the glory of the scene. Christ was so changed from his former appearance, that it caused John to fall as dead. Daniel had an experience somewhat similar to John's when the angel Gabriel appeared to him, "And when he came I was afraid, and fell upon my face" (Dan. 8:17). Again, "And I Daniel fainted, and was sick certain days; afterward I rose up and did the king's business" (verse 27).

> I am he that liveth, and was dead; and behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and of death (vs. 18).

"I am he that liveth, and was dead." This is the most triumphant exclamation that can possibly be made; the most far reaching in its effects: the salvation of the human race. The life to which he had attained is everlasting; and more than that, he has the keys of hell (hades) and of death. He is the true bearer of the keys with which he will unlock the prison doors and let the prisoners go free.

When contemplating the exaltation of Jesus Christ, we should never forget that it cost him his life; as said the prophet Isaiah: "He poured out his soul unto death: and was numbered with the transgressors" (ch. 53:12). "He put away sin by the sacrifice of himself" (Heb. 9:26). "By death he destroyed him that hath the power of death; that is the devil" (Heb. 2:14).

> Write the things which thou hast seen, and the things which are, and the things which shall be hereafter (vs. 19).

John was to write the past, the present, and the future of the vision, or the prophecy. He was in that spiritual condition called "in the spirit," and he had heard a great voice that directed him to write to the seven churches. Now he sees the Son of Man risen from the dead in triumph and glory. The future are events yet to be revealed.

> The mystery of the seven stars which thou sawest in my right hand, and the seven golden candlesticks: The seven stars are the angels of the seven churches: and the seven candlesticks are the seven churches (vs. 20).

The symbol is rapt in mystery until its meaning is revealed, for there is a likeness between the symbol and the thing symbolized. For instance, the star radiates light, and so does the angels of the churches. The candlestick elevates, holds up the light, and so does the Christian church. "Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid" (Matt. 5:14).

GO FORWARD

To Sister Susan Howard

A long time ago I wrote to Brother S. H. Thomas and asked if it was a weakness of the flesh to strongly desire the approval of the brethren. This is his answer: "Yes, but it is a weakness which we all possess in a greater or lesser degree. It is God who gave us all our talents, whether one or many; therefore all the praise and glory belongs to him. Nevertheless, let us not withhold merited praise from others who are striving to do their duty." And so I want to say to you that, although hundreds of miles divide us, your quiet courage in the midst of great trials, your abiding trust in God, has encouraged me and strengthened my weakness. We little know what our influence is and what it may be, either for or against God. What a solemn thought: for or against the Most High God! I speak of the enlightened ones. They are either working with God or against him. See Matt. 12:30, "He that is not with me is against me: and he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad." These are Christ's own words. There is no middle ground, neither can we sow to the flesh and reap of the spirit in the age to come. There is no such hope between the lids of the Bible. You speak of some whose faith has helped you to persevere. How we praise God that there is a little flock whose love and devotion to the truth as it is in Christ Jesus lifts up and encourages us who are weak to go forward, and whose love and brotherly kindness smooth and soften the rough and thorny way.

For years the letters of Brother S. H. Thomas have held up and strengthened me, and the dear brethren in Cleveland who are doing so much for us all—working without money and without price, that we may have a light to guide us in the dense darkness that is over the world. They certainly deserve our thanks and prayers, and to know that we appreciate their efforts in our behalf. The ecclesia in Brooklyn—night and day our prayers arise that God may cause them to abound in love, joy and faith. That they may be filled with the peace that passeth all understanding. Paul thinking of the good examples of faith spoke of some, then said time forbade mention of all the elect. So it is today—time and space would fail us to speak of those in Nebraska, in Indiana, all over our land who are gathering in with Jesus.

For many days these things have been in my mind until I could not forbear writing. Look at Israel at the Red Sea. On either side the steep and rocky cliffs: behind the mighty army of Pharaoh; in front the darkness and treacherous sea. What was the word of God to them? "Speak to the children of Israel that they go forward." What a trial of faith! Has such an one ever come to us? I think not. What happened? When they obeyed, lo! the waters opened and were rolled aside and the hosts of Israel went through on dry land; not a sandal was moist.

Look again at three faithful ones of God. Before them the fiery furnace, heated seven times hotter than its wont; on either side and behind the most mighty men of that great heathen monarch. The three chosen ones knew that they must go forward, if they remained true to God, even into the fiery furnace. What met them there? Indescribable burning and suffering? No: one clothed with light from God's throne walked with them in the midst of the flame and not even the smell of fire came upon their clothes.

Look again towards the east. See the Son of God, all around him the raging mob with thorns and lashes, before him Calvary and the cross. He is only listening to that mighty cry of a lost and perishing world, that cry was heard by all others. "Go forward! Oh go forward and redeem us by thy blood!" and so bearing all our sin and sorrow and shame he goes forward to the cross. His great heart broke with its heavy load and in his death he carried our sins into the land of forgetfulness in that rock-hewn tomb. Oh shame that any trial, any burden, would keep us from going forward in his service. Paul said, "I know that in every city bonds and persecutions await me." Yet he moved steadily forward saying, "I can do all things through Christ who strengthens me." "Go teach all the nations" was the last great command of their departing Lord to his disciples. We find them going forward with great joy, although they knew they must seal their testimony with their blood. These things are written for our admonition and greatly do they help us to go forward in the strait and narrow way. Not less do these disciples of today who are steadily going forward with their faces towards Jerusalem, toiling on through evil report and good report, through trials by the way, buffetted by foes without and within, in perils among false brethren—not less, I say, does their example of steadfastness strengthen us of today who are weak. "How beautiful are the feet of them that preach the gospel of peace and bring glad tidings of good things." Behold how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity. It is as the dew of Hermon and as the dew that descended upon the mountain of Zion; for there the Lord commanded the blessing, even life forever more." And this is the promise to those who go forward, whatever betide, walking in love, love to God and love for the children of God.

I am quoting now from my daily reading: "We glory in tribulation also: knowing that tribulation worketh patience, and patience experience, and experience hope." We have need of patience, and that can be gained only by trials. We have need of faith, and that can only be developed by necessities. We have need of experience for our future work, which can be gained only by such experience which permit us to be touched with a feeling of the infirmities and difficulties and trials of those about us.

Go forward in faith and love.

REASONS FOR A PRESS BEING REQUIRED

In our last issue Sister Wince brought to our notice the fact that a sister had written to her for information why a printing press was needed For the benefit of any brother or sister who is not familiar with the printing business, we will briefly state why a press is necessary to place The Restitution on a self-supporting basis.

As everyone knows, we secured a Lynotype machine in September, 1916, and the work that it does is simply setting the type. It is practically a mechanical compositor, but it does the work in only a fraction of the time a man can do it by hand, and at a considerably less cost.

When the paper is all set we then have to send the type we have produced to a printer, which is our largest item of expenditure. He naturally must receive a profit for himself, also on the labor he hires and on the paper he buys to print on. By owning a press ourselves we save all these profits; and as our personal labor is partly donated, we can thus save a considerable amount.

Now when we have printed our paper it is necessary to fold, stitch, and cut it; therefore the extra machinery is needed to complete our work; and as soon as we are able to obtain all these things The Restitution will be perfectly independent, and its appearance in the homes where it is so much looked for, will be assured until the coming of the Lord.

We are living in terrible times now. "But evil men and seducers shall wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived" (2 Tim. 3:13); so let us try and spread the glorious truth as much as is in our power, while we have our health and strength, for "the night cometh when no man can work" (John 9:4). Beloved, let us all remember Christ's injunction, "Occupy till I come." The thought that we are privileged to work for him should inspire us to action, for with Paul we can say: "For I reckon that the sufferings of this present time are not worthy to be compared with the glory which shall be revealed in us" (Rom. 8:18). So let us not only get these things which are required to make our paper secure, but let every one who is able write for it also, and thus help those who are seeking spiritual food, and thereby as a body we may glorify God.

Sister Wince's devotion to this work is well known to all our readers, so in conclusion we commend to them her articles on the subject, and have implicit faith that God will prosper our efforts. to serve him.

A. E. Griffiths.

Physically it is not what we eat but what is digested that gives strength. The same truth holds good in relation to Bible reading and the spiritual life.

One live kernel of wheat contains more of promise than the mightest fallen oak.

He who expects the greatest favors is often least willing to grant them to others.

EDITORIAL

This week we have had appreciated visits from Brother Ashford Lehman, of Salem, O., Brother and Sister Ernest Blyth, of Columbus, O., and Sister Daisy Guest, of New York.

During the week Brother and Sister George B. Alldridge were plunged into grief by the sudden death of their youngest son. They have the prayers and sympathy of every brother and sister in the city, and their two daughters Sister Nellie Alldridge and Sister H. H. Hawkins, we do not forget to bear up before a loving God and sympathizing Savior.

COMMUNICATIONS

Dear Brother Huggins:

Find enclosed $5.00 for which send me The Restitution another year. The other three dollars are to help Auntie Wince to get her printing press, cutting, stitching, and folding machines. Times are very pressing on all sides these days but I feel I must give something to the Lord's cause while I have a little to give. I knew my time was out for The Restiuttion in March, but I intended to move back to my old home at Moorefield, Neb., this spring and thought when I renewed my subscription I would have my paper sent there at the same time; but I will stay at Sunnyside for a while yet. My husband died last September, and as there is none of our faith here, I do not care to stay here any longer. I wish more of the brethren and sister would write letters for The Restitution and give their address. Some of us might be close to each other and not know it. We all need encouraging these perilous times. I miss the company and help of my dear husband so much. I need him so much now to help me raise my family. I have four children. They are all strong believers in the kingdom and second coming of Christ and the resurrection but baby, and he is most too little to know much about the truth. I am teaching him we will see papa again when Jesus comes and brings him out of the grave. He believes it too with all his little heart. Pray for me and my family that we may live pure clean lives and be acepted when Jesus comes. Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly, is my prayer. From your sister in the blessed hope.

Lucy Lapp.

Brother Huggins:

Does not this prophecy of Habakkuk represent the German ruler to perfection:

"Behold, ye among the heathen, and regard, and wonder marvellously: for I will work a work in your days, which ye will not believe, though it be told you. For. lo, I raise up the Chaldeans, that bitter and hasty nation, which shall march through the breadth of the land, to possess the dwelling places that are not theirs. They are terrible and dreadful. They shall fly as the eagle (flying machines). They shall come all for violence . . . . And they shall scoff at the kings, and the princes shall be a scorn unto them. They shall deride every stronghold . . . . Then shall his mind change, and he shall pass over and offend, imputing this his power unto his gods" (Hab. 1:5-10,17; 2:5, 8).

It seems to me this is being fulfilled at the present time. Give my love to all. Yours still waiting,

E. W. Knapp.

THE WORLD AND ITS DOOM

"And ye will not come to me, that ye might have life" (John 5:40).

These words addressed to the Jews by our Lord are just as true when applied to the world. How tragic has been the history of these people because of the rejection of the Lord and his teachings. Without a country, their wanderings and persecutions down through the centuries have been a matter of prophecy and history. Equally tragic is it when we consider the text with reference to the world. Neither would come to him that they might have life.

How evident it is that the world loveth its own and for its own there is no lack. Millions of dollars given and billions more appropriated by the world to kill and destroy and feed and clothe the godless nations, while for God's cause and the gospel there is so little. Countless numbers pledging their loyalty to the flag and their country, while but a little flock pledge theirs to God and the future King of the world. "Our citizenship is in heaven from whence we look for the Savior."

It has so often seemed to the child of God a rather perplexing thought why so many sincere, honest, and good so-called Christian people turn a deaf ear to the truth. Why is it? They will not come to him that they might have life. They are going to have it without him. We must first desire to have a thing, before it can become an object to strive for. There must be first the willing mind, so that the potter can have material upon which to work. These apparently sincere, good, honest folk have not the willing mind nor the desire, and their excellent virtues will not serve them in the day of the Lord.

We have some today who claim to be believers of the gospel, who say that these good, pious people will be numbered with the saints. What a travesty on the word of God, which distinctly tells us that only a belief in the one gospel, which Paul speaks of in Galatians, will save. Twice he emphasizes the importance of the belief in the one gospel saying, "Though an angel from heaven preach any other gospel than that which we have preached unto you, let him be accursed." It is this gospel of which he speaks that "is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth," not another.

The world is rapidly going to its doom, but we are advancing toward eternal life, our redemption draweth nigh. Let us not be sorrowful for the world, brethren, for the world does not want our pity, but rather let us be glad and rejoice. They will not come to him that they might have life. They are very much preoccupied with matters of more moment. "Why do the heathen rage and the people imagine a vain thing?" Two distinct events will come to pass and are inevitable, life for the saints, destruction for the world. The armies of God are being prepared, and with their weapons they will smite the nations. As fiercer grows the tempest, so much calmer and jubilant should the saints of God become, for it brings that for which they have earnestly prayed and desired to see, the advent of our Life-Giver and Redeemer.

Let us not be found with any worldly strings clinging to our garments. They are evidences of our intimate connection with this present order of things. There is only one master and one way, and we must choose now. "Today if we will hear his voice, harden not your hearts."

M. McIlrath.

"FORGET NOT THE ASSEMBLING OF OURSELVES TOGETHER"

Heb. 10:25: "Not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another: and so much the more as ye see the day approaching."

It would appear that even in Paul's day there were some that neglected their duty in this line, or rather their privilege. So he warns them against this fault. Some say: "If I go to church once a day surely that is enough; I want to go out joy-riding, or boating, or to the theatre, or movies at night; every person does that. Surely I have a right to some pleasures like other people." But we see that Paul warned us against all such things. He spent his life after his conversion in proclaiming the gospel, and at the end he said, "I have fought the good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous judge shall give to me, and not to me only, but to all those that love his appearing." Do we love his appearing and kingdom? If we do, we will act accordingly, and will not want to go with the crowd, in the broad way that leadeth to destruction. See what David said, Psa. 84:10: "For a day in thy courts is better than a thousand. I had rather be a door-keeper in the house of God, than to dwell in the tents of wickedness." David, the man after God's own heart, thought the house of the Lord and his laws were more to be desired than all earthly things. He looked beyond all vain earthly things, to the glory that shall be revealed in the age to come. Psalm 19:9, 10: "The fear of the Lord is clean, enduring forever: the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether. More to be desired are they than gold, yea, than much fine gold; sweeter than honey and the honey-comb." David enumerates those things which were very desirable in his day—gold and luxuries of this life are the main ambition of most people at the present time. They gladly give their all for those things. Gold is the god of this world. Solomon who had all this world could give, said all is vanity and vexation of spirit. The Lord gave David great riches, and made him ruler over his own kingdom; but David said that he would rather be a door-keeper in God's house than to dwell in the tents of wickedness. David, like Paul, looked forward to the future, the blessings of the age to come. Eternal life is the "gift of God through Jesus Christ our Lord." This gift is eternal, everlasting, a boon to be desired more than all created things that perish with the using. Jesus suffered and died on the cross to obtain this life. He rose from the dead triumphant. If we are his when he comes again, we shall hear the call, and shall go to meet him in the air. "We shall be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye." So shall we be ever with the Lord and die no more.

Now is this consummation not worth striving for? If you do not think so, then go where the pleasure you desire can be had—to the movie, the giddy throng, and the dance; any place away from God's house. If you want those things more than you do eternal life and to serve the Lord, and associate with his people, he does not want you. And more than that, he will not take you when he comes. But those who are anxiously looking for him, and striving to do his will, will hear the call; and go to meet him, have a home in his glorious kingdom, and praise him for ever and ever.

J. E. Hogarth.

It is as much our duty to express the word of encouragement and sympathy as it is to check the word of anger and resentment.

PRAY!

By S. Roxana Wince

Pray! pray! Why is it that this word of all others so insistently repeats itself in my mind as I think of the work that has been placed in my weak and unworthy hands?

Because there is need of prayer, need of keeping in close and constant touch with God, need of seeking his guidance, need to have him touch our lips that we may say just the word that he will approve. Without him we are nothing; unless he leads there will be utter failure. We have no strength in and of ourselves, but looking to him, leaning upon him we grow brave and strong and full of confidence and abounding faith. There is such a thing as taking hold of the power of God, and thereby using and moving men. Taking hold of the power of God—how much it means! For is he not able to do exceeding abundantly above all that we ask or think, according to the power that worketh in us?

Pray! pray! for "in Christ Jesus our Lord we have boldness and access with confidence by the faith of him," and are strengthened with might by his spirit in the inner man just as Paul prayed his Ephesian brethren might be. "Ask and ye shall receive." "Make your requests made known to God."

We want the printing press, dear Father. We need it for thy work. We need other things for thy work. Please give them all, that we may be better able to send out the gospel of thy grace to a perishing world.

We know it is thy power unto salvation to every one that believeth, and we want to use that power. We grieve over the sins of our people. We grieve to see them sinking into death "without God and without hope in the world."

Thou hast graciously given it to us to be humble partners with thee in bringing about a changed state of affairs. Help us to work with our might while the day lasts. Help us to give and trust, remembering always what great things thou hast done for us, and what still greater things thou hast promised to do in the future. Amen and amen.

OBITUARY

Bessie Brown, born July 2nd, 1889, at St. Paul Neb., died at Elba, Neb., April 19th, 1918, aged twenty-eight years, nine months, and seventeen days. She was married to Mr. Victor Vose, September 9th, 1915. Sister Vose united with the church of God when about 15 years old, and her record as a Christian stands with the best. Her death was a great shock to all the household of faith, for she was beloved by all. She was so quiet and yet so earnest. Her devotion was so marked as to be noticed by even the world. The writer talked to a large congregation who had gathered at the United Brethren Church to pay their respects. They listened with rapt attention while we told how Jesus answered Job's question when he said, "If a man die shall he live again?" When Jesus came forth in triumph over death he answered the question and demonstrated that if a man die, and is worthy, he will live again.

To show the esteem in which Sister Vose was held, a large number of the young people of the town volunteered to sing the songs she loved in life. The floral offerings were another mark of esteem. She leaves to mourn her loss, her mother Sister Lucy Brown, and one Brother, P. E. Brawn, principal of the Dunnebrog school, her husband and a little baby boy that will never know of his great loss. The loss to all can never be repaired in this age. The parting will be brief. Oh hail the gladsome day when we meet again! Brother M. D. Newell assisted in the ceremonies. May God's blessing rest bountifully upon the surviving ones.

HEART BALM

Tell me about the Master!
  I am weary and worn tonight,
The day lies behind me in shadow
  And only the evening is light!
Light with a radiant glory,
  That lingers about the west,
My poor heart is aweary, aweary,
  And longs, like a child, for rest.

Tell me about the Master!
  Of the hills he in lonliness trod,
When the tears and the blood of his anguish
  Dropped down on Judea's sod.
For to me life's seventy mile-stones
  But a sorrowful journey mark;
Rough lies the hill-country before me,
  The mountains behind me are dark.

Tell me about the Master!
  Of the wrongs he freely forgave;
Of his love and tender compassion,
  Of his love that was mighty to save;
For my heart is aweary, aweary,
  Of the woes and temptations of life,
Of the error that stalks in the noonday
  Of falsehood and malice and strife.

Yet I know that whatever of sorrow
  Or pain or temptation befall,
The infinite Master has suffered,
  And knoweth and pitieth all,
So tell me the sweet, old story,
  That falls on each wounded like balm
And my heart that was bruised and broken,
  Shall grow patient and strong and calm.—Sel.

Justification

We ordinarily speak of justification by faith, but more accurately speaking it is justification by Christ through faith. Christ is the cause, and faith simply is the channel through which Christ's grace and power enter into our lives. The absorbing thought is, How can I be just with God? and by experience we learn what the prophet through revelation stated, "The just shall live by faith."

The doctrine of justification by Christ through faith is a matter of Christian experience. Paul, in himself, found no good thing. Justification is a declaration on the part of God that the repentant sinner is justified for Christ's sake; but it is more than that. It is not simply the entry of the credits of Christ on the debit side of the sinner's ledger, but it is a real and personal transaction between God and man, in which man is both forgiven and changed. There can be no forgiveness of sin where there is no repentance on the part of the man; that repentance is the act of faith and looks upon sin as God looks upon it, and is resolved heneforth to forsake sin. The faith that works repentance is a gift of God through our Lord Jesus Christ. Man becomes the temple of God and is filled with newness of life.

Our Weekly Puzzle

"Ye call me Master and Lord: and ye say well; for so I am:

Who is Master and Lord? To whom were these words addressed? What had the Master done just previous to saying the above? Where can the passage be found,

Answer next issue.

Answer to puzzle in last issue:

The passage was written by the apostle Paul. The person he desired to see was Timothy, whom he called "his son," because it was through Paul that Timothy was brought to a saving knowledge the love of God and the sacrificial death of Jesus our Lord. The names Lois and Eunice cannot be found in any other part of the Bible. The passage is in Second Timothy 1:4, 5.

To wait for his Son from heaven	1 Thess. 1:10
Unto you who believe he is precious.	1 Pet. 2:7
An inheritance reserved in heaven for you.	1 Pet. 1:4
The Lord is not slack concerning his promise.	2 Pet. 3:9
I will make darkness light before them.	Isa. 42:16
I, even I, am he that comforteth you.	Isa. 51:12
By the springs of water shall he guide them	Isa. 49:10

Reflection on Luck

Luck dreams of a dollar while work earns it.
Hard luck is almost a synonym for laziness.
Good luck is the twin brother of hard work.
Luck walks, while work rides in a carriage.
Luck dreams of a home, but work builds one.

To trust to luck is like fishing with a hookless line.

Luck is a disease for which hard work is the only remedy.

Luck longs for dinner, while labor goes out and earns one.

Luck goes barefooted, while work never lacks a pair of shoes.—Sunshine Bulletin.

Humane Mottoes

A very interesting contest was held in one of the public schools in Muskegon, Mich., in which the pupils were asked to write humane mottoes. A few of the mottoes follow:

"A kind voice is better than a whip."
"Being kind is like a good business."
"Deal fairly with dumb creatures."
"Kind masters make loving animals."
"Kindness wins where lashing whip fails."
"Cruelty wins nothing."
"Kindness wins the way."
"Be fair to those who cannot show resistance."

A Man Analyzed

What is a man? How much is he worth from a scientific viewpoint? The Popular Science Monthly asks this question and then proceeds to answer it.

According to one way of looking at it, a man is worth about $2.50 a day from his shoulders down and anywhere from $50,000 to $1,000,000 a year from his shoulders up. This may be said to be the estimate of the average successful business man.

The scientist, however, looks at the question from another angle. According to him, a man is worth $2.25 for illuminating purposes, since weighing 150 pounds contains 2,500 cubic feet of oxygen, hydrogen and nitrogen in his constitution, which at 90 cents a thousand cubic feet equals the price above. Also a man contains enough carbon to make 9,360 lead pencils; enough phosphorus to make 800,000 matches, or enough to kill 500 persons, and enough water to fill a ten-gallon keg.

Furthermore, it makes no difference how sour a man may lock, he contains about 60 lumps of sugar, also a great deal of starch, chloride of potash, magnesium, sulphur and hydrochloric acid in his system. There are 50 grains of iron in the blood of an ordinary man, enough to make one spike large enough to hold its own weight.

What is a man? This is the somewhat cynical answer of one scientific man: Break the shell of 1000 eggs into a huge pan or basin and you have ingredients from which to form him from his toe nails to the most delicate tissues of his brain.—Sel. by Sister M. Louise Atwell.

Pass It On

Have you had a kindness shown?
'Twas not given for you alone,
Let it travel down the years,
Let it wipe another's tears,
Till in heaven the deed appears.
Pass it on.

Did you hear the loving word,
Like the singing of a bird?
Let its music live and grow,
Let it cheer another's woe;
You have reaped what other sow.
Pass it on.

Have you found the heavenly light?
Souls are groping in the night
Hold your lighted lamps on high,
Be a star in someone's sky;
He may live who else would die.
Pass it on.

Pass it on, pass it on,
Cheerful words or loving deed,
Live for self, you live in vain,
Live for Christ, you live again,
Live for him, you live to reign.
Pass it on.—W. Walker.

Some Things Christianity is Not, And One Thing It Is

As to the nature and essence of Christianity, the religion of salvaiton, we find that it is the divine life of God under the mediation of the Son of God, Christ Jesus, and imparted through faith to the believer, for where there is forgiveness of sins there is redemption, and where there is redemption there is salvation with life for ever more.

Christianity is not a system of morals which sets forth the ideals of even good men, but it is the life of God in the believer leading him up to the ideals of God. Christianity has led men out of the moral customs and institutions of men to the divine ideals which grow out of the divine life. What fallen human nature cannot do, with all its ideals and inspiration, the divine life pulsating in the heart of the believer, achieves.

Christianity is not a set of rules and regulations by which we are to merit God's favor or perfect ourselves in holiness. It is not a round of ceremonies or routine of worship with or without beads. Is it not a system of self denial, abnegations and tortures of the body for our ultimate good. It is not to be found in these outward things.

Trust in Jehovah

"I trust in the mercy of God for ever and ever" (Psa. 52:8).

Writing in "The Christian" on these words, the Rev. J. Stuart Holden, D. D., says: "The Psalmist deduces his doctrine of God from his experience of his ways. He has had indubitable evidence that evil cannot be finally victorious, since God's nature is what it is. And this is his ultimate security. Things may seem for a time to be all wrong. Men who deny God and defy his law may appear to gather strength and prosper. Right may actually be upon the scaffold, and wrong upon the throne. But he refuses to accept the present appearance of affairs as expressing God's last word. To give way to fear now, when new foes threaten him, would be to deny his most persistent memories. And he determines, come what may, to be true to what the past has taught him of his mercy.

Here is firm ground for all who are similarly threatened. There are times in the life of us all when the evidence of circumstances appears to point to the conculsion that God is unmindful of our concerns. Everything seems to be adverse to our interests. We are pressed beyond measure, and as far as temporal things go seem to be in a cul-de-sac. We may not be able to see a yard ahead; but a steady look backward will help us much. For there we descern how faithfully God has fulfilled his covenant despite our faithlessness. And the backward look both forbids despair, and inspires new resolve to trust and not be afraid. "His love in time past" is an irrefutable argument for present confidence.

No Such Word

Too many children say "I can't," and they say it too often and about too many things. The most foolish part of it all is that when you make such an assertion you do not know as yet whether you really can or cannot, do the thing in question. If you tried hard, or tried at all, you would find in a great number of cases that what seems impossible for you to perform is easily performed. Haven't you often heard a little boy or girl say "I can't jump over that rope"? But when simply goaded into trying it they could hop over easily. So it is in many things. You will find that there is no use saying "I can't" until you have tried so often that it would be folly to continue--and even then one more effort sometimes brings success.

The great men you read about in your history books took for their motto "I can-!" This gave them the determination and confidence to win. Those two little words swept away laziness, faintheartedness and hesitation. The man who says "I can," and who then goes ahead with a will to make good his words is surely on the high road to success.

Chips

A legitimate prayer: Protect us, O Lord, from the "I am holier than thou" party; also from the "I know it all" confirmation.

The word "Christian" has become the synonym of goodness, truth, and love, wnerever found.

To find God—that is the supreme issue of life. The question of method is important, but, broadly speaking, it is a secondary consideration.

Why seek other means to such an end when Jesus, by precept and example, and also by a communicating life, has made the way so clear?

Some one has said that religion is patriotism toward God. Unknown friend, accept our homage for such an utterance.

DON'T FORGET THE HELPING FUND

We whose names are given below, believing it to be our duty to provide a fund to be used in sending The Restitution to those too poor to pay for it themselves, do cheerfully give the amount set opposite our names for the purpose of aiding the manager of the paper to supply the needy ones. This fund is to be applied as the donors request. Those whose circumstances do not permit of the paying for the paper themselves should notify the manager, signifying their willingness to accept the paper, and it will be cheerfully sent from the proceeds of this fund.

NEW EDITION OF SONG BOOK ABOUT READY

Second Edition of "Manual of Praise"

Dear Restitution:

Once more I ask a little space to explain the new edition of our song book. We sold out the first edition of "Manual of Praise" in a few months and so many enquiries kept coming in about books we decided to print another edition. We have this work now on the way. When we published the first book there was quite a demand both east and west for a book without the hymns, as they now are in the first part of the book. Some who do not use the hymns asked us to print part of the book with those omitted just for evangelistic purposes. This we could not do unless we made page one read ninety-one and so on. So now to meet the growing demand for such a book we begin at page 91 and have the numbers changed to read number one and add in the book about twenty new songs of the very best. A few errors crept into the first book: these we are taking out, and with our past experience we hope to have a book this time free from errors except possibly what we might call "technical errors." What we mean by that is some people get so straight they lean over a little.

For instance, in our former book there was a song that read, "I Care not for Riches, Neither Silver nor Gold."

One old brother would not sing that. He said he did care for riches. He thought he might do good with them. That we call a matter of taste, and we cannot hope to please all tastes. But brethren, we are going to have in the main songs that will suit the tastes of nearly all, free from words out of harmony with out faith. The book is to be better sewn that the first, and bound in cloth, as the other. We thought we would be compelled to charge eighty-five cents, possibly more, for this book; but we have succeeded in getting terms that we think will enable us to sell it post paid for sixty-five cents. We had thought of printing five hundred copies to meet the demand we were unable to meet before, but so many orders are now in we will have to increase that number. So brethren, send your orders in at once that we may know about how many to print. We want to have the book ready for the fall meetings. Send your orders to me at 3944 Hartman Ave., Omaha, Neb., and do not delay.

Almus Adams.

WHAT GOD HAS TAUGHT ME

God forbid I should teach anything but Jesus Christ and him crucified, by which the world is crucified to me and I to the world. He taught me how not to fear and worry; God forbid I should do the same. He taught me not to work for gain; God forbid I should do the same. He taught me how to love my brethren; God forbid I should neglect the same. He taught me how to control my feelings, put away my hate and malice against the world (oppression and injustice); God forbid I should not do the same. He taught me not to judge my brother, for he is able to make him stand. He taught me not, the faults and failings of my brother; he taught me how to find all these evils within myself. He taught me how to control my body, not to satisfy the evil cravings of the flesh, else how can I rule others, if I fail to rule myself. Yes, my friends, the day be dark and dreary, or the day be bright and gay, though in pain, and sorrow, or happiness so bright, my Savior ever liveth and is just the same my might, though I turn away in anguish, still, I see that face of love and pity, and the power of him who conquered self is sure to draw me back.

A PAPER REPRESENTING THE CHURCH OF GOD, AND DEVOTED TO THE EXPOSITION AND DEFENSE OF "THE THINGS CONCERNING THE KINGDOM OF GOD AND THE NAME OF JESUS CHRIST" (ACTS 8:12)

VOLUME 70 CLEVELAND, O. MAY 28TH 1918 NUMBER 20

IF WE KNEW

Could we but draw the curtains
  That surround each other's lives,
See the naked heart and spirit,
  Know what spur the action gives,
Often we should find it better,
  Purer than we judge we should:
We should love each other better
  If we only understood.

Could we judge all deeds by motives,
  See the good and bad within,
Often we should love the sinner,
  All the while we loathe the sin;
Could we know the powers working
  To o'erthrow Integrity,
We should judge each others' errors
  With more patient charity.

If we knew the cares and trials,
  Knew the efforts all in vain,
And the bitter disappointment,
  Understood the loss and gain—
Would the grim, external roughness
  Seem, I wonder, just the same?
Should we help where now we hinder?
  Should we pity where we blame?

Oh, we judge each other harshly,
  And we blame with cruel force,
Knowing that the fount of action
  Is less turbid at its source;
Seeing not amid the evil
  All the golden grains of good—
Oh, we'd love each other better
  If we only understood.—Selected.

THE NATURE OF MAN

I. The Soul

"Soul" as used in the Bible means primarily a creature or person, and is employed to express the variety of aspects in which that creature can be contemplated, such as person, life, mind, disposition, etc.; but in no instance does it express the idea of immortality (Gen. 1:20, 24,30; Job 12:10; Num. 31:28; Isa. 29:8; Prov. 6:30; Jos. 11:11; Jer. 2:34; Job 7:15; Psa. 105:18, margin; Judges 16:30; Acts 3:23; Isa. 38:17; 53:11,12; Matt. 10:28; Rev. 16:3).

II. The Spirit

"Spirit" as employed in the Bible signifies breath, life, energy, mind, disposition, etc.; but it is never used to express the idea of an immortal principle in man Gen. 6:17; 7:15; Eccl. 3:18-21; Psa. 104:29,30; Jas. 2:26; Jos. 5:1; Gen. 3:8, margin; 8:1).

III. The Ghost

"Ghost" does not refer to an immortal entity in man, but to the expiration of his life (Gen. 6:17; 7:21,22; 25:8; Mark 15:37,39; Luke 23:46).

IV. Man Is a Creature of the Dust and Mortal Because of Sin

(a) Man is expressly declared to be mortal;
(b) Man is affirmed to be unconscious in death;
(c) Immortality is a conditional gift offered to man through Christ;
(d) Man obtains immortality at the resurrection; and
(e) After he obtains immortality he enjoys it on the earth.

(a) Job 4:17; Rom. 5:12; Gen. 3:19,22,23; 1 Cor. 15:22; Psa. 49; 89:48; Gen. 7:22; Isa. 2:22.

(b) Psa. 6:5; Eccl. 9:5,6,10; Psa. 146:3,4; Isa. 38:18, 19; Job 3:11-17; 14:10-12; 10:18,19; Psa. 39:12; Acts 2:29-34; 13:36; Gen. 15:15.

(e) Prov. 10:30; 11:31; Matt. 5:5; Psa. 37; Rom. 4:13; Heb. 11; Rev. 5:10; Dan. 7:27.

V. The Irresponsible of Mankind Are Not Raised From the Dead

Those of mankind who are ignorant of the gospel are not eligible to either reward for obedience or punishment for disobedience post-resurrectionally. They are irresponsible, and they pass away in death as though they had never existed.

(a) They are irresponsible, mortal, and comparatively worthless.
(b) Their existence terminates forever in death.

(a) Psa. 39:5; 103:14-17; 144:3,4; Isa. 40:6,7,8,15,17; Dan. 4:35.

(b) Isa. 26:13,14; Jer. 51:39,57; Prov. 21:16; Eph. 4:17,18; 2 Cor. 4:3; Psa. 49; Isa. 43:17; Psa. 17:14; 73:22; 88:4,5; Amos 8:11-14; Oba. 16; Job 3:11-19; 10:18,19; Eccl. 6:1-6.

SYNTHETIC REMARKS ON THE LESSON

I. The Soul. There are three Hebrew words translated "soul": nedibath, neshamah, and nephesh. Nedibath in Job 30:15 and neshamah in Isa. 57:16 are both rendered "soul"; but with these two exceptions in every other instance in the Hebrew nephesh is the word that is translated soul. It occurs seven hundred and twenty times in the Old Testament, being translated "soul" four hundred and sixty-six times. One hundred and nine times it is translated "life," and in all other occurrences it is translated "ghost," "breath," "desire," "lust," "appetite," "heart," "self," "person," and about twenty-seven other ways. The idea of immortality, however, is never associated with the word. Instead of teaching the current fiction of "the immortality of the soul" the Bible teaches its mortality by affirming that

(a) The Soul Can Die. "The soul that sinneth it shall die" (Ezek. 18:4,20). Samson prayed, "Let me (nephesh, my soul, margin) die with the Philistines" (Judges 16:30). Balaam also prayed, "Let me (nephesh, my soul) die the death of the righteous" (Num. 23:10). Death in these passages cannot be explained away as "spiritual death" or as a punitive "death that never dies." Neither death is a thing to be prayed for. Neither can be meant in the death of Samson's soul, for he is put among those who "obtained a good report through faith" in Heb. 11:32,39. Nor can "spiritual death" or a "death that never dies" be intended by the death of Balaam's soul, for it was "the death of the righteous" he was desiring and praying for. The man who "feared God and eschewed evil" (Job 1:1) says: "My soul chooseth strangling and death rather than life" (Job 7:15). He could not have "eschewed evil" if by the death of his soul he meant a deliberate choice of infinite evil and despair, dying a death which never dies! Rather he meant literal death, followed by quiet, undisturbed sleep until the resurrection. And as further showing that the soul is mortal the Bible says that

(b) Animals Have Souls Equally With Men. In Gen. 2:7 nephesh chayyah is translated "living soul"; in Num. 6:6 nephesh meth is rendered "dead body," literally a "dead soul." Before man was created God said, "Let the earth bring forth the nephesh chayyah after his kind, cattle and creeping things, and beast of the earth after his kind: and it was so." After Adam was made a "living soul" the Lord caused the animals to pass before him to see what he would call them: "and whatsoever Adam called every nephesh chayyah, that was the name thereof" (Gen. 1:24; 2:19). In these two texts our version says "living creature"; but in the Hebrew the words are nephesh chayyah, the identical words that are translated "living soul" in Gen. 2:7 and applied to man. Nephesh is once translated "breath" and attributed to a sea monster, "His breath (nephesh) kindleth coals" (Job 41:21). In Job 12:10 we read of "the soul of every living thing," which proves that every living thing has a soul. "A righteous man regardeth the life (nephesh, soul) of his beast" (Prov. 12:10). This text shows that a beast, as well as its owner, has a soul. Since nephesh, "soul," and nephesh chayyah, "living soul," are both applied to beast as well as to man, to maintain the immortality of the soul he who advocates it is logically committed to a belief in the immortality of animals. The Greek word translated "natural" in 1 Cor. 15:44 is made up of psyche, soul, and ikon, our adjective suffix, "-ical": psych-ikon, psych-ical, soulical. In English a noun which is used as a prefix becomes an adjective; psychi-kon soma is therefore a "soul-body." Men of education are beginning to see that the immortality of the soul is a dangerous and unscholarly doctrine, so they are evacuating the fort of soul and are entrenching themselves behind the fortress of

II. The Spirit. But their stand here is no more secure than in the case of the soul. There are three Hebrew words translated "spirit" in the Old Testament: ob, neshamah, and ruach, and two Greek words, namely, phantasma, and pneuma. Ob occurs sixteen times in the Hebrew Scriptures, and is the only word rendered "familiar spirit" and, in the singular or plural, is so rendered fifteen times. Neshamah occurs twenty-four times, and is translated "breath," "blast," "spirit" once (Isa. 57:16), "inspiration," etc. Ruach occurs three hundred and eighty-five times. Phantasma occurs twice (Matt. 14:26; Mark 6:49), while pneuma is found four hundred and four times, being the only word that is translated "spirit" in the New Testament except phantasma.
